The questions of Government ownership and Government operation for two or five years longer are not involved, inasmuch as the proclamation has already been made for the return to private ownership, and in the opinion of the able chairman of the committee is now in effect and irrevocable. The membership of the House who oppose the bill freely grant that neither the question of Government ownership nor further Government operation is here in issue; in fact, most of the opponents of the measure express themselves as opposed to further governmental operation or Government ownership outright. Anyhow, the great majority are of the opinion that the Government can not longer endure the financial burden of Government operation, since the losses since January 1 have been at the rate of $100,000,000 per month.

The books show that in operating expenses alone the Government has lost $854,423,434. The books also show that the Government has loaned and advanced to the roads, for which they are indebted to the Government, the sum of $938,316,551, and there are other liabilities amounting to $93,283,900. But the roads can not pay this at the present time, and it must be funded. Members of the committee have ascertained that by adding the advancements and loans made by the Government to the actual losses in operation there is realized a total of $1,792,739,985, which the Government now has invested in the roads.

This bill will add $200,000,000 more to that as an appropriation to help the roads resume operation under private ownership, thus making a grand total of $2,086,322,885. But the committee reports that there will yet remain a deficit that the Congress will be called upon to appropriate for, whereby to satisfy the liabilities of the Government for its operation, of $436,322,885. And besides this it has been necessary for this bill to provide for an appropriation of $300,000,000 more to be loaned to the roads within the next two years to keep them going in a normal way. Some members of the committee who have given the matter very faithful and careful investigation are fearful that yet more financial help will have to be granted by the Government than I have already mentioned. Certainly the losses of the Government, which is the loss of the taxpayers, during Government operation already had, is to be greatly deplored, and it is evident this would prove ruinous, continued at the rate of a loss of $100,000,000 per month.

But it must be granted that the efficient operation of the railroads to the full extent of their capacities is indispensable to the welfare of every industry and every individual interest of the Nation. Inefficient operation and inadequate accommodations of passenger and freight service are demoralizing and injurious to business interests to the extent to which these evils may exist.

The report has gone abroad that the bill contains a guaranty of a profit or dividend of 5½ per cent to the railways, but the able chairmen of the House and Senate committees have both explained that this clause does not guarantee any certain profit or dividend to the roads, and in substance that it constitutes a limit upon the earning power the amount which shall be made and retained by the railroads; that not more than 6 per cent profit or dividend can be realized without yielding one-half of the excess thereof to the Government, to be devoted as a revolving fund to the improvement of railways in general.

But viewed in a general way, the prosperity of the railroads is necessary to their continued and efficient operation. Adequate accommodations can not and will not be afforded unless a reasonable income shall be realized, and thus there are involved the interests of every shipper and every passenger, and the interests of everyone in any way concerned, directly or indirectly. It is very plain, too, that the roads must produce reasonable financial returns, or adequate wages and salaries can not be paid the employees. It logically follows that every industry and all of the people have a community of interest in the efficient and successful operation of the railways, and this means that they must be reasonably prosperous that the end may be realized; hence the necessity and justification for granting the financial aid provided by the bill.

What warrant have we for the belief that private operation will prove more successful than that by the Government, now to be terminated March 1? It is that for more than a decade previous to the commencement of the war the efficiency and prosperity of railroads had been making gains, and that the three years immediately preceding the war recorded the best service, accommodations, and greatest prosperity of our railway history. And why can not this be repeated with the war over and readjustment completed, when the latter shall be fully realized? On the other hand, figures show there never has been a period when greater volumes of freight and greater numbers of passengers were carried, with higher charges imposed for each, than what has occurred during governmental operation, while at the same time the greatest complaints of inadequate freight and passenger car accommodations and inefficiency in the service have occurred of any time in our history.

Certainly, due allowance should be made for the circumstances of war, with the attendant obstacles and disadvantages, yet this, with higher priced employees, constituted one of the reasons for the increased rates required to be paid by patrons. Thus the comparisons of the only Governmental operations with that of private ownership management are favorable to the operation of the roads by their owners, and it is believed that this justifies giving a preference to providing the legislation contained in the pending bill, to accompany the private ownership operation, to ensue by virtue of the proclamation made by the President for the return of the roads to take effect independently of any legislation by the Congress. Why need the roads be financed by the Government, when, previous to the war, such had not been the case; especially why, when private ownership operation during the three years immediately preceding the war was so successful and satisfactory? This is the effect of governmental operation. By this is meant the private ownership operation of the individual railways or individual systems has been obliterated and supplanted by all the railways being merged together as one great system under Government control during the war. These separate individual systems must now be reorganized and reestablished and time will be required to accomplish this. During governmental operation there has been no chance whatever afforded for competition between the individual roads or systems, with the result that the incentive to efficiency, increasing volumes of business, and consequent profit and dividends, with the distinction to be gained by chief officers for their business qualifications, has been destroyed. What has been everybody's business and responsibility in general has not been fixed upon particular individuals—in other words, the individual responsibility has been so widely distributed as to render identification impossible.

A governmental general freight manager of one of the largest systems, who, because of his efficiency, was continued by the Government in the official position the duties of which he had discharged so successfully for several years previous to the war, is reputed to have stated that one of the chief objections to governmental operation was the lack of competition, which had been destroyed by a combination of all the railways and systems into one. However, I do not maintain that competition carried to the extent of a survival of the fittest would be economic either for the railways or the patrons of the roads; but I do insist that latitude for incentive of individual initiative and a reasonable reward therefor to employees, operators, and stockholders should be continually kept alive, that a high degree of efficiency be attained and preserved.

The financial relief afforded by the pending bill may reasonably suggest the inquiry whether the Government is going to make it a policy to subsidize the railways. I for one am positively opposed to such a policy, and I am satisfied that such is the attitude of Members of Congress generally, if not entirely. I am convinced that with the consideration accorded the railways in the pending bill they will be expected to make good generally; but they and the merits of this legislation will be deemed to be on trial, and it is hoped they may succeed so far in the public estimation as to vindicate the relief afforded by the measure. If this end may be accomplished, all industrial and individual interests and economic conditions in general will have been very greatly advanced.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS GALLAGHER,

OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, March 3, 1920,

On the following resolution:

"Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate joint resolution 156, being a resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to bring back on Army transports from Danzig, Poland, residents of the United States of Polish origin who were engaged in the war on the side of the allied and associated powers."

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Speaker, I trust there will be no opposition or delay in passing this resolution from the Committee on Rules. It comes before us as a unanimous report from the committee, and the Senate has already passed, without opposition, joint resolution 156 for this purpose.

The Secretary of War desires authority to bring back these troops, and it will seem strange if there should be any delay or long debate in this matter, when it is said that United States Government transports are bringing back Czecho-Slovak troops to this country—and I am not opposed to it—without any authority of law. The reason we should hurry the passage of this resolution is because of the fact that the next American transport that is to leave for Danzig, the free port of Poland, is to sail the latter part of the week, and we want these soldiers brought back.

No troops in the allied army fought more bravely or rendered more patriotic service than did this Polish Volunteer Army raised in the United States. After the signing of the armistice they were sent from France to the eastern front of Poland to protect that border from Bolsheviki attack. Some ten or twelve thousand of them are now in concentration camps near Warsaw, Poland; they are without means and desire to return to America, and I believe it to be one of the first duties of this Government to see that they are returned here to their parents, relatives, and friends.

As I have stated, the Senate very promptly passed the resolution, and while there is some talk here of striking from the resolution the preamble, I can see no reason why it should not be adopted as passed by the Senate. Let me read the resolution and preamble:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 156) authorizing the Secretary of War to bring back on Army transports from Danzig, Poland, residents of the United States of Polish origin who were engaged in the war on the side of the allied and associated powers.

Whereas there are now in concentration camps at or near Warsaw, Poland, and have been since November, 1919, upward of 12,000 residents of the United States of Polish origin who were equipped and transported at the expense of Great Britain and France from the United States to Poland, and who were engaged in active service in behalf of the allied cause during the war; and

Whereas they are desirous of returning to their homes in this country and are without means to accomplish such repatriation: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That authority be, and hereby is, given to the Secretary of War to use such Army transports as may be available to bring back to the United States from Danzig, Poland, such residents of the United States of Polish origin as were engaged in the war on the side of the allied and associated powers.

I represent, I believe, one of the largest Polish settlements in the United States; the headquarters of the Polish National Alliance and the Polish Roman Catholic Union of America, great national organizations, are in my district. Many of these men of the Polish Army are from Chicago and my district, and a large percentage of them, although willing, were not eligible to join the American Army; they were not covered by the American draft regulations, and while a large proportion were aliens, former residents of German Poland, Austrian Poland, and Russian Poland, they were inspired by the same principles for which we fought and volunteered to serve with little or no pay. They were recruited under the auspices of the Polish National Committee, and fought for the freedom of their country, for liberty and justice.

Nearly 25,000 joined the Polish army in America and were transported to the French front by the French Government. A great many of them have been released and have returned, and it seems but an act of justice on the part of our Government to bring back the rest of these troops to America.

On February 14 I received a letter from the Polish daily, Kurjer Narodowy, 1225 North Ashland Avenue, Chicago, asking me "to join in the request of Secretary Baker for permission to transport to America 12,000 former residents of America who joined Gen. Haller's army," signed "Jos. Borkowski, Mgr."

Also a telegram asking me "to favor this resolution" from "the National Polish Committee, 2138 Pierce Avenue, Chicago."

And another telegram from the Polish Catholic Union of America, which reads as follows:

We will consider it a great favor, which will be greatly appreciated by the Poles, if you would assist in bringing about the passage of the resolution.

N. L. PIOTROWSKI, President.
I. WROBLEWSKI, Secretary.

I hope the resolution will pass unanimously.

Agricultural Production.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MILTON A. ROMJUE,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, March 4, 1920.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House of Representatives, I venture to invite your attention for a few minutes to a line of thought which it seems to me is worthy of consideration and most serious reflection—a line of thought which if followed properly must inevitably lead one to the conclusion that a very grave injury might come, but which ought not to come, to a very important branch of industry or vocation in our country. That is agriculture, or you may term it "the farmer's status and his future." There is no reason for any injustice or injury coming to the farmer or to any other class of industrious citizens of this country, and broadly stated, the way to avoid doing economic injustice to any class is to go carefully about the work of reconstruction.

It is proper that justice be adhered to in dealing with all questions affecting the interests and rights of the various citizens of our Government and of the various classes of industry and business in the country. I am unwilling, either by legislation or otherwise, to make the public suffer for the benefit of a few. I am unwilling to make one man poor that another may be rich, and I adhere to the doctrine that if one class of men is to become poorer and another richer, such change should come about as a result of the conduct, judgment, and industry, or the lack of judgment and industry, of the particular man or class of men or business, and not by legislation. I stand by that doctrine that gives the man whose face sweats, the fruits of his toil.

Every thoughtful citizen in our country knows that a great World War brings in its wake unsettled conditions and that speculation gets rampant, and more or less excitement prevails when the necessity for readjustment comes.

More or less radicalism may arise wherein it seeks to take away from some one that which a radical may desire, yet be unwilling to earn.

As it takes time for the atmospheric elements to calm and become once again normal after a storm, so it is, after a great upheaval in the world's business, political, and social conditions, that the minds and habits of thought of the world's races of men must have time to accustom themselves once again to a peace-time status and condition.

True it is that often legislation may be required to steady or adjust matters which by virtue of an abnormal situation have become overbalanced. And certain it is that legislation becomes pertinent and needy to check and punish profiteers and speculators in grain and foodstuffs, and in all commodities where the profiteer pokes his slimy hand to filch the rights and reward from those who have earned it by their own sweat and toil.

To do this, however, it must be borne in mind always that a proper remedy must be had and a proper instrument for applying that remedy must be available.

A wrong remedy with a wrong instrument of application, of course, will only result in a general injury. A wrong remedy even in the hands of a proper agency or instrument of application will likewise be futile and fall short of what is necessary.

Therefore, the remedy and the agency or instrument of its application must be right and correctly applied in order to be of service rather than of injury.

While you hold in your mind the necessity of a right remedy and its right application, may I take occasion to say that in studying the problems of a nation we must of necessity after all study the problems of the individual citizen himself. And the temperament and impulses of a nation after all are but the composite temperament and impulse of the individuals who constitute the nation.

No nation can have permanent life save and except it be founded upon and be accustomed to exercise justice and equity, which, after all, in common parlance is but a square deal.

And a square deal is but basic or fundamental principles of right as between all affected.

It is indeed high time for everyone to recognize and bring themselves within the sphere of information that one's desire or wish does not always make right. I fear there may be, unfortunately, those who too often demand that which they desire without first pausing to consider whether its procurement is compatible with the general public welfare and within the individual's rights. To insistently wish for any specific object or to demand its possession without regard to reason and right is a species of activity too common in our country to-day. Hence it is that there is to be found here and there in our country individuals who seem to think that it is their duty, without honest effort and industry, to take as they may the product of some other which has been brought forth by sweat of brow, labor, and industry of the producer.

I am glad that the overwhelming sentiment of this country is opposed to that method of thought and practice, and I am glad that there are those, like myself, who believe that the producer should not be robbed of the reasonable fruits of his labor and sweat.

If there ever was a time in the history of our Government when there was a demand for cool-headedness and hard, sober thinking, that time is now and will continue to be during the next few years of the reconstruction period. It is no time for excitement. It is no time for pomp and glamor. It is no time for visions and dreams. The burden of war taxation is upon the people, and our future expenditures must be guarded carefully, and such as are made must be made conservatively, wisely, and justly and not extravagantly.

High prices have been rather prevalent on many commodities, including manufactured articles as well as others. Articles such as leather, harness, and machinery have advanced materially, until the farmer finds himself meeting heavy expenditures in those things he has to buy.

Continuing rising prices in commodities and property have a tendency to induce speculation, and rapid speculation has a tendency to disquiet previously estimated values. Actual value becomes confusing to the minds of many, and men's judgment as to values are matched and pitted the one against the other with rapidity and excitement in driving bargains, until increased prices and estimated values become as a dog chasing his own tail, and wages beg to keep pace with advancing cost of living, and the speculator seeing wages go up undertakes to take the increased wage as an additional profit for the product in which he is speculating, but which has been produced by some one else.

The high cost of living is a relative problem, and many people make a mistake, and a legislative body will make a mistake, when attention is confined solely to grain and food products in an effort to solve the problem of the high cost of living. I say the matter is a relative problem, and to let the manufacturer go scot free and the price of machinery, plows, harrows, harness, and leather keep soaring and maintaining their advanced price and make an effort to drive down the price of live stock, corn, and wheat is unjust and an unfair undertaking.

A Republican Congress is now and has been in control of national legislation since May 19 last. It is in the power of that party to legislate as they desire. I insist now that they see to it that the farmer is not treated unfairly in the shuffle of reconstruction legislation. I appeal to the membership of this House to deal fairly with the farmer and thereby encourage and not stifle and diminish our agricultural production.

Great as was the World War, brilliant and successful as were America's achievements in that war, honorable and decisive as was our victory, matchless and astounding as was America's accomplishments in mobilizing all our material resources and the thoroughness with which we executed our plans and consummated our purpose in order that right and justice should prevail on this earth and that the sacred and fundamental principles of our Government should not perish, we must realize that the present and immediate future of our country demands as full measure of thought, study, and cooperative action on the part of America's citizenship as did the period of conflict out of which we have but so recently emerged.

Periods of excitement or a brass band parade must not enlist the noble impulses of American citizenship more intensely, more devotedly, and more resolutely than the fundamental structure of this Government and the great problems which lie immediately before us and around us for solution.

And he who has not seen or does not see the many important problems which lie before the American people for solution has not the real, true American perspective and vision so essential to our national good.

Most of my life has been spent upon a Missouri farm, and I am, indeed, glad that I was born and reared there; these facts have permitted me to be familiar with the ways of farm life and with the habits, opportunities, possibilities, the handicaps, and drawbacks that center about the farmer's life.

Understanding the farmer's relation, as I do, to the whole industrial machinery of our country, I only demand for him fair treatment and consideration.

There are those who want to put an embargo on and stop the shipment of meat and food products out of this country in order to reduce the price of those products. This would be a serious blow to the farming class of people, and I am opposed to it. We are not starving in this country, and we are not going to starve if we are only willing to work.

Such an embargo would be unfair to the farmer and work to his injury, and it must not be put in force.

I am in favor of suppressing the profiteer, so that the speculator can neither unfairly pay the farmer nor unjustly extort from the consumer.

The markets for the agricultural products must not only be left open, but extended and encouraged.

The manufacturer is seeking an extension of the market for his products, and that is right, and so also must the farmer be encouraged and given an equal opportunity.

To compel any group of citizens to sell their products in a regulated market and to buy their supplies and necessities in an unregulated market is an unjust and dangerous discrimination.

My experience with the farmer while on the farm and my observation in the capacity of legislator have proven to me that he belongs to a class that is last to take hold of and follow radical and revolutionary ideas. His very make-up and temperament are conservative. As a class in our country he has never been known to attack his Government.

The first and constant obligation of every citizen and of every class of citizens is undivided loyalty to our country. Its institutions must be protected and its traditions preserved and respected. No conflicting obligations can be tolerated.

This is the best country the sun shines on. Its opportunities are boundless and are open to every individual who cares to avail himself of them. Its Government is the best in the world. There is nothing fundamentally wrong with it. A people who would not appreciate and defend it would be unworthy to exist as a nation. A man who would injure or destroy it is unfit to live under the protection of its flag.

The farmer has done his full duty in his line of work during our recent war. He has performed his full service. He had as much to do with the winning of the war as any other class. I have not known of any farmer claiming that he alone won the war. He is not so selfish as to deny to all good Americans their full measure of assistance in their own line of work.

The farmer went willingly to his work and exerted every effort to increase production, and without him and the strenuous efforts he put forth it would have been impossible for our country to have been the important factor which it was in the war, and the criticism that occasionally has been directed toward the farmer is unjustified. The farmer has not been given to bragging upon himself. Deeds well done always speak for themselves, and he who performs a service to humanity or in the affairs of the world, and performs it well, is very often last to claim credit for it. The daylight-saving law, in my opinion, was never at any time necessary to spur the farmer on to increased activity; it was rather a hindrance.

I am glad to join those in Congress in a program which will make certain the protection of the farmer in all his rights, stabilizing the agricultural industry; and the prevention of the taking away from the farmer that which justly belongs to him means the surest guaranty to the successful operation of the whole scheme of American industries, for agriculture is the basic and foundation structure upon which all other industries rest and depend. It may be truly said that it is primarily the safety valve to the industries of our country, and the agriculturist himself is a mighty force and factor in balancing and making certain the right course of our Republic.

One great handicap to the farming industry is the difficulty in securing labor or help on the farm. The theory that farming must be reduced to a basis wherein each farmer does all his own work, dispensing with hired help as something beyond his means, is untenable. It implies working hours so long and tasks so arduous that no man other than one compelled by necessity to protect his investment at the expense of his health and sacrifice of well-earned hours of rest or recreation will perform them. Society has no right to exact or expect such service from any class of citizens.

The farmer must not be penalized by an unfair reduction of the legitimate profit on his products. He is not at fault. This talk we sometimes hear about farmers all getting rich is "sheer moonshine." There is no class of citizens who toil longer hours and more faithfully than the farmer, and none that more honestly earn the fruit of their toil.

Let us turn to the speculator and profiteer. Within his class is to be found the real fly in the ointment, the real party who forces, in part at least, the high living cost. Let the searchlight of the law be turned on him and pursue him and bring him to account. Then, and then only, will we see unfair extortion conquered.

Commercializing Short Grass.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
OF COLORADO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, February 25, 1920.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted I desire to insert in the RECORD a few telegrams and a letter upon the subject of the attempt of the Agriculture Committee of the House to increase the charge to the stockmen of the West for grazing their stock in the national forests.

When the Agricultural appropriation bill, H. R. 12272, was under consideration before the House on February 10, 1920, the chairman of that committee [Mr. HAUGEN] offered an amendment, as follows:

Provided further, That no part of any appropriation in this act for Forest Service shall be expended on any national forest in which the fees charged for grazing shall be at a rate less than 300 per cent of the existing rate.

When that amendment was, after extended discussion, ruled out on a point of order there were several other similar amendments offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] and by Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan and others, and finally an amendment was adopted over the vigorous protest of the western Members, as follows:

Provided, That $25,000 may be used by the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose of ascertaining the appraised value of pasturage upon the national forests, which appraised value, when determined, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, be made the basis of the charge for grazing permits upon such forests.

That amendment is the first deliberate and bold attempt of Congress to capitalize and commercialize the short and thin grass that grows during a very short season on the forest reserves in the Western States.

It is not only contrary to the definite understanding that the stockmen and people of the West generally have always had ever since the forest reserves were created, but it is contrary to (1) the universal frontier custom of our country for over a hundred years, and also (2) in direct violation of the proclamations, statements, and promises of three or four Presidents of the United States, the Department of Agriculture, the Forest Service, and many other Federal officials, including Congress itself, when the forest reserves were created and ever since, and (3) it is a brazen and outrageous attempt to repudiate all the existing five-year permit agreements that were entered into about a year ago between the stockmen and Forest Service officials.

If the committee did not intend to deliberately repudiate those express agreements, it would provide in this amendment for that appraisement to be made not before the years 1923 or 1924; because it is sheer nonsense to assume that any appraisement made during the next fiscal year would be of any practical value four years from now.

However, I discussed this subject briefly during the general debate on February 11 (pp. 2764, 2765, 2775, 2777, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD) and will not go into the matter at length further at this time, because I feel perfectly confident that this provision will be stricken out of the bill in the Senate. But I do feel that the House and the country should know the position of the stockmen themselves upon this subject, and some of their reasons for protesting against this action; and inasmuch as they have had no hearing upon the subject or any notice of this provision, the least we can in justice do for them at this time is to insert in the RECORD a few of their statements.

The telegrams to which I refer are only a few of a large number received but they are typical of all the rest. They conclusively show the injustice and hardship of any increase in grazing fees. The letter to me from the Colorado Stock Growers' Association is a brief but very accurate summary of the situation in the West at this time, which I urge the Members of the House and especially the Committee on Agriculture to carefully consider. The telegrams are as follows:

RIFLE, COLO., February 15, 1920.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We, the Grand River Stock Growers' Association, now in session at Rifle, Colo., do most earnestly protest against any raise in grazing fees on the national forests. Many cattlemen are at present producing their cattle at a loss, owing to the high price of feed, high labor, and taxes, and great range loss from poison and wild animals and other causes, besides natural losses. There are always many handicaps against the stockmen on the forest reserves, and conditions have been much worse in 1919 than they were in 1918, and these unfavorable conditions, together with the fact the export of meat is practically cut off, we feel certain that any further raise in range fees would naturally force many of us out of business.

F. D. SQUIRES, President.
G. S. BUTLER, Assistant Secretary.

RIFLE, COLO., February 14, 1920.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

We, the South Side Stock Growers' Association, of Silt, Colo., do hereby condemn the effort of the Agriculture Committee of the House to increase 300 per cent the grazing fees on stock grazing in the national forests: First, because it will necessarily increase the high cost of living by increasing the cost of production of meat animals; second, because it is in direct violation of the five-year permits issued a year or more ago by express agreement made between the stock growers who use the forest reserves and the Secretary of Agriculture and Forest Service officials; third, because the cost of production of meat animals has lately been enormously increased, owing to the scarcity and high price of labor, the very great increase in cost of hay, high taxes, severe losses, high freight rates, poor transportation facilities, and many other adverse conditions, whereby the net profits of raising stock on the forest reserves are now so small that we feel this proposed 300 per cent increase in grazing fees would make the cost of production of meat animals actually in excess of their market value; fourth, we further protest against and condemn as utterly unwarranted and unjust the apparent practice of both the Senate and House in not giving the West a proper representation upon the most important committees, especially the Agriculture Committee, that so vitally affects the stock interests and welfare of the West generally. Our stock-raising conditions on the forest reserves and our agricultural interests, owing to necessary irrigation, are so entirely different from the conditions in the East, North, and South that we can not possibly have proper recognition or protection without a fair representation upon that committee of western Members who have actual, personal knowledge of our conditions and who can intelligently present our situation in conjunction with the other members of the committee. Fifth, the stock associations using the forest reserves of the arid West most earnestly and respectfully urge the Agriculture Committee to grant to them a hearing before any increase is made in the grazing fees. or other change in present conditions, in order that that committee and Congress may learn our real and practical situation and conditions, and also that we may be advised as to who is making this demand and why this hardship is being urged upon us. We also hope it may be possible for the members of the committee to visit the forest reserves of the West and personally examine the grazing conditions themselves.

Respectfully,

SOUTH SIDE STOCK GROWERS' ASSOCIATION,
A. L. LARSON, President.
F. F. PARKS, Secretary.

GUNNISON, COLO., February 14, 1920.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

A PROTEST FROM THE GUNNISON COUNTY STOCK GROWERS' ASSOCIATION.

We understand the Agricultural appropriation bill carries a clause placing the grazing on the national forests on a commercial basis beginning in 1921. This violates the agreement of 1919, when our present five-year permits began, making a scrap of paper of our present contract with the United States Government. The present conditions of the country are so abnormal that it is unfair to the stockmen to attempt to raise the grazing fee before the expiration of the present permits in 1924. The Forest Service has always said and declared that the national forests were established for conservation and not to be placed upon a commercial basis. If it goes upon a commercial basis it means the elimination of the small stockmen and the homesteaders, who are trying to get a start. It means higher beef to the consumer, for the present loss from all causes in this country is 8 per cent per annum.

F. D. MCKREE,
Vice President of the Gunnison County Stock Growers' Association.
T. W. GRAY,
Chairman of the Advisory Board.

I am proud of the distinction of being the first honorary member of the association which sends me the following telegram:

RIFLE, COLO., February 14, 1920.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We, The Western Slope Live Stock and Protective Association, in session to-day, do most emphatically protest against the proposed raise in forest-reserve grazing fees. Cattle are $4 per hundred lower, labor much higher, and feed three times the normal price. We represent the largest industry in the State of Colorado. We have in our district and this association is a federation of 32 stock associations, representing 3,500 members. and we are now wintering about one-half million cattle. We therefore respectfully insist upon a hearing to show our side of our conditions. The Government officials have made a five-year contract with us. If our Government does not stand by its word, how can we put any trust in anyone? Our western Senators and Congressmen are being ignored in most important matters pertaining to our western interests. We further demand of the Senate and House that in its appointments on various committees there shall be a fair representation of Senators and Congressmen from the West, who are personally familiar with our conditions.

THE WESTERN SLOPE LIVE STOCK AND PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION,
BEN. M. WHITE, President,
R. C. CALLEN, Vice President,
CLYDE H. REESE, Secretary.

The very prosperous little city of Rifle, which is in my home county—Garfield County, Colo.—is undoubtedly the greatest range-cattle shipping point in the United States, and has held that distinction for many years. It being a great gathering place for cattlemen is the reason that several different associations have wired me from there.

RIFLE, COLO., February 14, 1920.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We have been informed that there is a bill before the House to increase the grazing fee of live stock on the forest reserve 300 per cent. That would be an outrage to the stock industry of western Colorado. As a banker I know it would, in all probability, decrease our business around 50 per cent if such a law was passed at this time, because it would practically eliminate the cattle and sheep business in this country, as the fee would be absolutely prohibitive, and I earnestly request that you use your best efforts to defeat this bill.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

A raise of 300 per cent of the grazing on the forest reserve is more than we can stand. At the average prices we receive for our mutton the loss is now very great from poison weeds and coyotes and other wild animals that feed on our herds. The average man with 1,200 to 3,000 sheep has not made one dollar the last two years because of our losses and the expenses and winter feed have been so high. Any raise in price of range fees should be held up long enough to hear the users of the forest side of the matter. We also believe that Colorado should have a representative on the Agricultural Committee.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,

Elk Park Cattle Association wishes to go on record as protesting any raise in range fees. Owing to climatic conditions, number of years in maturing animals for market, loss of live stock from poisonous weeds and other dangerous causes from running stock at large upon national forest, and decline in market condition has caused stockmen on western slope to ship heavier this last fall than ever before in the history of the industry, and now if more expense is to be added the live-stock industry on western slope will soon be a thing of the past.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,

The Boiler Live Stock Association protests against the insertion in the Agricultural appropriation bill of any item increasing grazing fees on the forest reserves in this country. As a proof of our difficulties, we point out the great number of cattle shipped out from here the past year, which stockmen do not intend to replace. Fewer cattle are now on the western slope than ever before in its history. Losses during a single season from poison frequently run as high as 10 per cent. Stockmen feel an additional fee for grazing will further curtail the live-stock industry.

Congressman EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
Washington, D. C.:

We are advised by various live-stock associations of western Colorado that the Government is contemplating to increase the grazing fees on the forest reserve from three to four hundred per cent, notwithstanding a five-year permit was issued last year at a stipulated price of 70 cents per head on cattle and 9½ cents per head on sheep. All are endeavoring to reduce the high cost of living, and to have the Government take a stand of this kind is bound to react on the producer and have a tendency to curtail his operations; and would thank you to investigate the matter with the Agricultural Department, and should you find the conditions as stated above you should file a strong protest in behalf of many of your constituents, who are stock growers as well as ourselves who are acting as agents of the stockmen of the West.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
Washington, D. C.:

Denver Clearing House Association informed that House Committee on Agriculture is making vigorous attempts to insert an item in Agricultural appropriation bill providing for 300 per cent increase in grazing fees on forest reserves in plain disregard of five-year permits granted last year. Condition of live-stock industry does not justify increased burdens upon stockmen, especially in view of high labor, feed, and operating costs, when at same time market prices of cattle going rapidly to lower levels. Having vital interest in maintaining integrity of live-stock operations, we desire to file emphatic protest against proposed action, and bespeak your prompt investigation of subject, knowing that you will make every possible effort to prevent injustice to one of Colorado's most important industries.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

This association opposes increase in grazing tax on national forests in Colorado, or further inclusion of nontimbered land therein. Less than one-half of Colorado's territory is taxable for upkeep of State institutions. Government reservations include valuable land. While Government makes some returns of fees collected, nothing is paid for support of State government and institutions, nor for ordinary police protection of citizens, including forestry officers. Government grass-land should not be expected to yield rentals equal to privately owned lands which are fenced and improved and pay taxes to support State and local government.

DENVER CIVIC AND COMMERCIAL ASSOCIATION,
By ARTHUR J. DODGE, Business Manager.

I received the following letter from the Colorado Stock Growers' Association, which was published in the Denver Daily Record Stockman of February 23, 1920, preceded by an introductory editorial by the Hon. Arthur C. Johnson, editor of that official stockmen's paper, as follows:

[From the Denver Daily Record Stockman, Feb. 23, 1920.]

STOCKMEN'S STRIKE WOULD RAISE A HOWL, SUGGESTS COLORADO ASSOCIATION PROTEST TO WASHINGTON, OVER GRAZING INCREASE—STOCK GROWERS' BODY, IN STRONG TERMS, DENOUNCES TENDENCY OF GOVERNMENT TO CROWD CATTLEMEN WITH BURDENS BEYOND THEIR ENDURANCE AND VIGOROUSLY RESENTS ACTION TO INCREASE GRAZING FEES TO COMMERCIAL STATUS.

Straight from the shoulder and in terms unmistakable in their import, the Colorado Stock Growers' Association informs Congress that the plan for commercializing the rates of all public grazing at this time can not be countenanced. The association's board of control, which on Saturday gave consideration to the move to hoist the grazing tax on forest reserve permittees to virtually treble its present size, took its pen in hand and wrote some genuine gospel on the situation for Representative EDWARD T. TAYLOR to distribute to his House colleagues and others who insist on the western stock grower paying the full expense of maintaining the forest reserves.

"The farmer and live-stock grower who is giving 12 to 16 hours a day in producing at a loss to supply an indifferent, unappreciative, improvident, and profiteering public is growing weary of the game," writes the board at the close of its vigorous epistle. "If we should strike, somebody will howl."

The letter, which was mailed Saturday, may be regarded as the most effective communication in the way of protest concerning the grazing-fee increase that has gone forward to Washington. It sets forth in graphic and succinct manner the hardships and inconveniences experienced by the stockmen who use the reserves.

The board's letter follows:

FEBRUARY 21, 1920.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. TAYLOR: In discussing the relative merits and demerits in raising the fees on the forest reserve, we wish to preface our remarks by explicitly declaring that we are in no way hostile to the Forestry Department, nor opposed to its general administrative efficiency.

Believing that the department is not in possession of all the actual facts in the case and that unfair and uninformed influences are striving to dangerously jeopardize the western live-stock interests, we offer the following for your consideration:

First. We believe that our business interests will be greatly jeopardized if the department does not live up to its moral obligations in fulfilling the five-year permit regulation indorsed at Cheyenne, in 1917. If the department is going to repudiate its word in this instance, our confidence and faith is destroyed. We can not plan for any future for our business if we do not have the assurances that both parties to an agreement will not consider their promises inviolate. The corner stone of men's living in a civilized community is the certain knowledge that the other man's promise will be fulfilled.

Second. Owing to the present unsettled state of conditions, politically and economically, no man can say to-day what is fair and equitable in prices. Our barometers of stability have been destroyed; and relative comparisons are impossible from a purely monetary standpoint.

Third. In view of general conditions of unrest and dissatisfaction due to the ever-soaring cost of the necessities of life, it seems to us an unsound business policy to add fuel to the smoldering fires of economic unrest by further increasing the cost of live-stock production.

The Federal Government should be the first to attempt to ameliorate living conditions by reducing their fees, rather than by increasing them. An increase in range fees means an extra expense in raising live stock, and if the producers are to avoid bankruptcy the consumer must, and ultimately will, pay the bill. Your eastern feeder can only remain in business if the western producer can raise the product to supply him. Present prices are touching the prohibitive point from the consumer's standpoint as well as from the producer's standpoint.

Permit us to call your attention to the fact that as soon as war was declared every live-stock producer was urged to increase his holdings to the limit, under the slogan "Food will win the war." Your patriotic stockman did not slack in his duty, but put aside the chance for temporary gain and did withhold his stock from market and carried to full capacity his farm and range holdings. Then the Government arbitrarily passed the meatless-day law, destroying the market for live stock, until the end of the war found us with a surplus of stock, and now money-exchange rates have decreased the export demand, and we are holding the fatted calf, produced at a great expense and depreciated from 25 to 50 per cent in value. Now, to reward us for our patriotism, self-sacrifice, and unselfishness you propose to add insult to injury by imposing a destructive range fee upon us.

Our products show a greater decline in values than any other commodity. We were not at any time during the last three years permitted to take advantage of the exorbitant profits to tide us over periods of stress that the laborer and manufacturer enjoyed and are still enjoying. When this opportunity presented itself the Government stepped in and arbitrarily tacked the price on our meats, wool, and grain. The war took most of our best men in uniform; the rest were lured away from us by wages that would be confiscatory in our business. Our products have tumbled. Everything that we use from labor to machinery, as well as transportation services, have doubled and trebled in prices, and the quality and efficiency at the same time depreciating 50 per cent in value.

Regarding the relative value of range conditions as compared to private pastures, without at this time elaborating the details, we ask you to consider the following before judging the merits of each:

The relative great distance from railroad to markets.

The loss entailed by long drives to and from the range.

The difference in the carrying capacity per acre on the forests, forcing stock to travel great distances in search of food and water.

The loss incidental to storms, lightning, predatory animals, high altitude, and rough topography of the country.

The difficulty of breeding our cows in rough mountainous regions; the inability to keep close watch over the stock on account of the extent and character of the country.

The expense and danger of hauling and placing salt in proper places on the high range.

The increased cost and difficulty in getting men who are willing to stay in these remote and isolated camps, who have to do their own cooking, horseshoeing, washing, and who are familiar with the range.

The shrinkage incidental to round-ups and gathering time, holding the herd on poor feed for days until the gathering is completed, and then driving without feed or water, in many cases for from two to three days, before the cattle are finally distributed to their respective winter quarters.

Loss due to poisonous plants. Mudholes that mire the stock, especially in the spring.

The inability to give close supervision to the stock on account of the wide area of distribution.

Many of these above-mentioned facts contribute to a calf crop running from 40 per cent to 60 per cent, as compared with the 90 per cent or 95 per cent calf crop in private pastures. Loss of range live stock amounts to 10 per cent, whereas in private pastures less than 1 per cent is lost.

On account of the general mixing of large numbers of cattle on the range, the danger is always great for infection—sharcoptic and saroptic mange in cattle; scabies, tick infection, and hemorrhagic septicemia in sheep. The loss from theft of stock from the range and encroachment upon our range to-day by hundreds of fishermen and tourists and campers is causing considerable loss by disturbing the live stock in their grazing and scaring them farther from the better feed in the bottoms and watering places along the streams, besides an actual damage to forage by campers. The ever-present danger from forest fires by careless campers and occasional loss from careless hunters.

Would you consider a private pasture as valuable if your stock was continually molested by tourists and your grass and streams encroached upon by them, if you had no control over those conditions? We think not.

You sell us feed and rent us certain territory at a good price and then advertise the same place as a national playground for the whole world to come to and pollute as they see fit—the great national forests. Yes; they belong to all the people, but without the special privilege of grazing that we pay a good price for the world would go hungry. The necessities of life must transcend in their rights and privileges those of purely sentimental and recreational rights or privileges; the world can not be clothed or fed if the majority or a large per cent of its people are unproductive. Every loafer that exists some one else must do an extra share for. The farmer and live-stock producer is getting tired of working 12 to 16 hours a day and producing at a loss to supply an indifferent, unappreciative, improvident, and profiteering public.

If we should strike, somebody will howl.

Very truly, yours,

BOARD OF CONTROL OF COLORADO
STOCK GROWERS' ASSOCIATION.

Pensions for the Spanish War and Other War Veterans.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. J. M. C. SMITH,
OF MICHIGAN,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, March 1, 1920.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of a pension for the Spanish War veterans and for those who served in the Philippine insurrection and Boxer uprising. I have voted for pensions to our American soldiers in recognition of our debt to them and for the reason that our country is under more obligation to our soldiers than any other individuals or class of citizens. If it were not for our soldiers we would have no Nation. Our country in the time of need depends upon its soldiers for its very existence and our soldiers always respond liberally, patriotically, and heroically. What more can a man do than to offer his life for his country? It is the very highest mark of citizenship to respond to our country's need, and the Spanish War veterans answered the call. They did their duty and offered their lives as willingly and as patriotically as the soldiers of other wars. So timely was their response that the war was of short duration, but many of them were afflicted by disease in a new and tropical climate. There was no lagging on their part, and now I am in favor of doing justice by them. I voted for this bill willingly and gladly. The cost will not be much. The veterans of the Civil War are passing to their reward more rapidly than their number will be supplied on the pension roll by the Spanish War and these other veterans. It is a simple duty of justice and right that we now give them their due and just recognition. It is not wholly because of the amount of the pension these veterans will receive, but they will be honored by their country in such recognition. No more honorable list or roll can be made up than the honor roll of a country's soldiery.

There were in the Spanish War 434,000 soldiers. They have patiently waited and bided their time for their country to act, and I am pleased that the justice so long delayed has at last been done them. If there is any reason why these soldiers should not be given a pension, I have not heard it. The amount of their pensions from $12 to $30 per month for their injuries will be a slight benefit and aid to them, and for all the pensions that will be allowed under this bill, it is estimated the cost will not exceed $2,232,000 for the first year.

I am for giving it to them now. One of the most important bills yet remaining before Congress is to grant extra compensation to the World War veterans. I am in favor of that. We have allowed the Federal clerks a bonus of $240 a year in addition to their salaries, and no good reason can be given for not granting a just compensation to our World War veterans, who left their homes to fight on foreign soil, and whose places were filled by others who were paid unheard-of wages and salaries in their absence. Under the present stress and unsettled conditions of our country no one knows at what time we may call them to arms again. I hope never. But if need be there is no doubt but what they will again take their places with the colors, and the more so if they know that should want and necessity demand our country will respond to their needs as they did to the needs of their country.

I am pleased to incorporate as a part of my remarks section 1 of the bill as it passed the House:

Be it enacted, etc., That all persons who served 90 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the War with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, and the China relief expedition, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from any mental or physical disability or disabilities of a permanent character, not the result of their own vicious habits, which so incapacitates them from the performance of manual labor as to render them unable to earn a support, shall, upon making due proof of the fact, according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, be placed upon the list of invalid pensioners of the United States, and be entitled to receive a pension not exceeding $30 per month and not less than $12 per month, proportioned to the degree of inability to earn a support; and in determining such inability each and every infirmity shall be duly considered, and the aggregate of the disabilities shown be rated, and such pension shall commence from the date of the filing of the application in the Bureau of Pensions, after the passage of this act, upon proof that the disability or disabilities then existed, and shall continue during the existence of the same: Provided, That any such person who has reached the age of 62 years shall, upon making proof of such fact, be placed upon the pension roll and entitled to receive a pension of $12 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 68 years, $18 per month; in case such person has reached the age of 72 years, $24 per month; and in case such person has reached the age of 75 years, $30 per month: Provided further, That persons who are now receiving pensions under existing laws, or whose claims are pending in the Bureau of Pensions, may, by application to the Commissioner of Pensions, in such form as he may prescribe, showing themselves entitled thereto, receive the benefits of this act; and nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent any pensioner thereunder from prosecuting his claim and receiving his pension under any other general or special act: Provided, however, That no person shall receive more than one pension for the same period: And provided further, That rank in the service shall not be considered in applications filed under this act.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES C. KEARNS,
OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, March 4, 1920.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I have asked this privilege of extending my remarks in order that I might have printed in the RECORD a speech delivered at Defiance, Ohio, on February 12, 1920, by my colleague, Hon. ROSCOE C. MCCULLOCH, of Ohio, who is seeking the Republican nomination for governor of that State. I desire to do this because I feel that it contains language and thought that ought to be given to the American public. I know of no better way to do this than through the medium of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The speech that was delivered by Mr. MCCULLOCH on that occasion is as follows:

AMERICA FIRST.

"Mr. Toastmaster and Gentlemen: Every true American should be proud of the part our country has taken in the events of the past three years. The soldiers of the Republic have carried the Stars and Stripes to victory on foreign soil, and the great sacrifices they have made for humanity will constitute one of the brightest pages in all history.

"Some thoughtless people have said that Americans have taken too much credit for their part in the World War. The soldiers of France were brave; the soldiers of England were brave; the soldiers of Italy were brave; the allied armies covered themselves with glory before we entered the war, but to my humble way of thinking the boys who left their homes and went 3,000 miles across the ocean, with very little, if any, real military training, and met the most powerful military machine the world has ever known, turning the tide of battle from defeat to victory, that the world might be free—they are the greatest heroes in all the mighty tide of time.

"The soldiers of European countries were fighting to save their homes and their people from immediate destruction by the menacing foe who was right at their doors; it was fight and die with them, or submit to ignominious defeat. The American soldiers and the American people went to their rescue, and while our soldiers were fighting for American rights that had been violated under the technical rules of international law, yet they fought, also, for an ideal; not for themselves but for others; not for conquest but for conscience.

"The bravery of the American soldier and the patriotism of the American people in responding to every call for help in this terrible world conflict have no parallel in the history of the world. Those who would minimize the credit due our soldiers, or seek to detract in the slightest degree from the honor and the glory that should be theirs, are not good Americans, and as that great patriot and exponent of the doctrine of America first, the late Theodore Roosevelt, said:

"The man who loves some other country better than his own should go to that other country, for we have no room for him here.

THE PROBLEMS OF PEACE.

"The war is over and peace is in the making. Let us hope that it will be a peace so lasting that war, that relic of barbarism, may never again lift its hideous form, wreaking death, destruction, and disaster upon the human race. With the making of peace we are confronted with the problems of peace. Will these problems be more difficult of solution than the problems of war have been? Sometimes I think they will. America has played a great part in the World War. To use the language of the President, we have 'assumed the responsibilities of a world power.' To what extent our entrance into the war will change our policies of government remains to be seen. There can be no doubt that we, with every other civilized nation, owe a duty to all downtrodden peoples, but in our enthusiasm of the hour we must not forget our obligations to our own people and to our own country.

AMERICA FOR AMERICANS.

"I have always believed in the doctrine of America for Americans. I believed in that doctrine before the European war began, and I have gone through, as a Member of Congress, all the complexities of the legislative program made necessary by our entrance into the war, and I have come out as firm, if not firmer, in my belief in that doctrine than ever before. I have faith in the American people and their ability to meet and deal intelligently with every problem that may involve the integrity of our principles of government and the great policies upon which this American Republic was founded and has been maintained.

"My adherence to the doctrine of America for Americans has been variously interpreted. Some have contended that to advocate this doctrine was to be disloyal; others have been more charitable and have said that it only evidenced a lack of vision; others say that it is a selfish doctrine, and condemn it alone upon that ground. The doctrine of America for Americans, which has been in a large measure my creed, to me simply means to look after America first and the rest of the world afterwards. There are people in this country who refuse to recognize any doctrine except the altruistic doctrine, which means to look after everybody else first and ourselves afterwards. But I apprehend that, as the days go on and the attitude of other nations is better understood, the doctrine of America for Americans will become more and more popular, even among those who have been loudest in their claims that the interests of their own country should be subordinated to the interests of the countries of the Old World.

GEORGE WASHINGTON.

"This Republic was established 130 years ago. It was 'conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created free and equal.' The fathers of our country believed in certain principles of government, and, using those principles as a basis, they evolved and determined upon certain policies. Those policies were reviewed by George Washington in his Farewell Address. I would not want to advocate a blind adherence to principles that are obsolete. I would not want to contend that conditions might not force a change of policies, but I submit that the change of the policy of a nation is serious business, and it is the part of wisdom to give thought and consideration to the views of those who founded the Republic, especially since those views have prevailed for over a century.

"We live in the past by a knowledge of its history and in the future by hope and anticipation. The problem of the present-day statesman and of those who determine the course of this great Republic in the present world crisis is to protect the future of this country. Our forefathers have done their work well. Their success and the success of the policies they pursued is evidenced on every hand by a great, free, prosperous, and contented people. If we of the present day are as successful as our forefathers have been, we can be truly proud of our achievements. Everyone is or should be familiar with the admonitions of George Washington in his Farewell Address:

"Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence, I conjure you to believe me, fellow citizens, the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government * * *.

"The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is in extending our commercial relations to have with them as little political connection as possible. * * *

"Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our conscience. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics, the ordinary combinations and collusions of her friendships or enmities. * * *

"Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, and interests? It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliance with any portion of the foreign world.

"* * * taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

"It remained for the Nation George Washington founded in 1776 on this Western Hemisphere to save in 1918 the Old World on the Eastern Hemisphere. Under the policies laid down by Washington this country has grown from a wilderness to an industrial and commercial miracle land, so vast, so varied, and so wonderful that the mind of man can scarce conceive what the forces of liberty and civilization have wrought. The history of the development of our great country reads like a romance.

AMERICAN DEVELOPMENT.

"What made the United States of America the most powerful, the most enlightened, and the richest nation in the world? It was our policy of government as laid down by Washington, approved by Jefferson and Hamilton, and maintained by Monroe and Lincoln and McKinley and Roosevelt. True, it was a land especially prepared by the forces of nature for the birth and development of the greatest nation and the greatest people on the face of the earth. The Atlantic on the east, the Pacific on the west, connected from the north to the south by great navigable rivers, furnishing wonderful natural means of transportation and of power; great forests of sturdy timbers; soil of marvelous fertility, made so by the decay of the vegetation of hundreds of years; vast treasures of mineral wealth—gold, silver, copper, iron, and coal; natural resources, indeed, unsurpassed, but inhabited by an uncivilized race; a wilderness undeveloped from the frozen lands of the north to the tropical southern seas, with no man possessing the intellect or the genius to bridle the rivers and utilize their power to mine or make use of the ores, or till the soil for more than a mere subsistence. Then came the Pilgrim Fathers, and finally George Washington, who, with sturdy, patriotic purpose, struggled first for independence and then for a place among the nations of the earth. They developed the wonders of the New World by establishing a nation founded upon the principle that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, and to-day the barren plains are covered with beehives of industry, with schools and churches. Our population has increased to 110,000,000 people. We have built great cities. Our domain has extended from ocean to ocean. We are the foremost nation in the world in intelligence, in education, in wealth, and in man power, and the countless thousands who have found in the land of the free a haven of refuge from oppression and who have lived and prospered beneath the Stars and Stripes should never let a day pass that they do not give thanks and due honor to the name of George Washington and the land of the free which he and his band of sturdy associates founded and established on the solid rock of justice, equality, and human liberty. This is the only country on the face of the earth that offers equal opportunities for all. It is the only country that says to the son of the penniless widow as well as to the son of the multimillionaire, "Young man, all the avenues of honor, distinction, and success are open to you." No barriers of serfdom, no restrictions of liberty lift their foul forms to cast shadows in the sunlight of our freedom.

NATIONS DESTROYED.

"A policy of government has made us great. Can a policy of government destroy us? History is filled with examples of nations that have grown, developed, and prospered, only to decline and fade away, and always it was the policy of government or the degeneracy and incompetency of their rulers and leaders that wrought their destruction.

EGYPT.

"Egypt was a mighty empire 6,000 years ago. She had a civilization all her own. The ruins of her great temples are the mute witnesses to the marvelous skill of her people as sculptors and builders. The Sphinx has brooded over the ages of men—no one knows how long—and the mystery of that stony face has puzzled the greatest thinkers of the world. Egypt finally, because of the incompetency of her rulers, sank to the rank of a mere province.

CARTHAGE.

"Carthage was a power in her day. She rose to opulence by the commercial pursuits of her citizens, gradually extending her activities and acquisitions until she had subjugated not only all of Africa but a great part of Spain. Due to extravagance and the incompetency of her leaders and rulers, her great success was turned to failure.

ROME.

"Who does not know the history of Rome, in her day the mistress of the world? There was a time when her possessions embraced half of Europe, a considerable part of Africa, and portions of Asia. From insignificant beginnings she steadily rose to power through seven centuries. From that time forward for nearly five centuries, while her fortunes varied, she held the pinnacle of success, until finally, due to the incompetency of her rulers and leaders, the Empire was destroyed.

GERMANY.

"German efficiency, German production, German science and philosophy for years challenged the admiration of the world. Through her system of government, the industry of her people, and what became known the world over as 'German efficiency' she grew to be a powerful and influential nation. A policy of government and a false philosophy has destroyed the German Empire.

"Nations succeed or fail according to their policies of government. How important, therefore, that the greatest care and the greatest thought should be exercised before a change of a policy of government is even contemplated.

OUR POLICIES BEFORE THE WAR.

"Early in the history of the Republic, in order that this new Government might be protected against threatened encroachments by monarchies on the other side of the ocean, we established what has been known as the 'Monroe doctrine.' We gave a warning against foreign interference with governmental affairs on this continent, and in return we pledged ourselves not to interfere with political affairs or policies of government on the Old Continent. Every great American statesman up to the present day has not only stood for but has believed in the wisdom of the 'Monroe doctrine.' Under the operation of that great policy of government we have not experienced any serious interference upon the part of any foreign Government in our affairs. We have been able, and we have taken it upon ourselves, to exercise a guardianship over smaller and less powerful Governments existing on this continent.

"The American people, up to this time and up to the beginning of this war, have remained steadfast in the belief that no foreign power, however great, and no coalition of foreign powers, however powerful, could successfully violate the 'Monroe doctrine,' and we stood ready at all times to defend the policy laid down in that doctrine at all hazards. So strong has been our belief in the 'Monroe doctrine' that in both conferences at The Hague in 1899 and in 1907 we reaffirmed and again promulgated that as our policy. The following appears in the minutes signed by our delegates at the first convention in regard to arbitration:

"Nothing contained in this convention shall be so construed as to require the United States of America to depart from its traditional policy of not intruding upon or interfering with or entangling itself in the political questions or policy or internal administration of any foreign State; nor shall anything contained in the said convention be construed to imply a relinquishment by the United States of America of its traditional attitude toward purely American questions.

"Up until the beginning of the present war we have constantly refused to permit ourselves to be drawn, directly or indirectly, into any foreign conflict, and we have preserved inviolate always the spirit as well as the letter of the 'Monroe doctrine.'

FREEDOM OF THE SEAS.

"We have always stood firm for our rights upon the high seas. In 1812 we fought for the freedom of the seas and to maintain another policy upon which our country has always acted, and that is that the seas are and should always be regarded as the common highways of nations, and that any interference or attempted interference by one nation with the trade of any other nation on the seas is a violation of the right of every other nation and should be resented as such.

MILITARISM.

"We as a Nation have always opposed militarism. The fathers of our country broke away in the beginning from the system of military service established in foreign countries. We have never been a military Nation. Every expression in our Constitution and in the constitutions of the various States which relates to the military defines it as a means of defense and as an institution to be maintained for the purpose of protecting the people of this country in the exercise of their personal liberty and their property rights. We have never entered upon a war of conquest, and at every great diplomatic conference in which the delegates of this country have participated we have stood for the settlement of disputes among nations by arbitration and not by force, so that the committee on public information, consisting of the present Secretary of State, the present Secretary of War, the present Secretary of the Navy, and a civilian appointee, in a pamphlet issued on June 14, 1917, declared:

"On the eve of the present conflict our position toward other nations might have been summarized under three heads:

"1. The Monroe doctrine.—We had pledged ourselves to defend the New World from European aggression, and we have by word and deed made it clear that we would not intervene in any European dispute.

"2. The freedom of the seas.—In every naval conference our influence had been given in support of the principle that sea law, to be just and worthy of general respect, must be based on the consent of the governed.

"3. Arbitration.—As we had secured peace at home by referring interstate disputes to a Federal tribunal, we urged a similar settlement of international controversies. Our ideal was a permanent world court. We had already signed treaties, not only with great powers which might conceivably attack us but even more freely with weaker neighbors, in order to show our good faith in recognizing the equality of all nations, both great and small. We had made plain to the nations our purpose to forestall by every means in our power the recurrence of wars in the world.

"I can not conceive how a policy or policies could be broader, more comprehensive, and more in keeping with the principles of liberty, of freedom, and of justice which actuated and inspired the fathers of our country and every succeeding statesman than those three great principles which embodied the policy of this country toward the nations of the world at the beginning of the World War.

"These policies need not be changed now. We need not surrender our sovereignty in order to be able to help to prevent wars in the world. We can cooperate as a civilized nation with other civilized nations to prevent war and still hold inviolate the policies laid down by our fathers.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

"I believe that the civilized nations of the world should cooperate together for the purpose of preventing another war such as we have just gone through. I do not believe that there is any great difference of opinion upon this point. The militarist might oppose such a plan; those who desire to establish a military government might oppose it; but I believe the great mass of the American people are united in thought upon the proposition that the diplomacy of the world should be exercised to prevent war. But while the American people may be united upon the broad proposition of cooperating with other civilized nations to prevent war, yet that does not mean that we are ready to accept any kind of a proposal that may be submitted blindly and without consideration. Personally, I am irrevocably opposed to the surrender of sovereignty. We should reserve to ourselves home rule, and the integrity of the Monroe doctrine should be upheld in any covenant to which we agree. We must reserve the right to provide for our defense. We should weigh well what we promise and then keep our promise to the letter.

"'I am for the treaty with Americanizing reservations. This treaty controversy should be settled and settled now. The sooner peace is proclaimed the sooner the world will settle down to normal. But men who arbitrarily take the position as the President has done, that they will not compromise, usually get nowhere, and I predict that the United States Senate will continue to function as a coordinate branch of this Government, and when historians come to chronicle the events of this epoch it will be written that the Senate of the United States in 1919 and 1920 rendered one of the greatest patriotic services in all American history.

"In considering America's problems some things are absolutely certain. The time for a strict American policy has arrived. Government extravagance must stop. We must protect American labor against the influx of immigrants from the devastated countries of Europe. We must protect the American market for the protection of American labor by proper tariff laws. We must see to it to the extent that the Government is able to do so that our people are employed.

NATIONAL FINANCES.

"The enormous expenses resulting from our prosecution of the war and the burden of debt which the Federal Government must pay have brought about very important changes in our financial system. Chairman GOOD, of the House Committee on Appropriations, has recently given a very interesting review of these changes. Until in very recent years the revenues for running the Federal Government were secured through a system of indirect taxation, the effect of the operation of which was that the ordinary taxpayer did not feel it and industry was not affected.

"Our revenues came from tariff duties, taxes on tobacco, and sources of similar character. To-day it is necessary for the Federal Government to tax almost everything, and in order to secure the revenues necessary to meet our enormous expenditures the Federal Government has been compelled to resort to direct taxation, so that the ordinary taxpayer must pay taxes on income and in many ways where the burden of the tax is personally and directly felt.

"For 52 years, or from 1866 to 1917, inclusive, the revenues exceeded the expenditures during 42 years, and only during 11 years were the expenditures greater than the revenues. During this period the net increase of revenues over expenditures exceeded $2,147,000,000, and during all of that time only $636,554,225.07 of direct taxes were levied and collected, and these were paid by comparatively few persons.

"Before the system of direct taxation became necessary and while we were relying for the revenues for running the Federal Government upon the system of indirect taxes I have referred to, for the year 1907, which was a typical year according to the Secretary of the Treasury's report, revenues that were received for that year from the various sources of indirect taxation totaled $842,879,000.

"The receipts for that year were $111,000,000 in excess of the expenditures and there was not a single dollar collected in the form of direct taxes. It is estimated for the next fiscal year $3,750,000,000 of our revenue will come through direct taxation, to the payment of which 4,000,000 persons will contribute.

EXPENDITURES.

"I quote the following from a speech recently made by Chairman GOOD of the House Appropriations Committee:

"The total estimated requirements for the next fiscal year, excluding any estimates for the United States Railroad Administration, which undoubtedly will make large demands, are $5,250,000,000, or an equivalent of $47 for every person in the United States. In order to collect even a much smaller sum the hand of the taxgatherer must fall heavily upon a great many of our people. The result is that from the taxpayer is coming a demand that is both increasing and constant for greater economy and efficiency in the Government's fiscal affairs. That demand can only be satisfied in two practical ways: First, by the adoption of a sound budget system; and, second, by the practice in the executive departments of the Government of those homely virtues of economy that successful business men everywhere have found necessary in the successful conduct of their business affairs.

STATE ECONOMY.

"Not only must the National Government economize but the time has come when an economy program must be put into operation in our State governments.

"I have recently devoted some time to a study of conditions in our State government.

NOT ON BUSINESS BASIS.

"The affairs of the State of Ohio are not now, in my judgment, on a sound business basis. Public officials of the State for many years have pointed out the need for economy, but I fail to find in my examination of the records of the State the inauguration of a really constructive program to eliminate waste and extravagance. The result has been that the expenses of the State have increased yearly by leaps and bounds out of all proportion to the increase in population. A careful analysis of the activities of our State administrations will disclose that there have been no extraordinary emergencies to meet and no large building programs in recent years which would justify our lavish expenditures, and we must therefore look for other causes to account for the enormous increase.

"In 1900 we expended from the general revenue fund about $5,000,000; in 1918 we expended from the general revenue fund over $20,000,000, an increase of $15,000,000, or over 300 per cent, for the conduct of the State government. These figures do not include expenditures made for the operation of the State government alone.

HUGE SUM FOR SALARIES.

"One of the principal items responsible for this great increase is the amount paid as salaries each year to the added army of employees. It cost the State for salaries alone in 1918 $2,000,000 more than the total of the entire expenses of the State for any one year under Gov. McKinley. The salaries of the State's employees for 1918 amounted to $6,645,456.64, which was more by $92,326.36 than the entire cost of the State government in 1907.

"While the revenues of the State for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, increased $1,781,608.89 over the previous year, the expenditures increased $3,106,808.72 during the same period. The expenditures therefore last year increased nearly twice as fast as the revenues.

APPROPRIATIONS INCREASED.

"The increased authorized appropriation for 1918 over 1917 was more than $9,000,000. Thus the increased authorized expenditures for 1918 were more than all expenditures from the general revenue fund for two years under Gov. McKinley's administration.

"On July 1, 1918, according to an official report, the public debt of the cities, townships, villages, and school districts of the State of Ohio aggregated $434,047,793.03. From 1915 to 1918, or in four years, our public debt increased over $140,000,000. Easy and unlimited facilities for obtaining money are a stimulus to extravagant expenditures. We frequently hear the statement made that 'our State is growing rapidly in wealth and population, and we can in safety increase our public debt,' but the cold facts are that debt and taxation always far outdistance in the race with population.

STATE DEBT PILES UP.

"According to an official report the population of Ohio since 1880 has only increased 49 per cent, but taxation has increased 300 per cent and public debt has beat population by 900 per cent.

"Before we attempt to further levy tribute by taxation upon the industries and homes of our State, upon the farmer to whom we must look and depend for relief from the burdensome living conditions confronting the whole world, and upon the people generally, we would do well to reduce expenditures and by consolidation, elimination, and economic, businesslike administration obviate any necessity for increasing the tax burdens.

"The enormous revenues required by reason of the war have made it necessary for the Federal Government to tax about everything and to the limit. The cost of living is beyond all previous records. The people are forced to economize in their homes; the National Government must economize; so, too, the State should economize and strive to relieve the people from further burdens of taxation. That this can be done without injury and with profit to the State I am fully confident.

"The facts I have just reviewed, taken from the official records of the State, should prove to every thinking citizen of Ohio that there is something radically wrong with the methods employed in conducting our State government. The truth is the State is burdened with many needless and useless boards, commissions, and governmental agencies, many of them overlapping one another, their operation resulting in no real good, but adding every hour to the expenses that the people must pay by increased taxation. The methods that have been followed in the State of Ohio of increasing each year the number of governmental agencies and adding unnecessarily to the army of employees may be effective in the building of a powerful political machine, but it is certainly not conducive to the welfare of the State nor is it good business administration.

CONSOLIDATION OF DEPARTMENTS.

"There should be an immediate reorganization of the administrative forces now under the control of the executive, with a view to economy and efficiency. I am a firm believer in applying the same business principles in the conduct of our governmental affairs that are successfully employed in the conduct of every-day business affairs, and I will immediately formulate recommendations for the adoption of a civil administrative code for the State which would result in an elimination and consolidation along economic lines of the various administrative departments now under the governor.

"I am convinced that such a reorganization would not only mean placing the affairs of the State upon a sound business basis, which would result in more efficient administration, but it should result in great economy and a very material reduction in the burdens of taxation upon the people.

"Illinois, a State which was as badly burdened with boards and commissions as Ohio, accomplished such a reorganization, and as a result was able to reduce materially the tax levy. What was done in Illinois can be done in Ohio.

REAL BUDGET SYSTEM.

"I am a firm believer in a comprehensive budget system. No budget system can be made really effective without a centralization of authority and responsibility. There should be a comprehensive financial plan, a careful analysis of expenditures, and a well-founded system for determining appropriation needs with a study and report on the sources of revenue necessary to meet the State's requirements. This should be accomplished under direct executive authority, with the responsibility for the demands made upon the treasury fixed, so that if economy is not practiced and the State's finances are not properly adjusted the people can reach those responsible for extravagance and lack of management.

"When William McKinley became governor of Ohio in 1891 he found the State treasury in a deplorable condition. There was not enough money available to meet the current monthly pay rolls. Shortly after his inauguration the State auditor presented to him what were called advance drafts, drawn on some of the larger counties of the State, to secure funds to meet current expenses. The governor naturally inquired why this was necessary, and was informed that this had been the practice for some years and was traceable directly to the administration of Gov. Hoadley, when the legislature authorized the building of an intermediate penitentiary and hospital for epileptics and appropriated the sum of $300,000 for each, but made no provision for raising the money, whereupon Gov. Hoadley drew advance drafts on his successor's revenues to take care of the deficit thus created, and each succeeding governor had followed the same practice. William McKinley refused to continue the practice and would not sign these advanced drafts, contending that the time had come when the finances of the State should be put upon a sound business basis. He immediately recommended the passage of our franchise laws and other revenue measures, thereby securing the revenue necessary to pay the running expenses of the State government and free the State from debt.

EACH TAXPAYER'S SHARE $1,074.

"As a result of William McKinley's wisdom and foresight, when Gen. Andrew L. Harris left the governor's office in January, 1909, the State had loaned at interest more than $2,000,000. During succeeding administrations this surplus had been entirely wiped away and the condition of the State's finances are as I have outlined. The State has been victimized by political machine building. The increase in our State expenditures has been so great that every thoughtful citizen must know when the facts are disclosed that a stop must be put at once to these wild extravagances.

"It has been stated in an official report that if each taxpayer in Ohio should be called upon to meet his proportion of the National, State, and local expenditures for one fiscal year, each and every one of them would be required to pay $1,074.10 and, in addition to that amount, he would still have hanging over him a local debt of $434 and a still larger amount of national debt.

"The people should demand that responsibility for our financial conditions in the State be fixed and that an effective plan be inaugurated and put into operation to correct them.

"Appropriations are made largely on estimates furnished by executive departments. Money is expended through executive agencies and the governor has the veto power. He can veto an entire appropriation bill or any item in any bill. The governor can not escape his full share of the responsibility.

NEED CONSOLIDATION AND FIXING RESPONSIBILITY.

"My experience in connection with the work of certain important committees of Congress investigating expenditures has convinced me that the shifting of responsibility is one of the most dangerous elements in all governmental activities. What is everybody's business is nobody's business. The average private business would be bankrupt in a week if it were run as the Government business is conducted. Results are the only real tests of efficiency. The results of our present system of conducting affairs in Ohio have increased the tax burdens of the people by increasing the expenditures out of all proportion to the benefits received by the people.

"A consolidation of our State departments under responsible heads and the elimination of needless agencies should reduce the expenditures and thereby reduce taxation. A real budget system will show up the leaks and insure efficiency, for there is no force so powerful in public affairs as the truth disclosed.

FINAL.

"We need have no fear for the future of our country so long as we adhere to the doctrine of America first and cling to the traditions of the fathers.

"The first great advocate of the doctrine of America first was George Washington. The last great advocate of this doctrine was Theodore Roosevelt.

"'America first'—what does it mean?

"It means to continue the policies that have developed the greatest Republic the world has ever known or is ever likely to know. It means to beware of foreign entanglements. It means to look after our own country first and the rest of the world afterwards. It means security, for under that policy we must always be in a proper defensive posture. It means education under the greatest free educational system on earth. It means the opportunity to live in an atmosphere of freedom where class distinctions are unknown. It means reverence for the Stars and Stripes, the one flag in all the world that stands for human liberty and all that that implies.

"I used to like to tell the story of the American who stood in a foreign land watching the troops of all nations pass by. I believe the occurrence was during the Paris Exposition, and it was first told by the late Charles Emory Smith at a banquet given in honor of the martyred President McKinley at Canton, Ohio.

"A foreigner stood beside the American pointing out the soldiers of the various countries and their flags. He said: 'Those are the English troops and that is the flag of the King; those are the German soldiers and that is the flag of the Kaiser; those are the Japanese troops and that is the flag of the Mikado; those are the soldiers of Russia and that is the flag of the Czar.' Presently, as the American troops approached, flying the Stars and Stripes, marching to the tune of the Star-Spangled Banner, the American spoke for the first time, and, turning to his foreign friend, he said: 'And those are the American soldiers and that is my flag; not the flag of any King, not the flag of any Czar, not the flag of any Kaiser, but my flag and the flag of every man, woman, and child in my great country, the land of the free.'"

OF

HON. EDW. D. HAYS,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, March 1, 1920,

On the bill (H. R. 2) to pension soldiers of the War with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, and the China relief expedition.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, in 1898 this Nation was worthy of every sacrifice made by the men who wore her uniform; to-day the survivors of that army are worthy of our grateful recognition. The measure we are now considering, commonly called the Selis bill, reaches none but these survivors. In general terms it provides that all of them who are suffering from disability may receive pensions ranging from $12 per month to $30 per month, according to the degree of reduced earning power.

When the Spanish-American War began a call for men was made by President McKinley, and 300,000 volunteers at once enlisted to protect our flag. Not one of them was moved by a selfish hope for financial reward. There was no allurement in the insanitary camp life of that day. The soldiers and sailors and marines who served our cause in that conflict assumed all the perils of battle generally attending such an enterprise. Moreover, they met the danger of disease lurking in the tropical climate where much of the fighting was done. Their one inspiring and impelling motive was that loyal spirit of patriotism so ardent in every true American heart since 1776.

The war did not last long, but it was of momentous consequence to mankind. Autocracy was driven from the Western World. A new Republic was born in Cuba. Civil and religious liberty came to millions of souls in the islands of both great oceans. The glory of American arms was maintained, and the matchless humanity of the Stars and Stripes became a leavening factor in world affairs.

Most of the participants in that struggle were young men when they gave their service, but 22 years have passed since then and they have come to middle age. Some of them were already well on in life, and they are old men to-day. All of them have now begun to feel the heavy hand of time. Their increasing years and the hardships they endured have brought many of them to a state of physical infirmity, and some of them are enduring the distress of poverty and disease.

The long-established policy of our Government in granting pensions to the men who fought its wars needs no defense. That principle is grounded in justice and humanity. The Nation called these men and they responded. The strength of a popular government is measured by the devotion of its people. Love of country in this Republic is essential to our national unity. These men were not slackers when their country needed them; let us not be slackers now in the day when they need us. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this bill.

Civil Service Retirement.

SPEECH

OF

HON. REED SMOOT,

OF UTAH,

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,

Wednesday, February 11, 1920.

The Senate had under consideration the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not contemplating taking very much time of the Senate to-day, but I wish briefly to review this character of legislation as it has been presented to the Senate for the purpose of the retirement of employees in the classified civil service.

If I remember correctly, eight years ago the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] was chairman of the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment. As I remember, the subcommittee having the subject in hand consisted of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], and myself.

A retirement bill was reported to the Senate. At that session of Congress it developed that there was not time for the proper discussion of the bill. I may add, Mr. President, that at that time there was very little interest in the subject, either in the House or in the Senate. From that time forward there has been a constant propaganda to create a public sentiment for this kind of legislation, and I am frank to say that in the last few years there has grown up a sentiment throughout the land for legislation of this character.

I was heartily in favor of the retirement bill that was reported to the Senate at that time. I think for six weeks there was scarcely a day that the Senator from Iowa and the subcommittee did no meet for the consideration of legislation, with a view of reporting a bill for the retirement of the employees in the civil service.

The question at that time was, Should the bill be on a contributory plan on the part of the employees, or should the Government of the United States pay the entire expense? It soon developed among the members of the committee and also among the Senators who had given any attention whatever to the subject matter that the proper legislation would be a contributory plan. From that day to this there has never been a bill reported to the Senate unless it was based upon a contributory plan.

The bill referred to was known as the half-and-half plan; in other words, the employees of the Government were to pay one half of whatever it cost for their retirement on an annuity, and the Government of the United States was to pay the other half. If I remember correctly, the first bill that was introduced into the Senate would have cost the Government about $44,000,000. I have the papers in my office showing the details of the cost to the Government and the cost to the employees for every year beginning with the first year and ending with the fiftieth year.

I want it understood that I am in favor of legislation of this character, but I am also in favor of a contributory plan that will require the Government of the United States to pay one half of the expense and the employees of the Government to pay the other half of the expense.

When the bill known as the McKellar bill was reported to the Senate, the report of the committee at that time stated that the bill was virtually a plan for the Government to pay 50 per cent and the employees to pay 50 per cent of the expense. I have quotations before me from statements made upon the floor of the Senate to that effect. It was understood at the time by all who were in favor of reporting the bill from the committee that that was the plan adopted. But it soon developed that such was not the case. A thorough examination into the bill itself developed the fact that it was not a fifty-fifty plan, but, on the contrary, it was merely a plan that approximately 75 per cent should be paid by the Government and 25 per cent should be paid by the employees.

The bill which has been reported to the Senate at this session of Congress, the bill under consideration at this time, is supposed to be as nearly as possible a fifty-fifty plan. If that were the case I would not take a moment's time of the Senate to speak upon the measure, but I am positive that if any Senator will take the time to go to the Bureau of Efficiency and take any one year or any fixed salary that may be paid to any employee and apply it to the provisions of the pending bill, he will have to admit that the figures that have been reported by the committee are not correct. We should not make the mistake that was made in England when the first retirement bill was enacted. Before the discussion is concluded I may call attention to the report that was made about 60 years after the first retirement bill was passed in England. That, I think, will show beyond any question of doubt that the estimates made at the time were such that they did not show upon their face one-half of the amount that it actually cost the British Government. I hope that we are not going to have a repetition of England's history in the passage of the pending bill.

The estimates that I shall present to the Senate to-day and which I desire to have go into the RECORD in detail are based on statistics of employees as of July 1, 1916, and include 263,152 persons, that being the number at that time in the employ of the Government. The statements will show that the cost to the Government the first year will be $4,584,871, and that this amount will steadily increase until about the thirty-fifth year, when the cost to the Government will be about $34,500,000. The cost to the Government will then gradually fall to about $28,000,000 a year and remain there from that time forward, provided there is not an increase in the number of the estimated employees by the Government.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOWNSEND in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. May I ask the Senator from Utah if he means by "cost to the Government" the cost exclusive of the contributions of the employees or including the contributions of the employees?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator had not interrupted me, I would have stated that. I should have said the cost to the Government under the bill. The employees are to pay a certain percentage of the cost under the bill. Of course, the employees retired on the passage of the bill would not contribute a cent. If the number of employees of the Government increases, of course the amount paid by the Government will increase.

Mr. POMERENE. I may add, if the Senator from Utah will permit me, that the experience of the past conclusively demonstrates that the number of employees is going very materially to increase.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no question about that. For instance, since these figures were prepared, on July 1, 1916, when we had 263,152 persons in the classified service, we find that in the District of Columbia alone there has been an increase in the number of employees of over 50,000. We thought when the armistice was signed that the number of employees of the Government would quickly diminish, but the number of employees will never be less than to-day unless Congress takes the matter into its hands and refuses to make appropriations with which to pay them.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator state on what average annual salary the estimate which he has just furnished the Senate is based?

Mr. SMOOT. The figures which I shall put into the RECORD will begin with the $1,000 salary and include up to the $5,000 salary. The average salary is about $1,138 per annum.

Mr. STERLING. The average salary for 1916 was $1,138. It now would amount to more than $1,200; it will amount to at least $1,260 or $1,275 now.

Mr. POMERENE. In order that we may have the facts accurately, may I ask the Senator from South Dakota was he taking into consideration merely the basic salary, or the basic salary plus the bonus which has been allowed within the last year or two?

Mr. STERLING. I was taking into consideration what the salaries will be henceforth and what the average annual basic salary will be from this time on, I will say to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there will be no question about the figures, because the figures as they will be inserted in the RECORD begin with a salary of $1,000—they are not based on an average salary at all—and then proceed up to salaries of $5,000.

In this connection I desire to say that there is one thing I do not like about the pending bill, and no other country in the world has such a provision in its civil-service law. I refer to the fact that an employee receiving, I will say, $1,200 annually and an employee receiving $5,000 a year shall each contribute 2½ per cent of his annual salary for the purpose of the retirement fund, and when those employees leave the service, provided they do so at the same age and under the same conditions, the annuity which they receive is virtually the same.

The total amount of the retirement allowances under this bill the first year will be paid out of the Federal Treasury, as I have already stated.

Mr. NUGENT. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. NUGENT. I desire to inquire of the Senator whether or not he thinks it would be advisable to retire all of the so-called superannuated employees during the first year or as soon as possible?

Mr. SMOOT. As a rule, I should say during the first year; but there are exceptions. The Senator from Idaho knows as well as I know that some of the most efficient clerks or employees of the Government to-day are men who are over 70 years of age. I know two or three of the Government bureaus in the District of Columbia where, if such men are removed, I can not conceive how it would be possible to transact the business as usual, at least for some time to come. They have had the whole business of the bureaus at their fingers' ends; they know it as a child knows his A, B, C's after he has thoroughly learned them; and those men are also physically fit for the performance of their duties.

I desire to say to the Senator from Idaho that when the first bill on this subject was reported to this body there was a provision to take care of just such cases as those; but under the pending bill retirement finally is compulsory when the ages fixed have been reached, with this exception: First, that an extension of two years may be granted, and then there may be another extension of two years, making a total extension of four years. When we take into consideration that the first of the other civil-service retirement bills which were introduced into this body fixed the age of retirement at 70 years, while under the pending bill the ages of retirement are 60 years, 62 years, and 65 years, the maximum being 65 years, we can readily see what effect it is going to have as to some of the very best employees of the Government.

Mr. NUGENT. If the Senator from Utah will yield——

Mr. STERLING. I think it but fair——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Idaho wishes to conclude his questions——

Mr. STERLING. It was in connection with the question asked by the Senator from Idaho that I desire to make a statement, qualifying the statement made by the Senator from Utah in answer to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. SMOOT. I am willing to yield for any qualification of my statement if it is not correct.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator from Utah is correct in saying that there may be successive extensions for periods of two years each; but, according to the terms of the bill, for the first 10 years after the bill goes into effect there may be extensions covering the entire 10 years after the person has reached the retirement age of 65 years, provided, of course, that the head of the department or bureau or independent branch of the service certifies to the efficiency of the aged employee and the employee is willing to remain in the service. After the expiration of 10 years the periods of extension are limited to two periods of two years each, so that the maximum would be, after 10 years of the operation of the law, an extension of four years, making the retirement age in the case of such extension 69 years.

Mr. SMOOT. That is as I stated it; and if I did not state it clearly, it is as I intended it.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator's statement was accurate as far as he went, but he did not state the whole case.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Utah has not been given an opportunity to continue the making of his statement. However, the maximum age of retirement is not 69 years in all cases; it is 64 years, 66 years, and 69 years, according to the class of employees.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator ought to say in that connection—and I think he will grant that is fair—that the great body of the employees are to be retired at 65 years unless the successive extensions are availed of. For employees engaged in special service, such as mechanics, rural letter carriers, and city carriers 62 years is the retirement age, with a like privilege of extension; for railway postal clerks, the age of retirement is 60 years, with the like privilege of extension.

Mr. NUGENT. I desire to ask the Senator from Utah whether or not he can advise the Senate whether the amount of salary to be drawn during the first year by the so-called superannuates, in the event they remain on the pay roll, will be lesser or greater than the amount of the annuity that will be paid to them in the event that they are separated from the service?

Mr. SMOOT. The salaries will be greater.

Mr. President, I do not want the Senator from South Dakota to try to make it appear that I am endeavoring to misrepresent the provisions of the bill.

Mr. STERLING. Oh, I have not attempted to do so, and I hope the Senator from Utah will not think so.

Mr. SMOOT. That was farthest from my thoughts. I merely desire to state the condition exactly as it is.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; and I think in this very connection it ought to be brought, not only to the attention of the Senator from Idaho, but to the attention of every other Senator, exactly what the facts are concerning the periods of extension; that is all.

Mr. SMOOT. I made the statement and I can make it again, and I will say that my former statement is right.

Mr. STERLING. I will say that it is not right in that it does not go to the full extent of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I simply repeat that there are three ages for retirement which are named in the bill; one is 60 years; and after 10 years there are only four years' extension allowed, in two periods of two years each, which would make an extension to 64 years for the class of employees who are retired at 60 years.

There is another class provided for under the same provision who are to be retired at 62 years. Four years added to that makes 66 years as the maximum age of retirement. Then there is another class under the same provision for whom the retirement age is 65 years, and four years added to that makes 69 years. That is exactly what I said, and that is what the bill provides.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, as I understand the matter, it would be to the financial advantage of the Government to pay the annuities to the so-called superannuates and separate them from the service during the first year of the operation of the bill. Am I correct in that?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. In that connection, Mr. President, everyone knows that we have a great many old employees to-day in the service of the Government, more so than there ever will be again. I wish to be perfectly frank with the Senator and say that, so far as I am personally concerned, I would not want to see all of the old employees who have served the Government for years, for instance, employees in the Pension Office, thrown out of employment with no annuity; I do not think that would be a good thing for the Government of the United States to do; but some of them are 80 years old—I do not remember just how many of them, but I could by looking up the figures tell the Senator the exact number—and many of them are above 70 years. Those physically unfit employees ought to be relieved at once by the Government, and will be under this bill.

Mr. NUGENT. I understood the Senator to say that at the expiration of 35 years the expense to the Government under the operations of this bill would be approximately $28,000,000. I should like to have the Senator advise the Senate, if he can, what the expense will be to the employees themselves; in other words, what proportion of money they would be obliged to contribute.

Mr. SMOOT. Under the bill the expense would be $28,000,000, and the employees would at that time contribute about 25 per cent, or $7,000,000, and the Government of the United States would contribute approximately $21,000,000. The employees retiring the tenth year will provide about 3 per cent of their annuities; in the twentieth year about 9 per cent; in the thirtieth year about 15 per cent. With each succeeding year the employees' contributions will provide an increasing proportion of the cost, until at the end of about 50 years the employees' contributions will, as I have already stated to the Senate, provide about one-fourth of the annual cost. Thereafter the employees will contribute about one-fourth of the annual cost.

Mr. NUGENT. They will contribute not more than one-fourth, then, at any time.

Mr. SMOOT. Not much more than 25 and a fraction per cent. The increased cost of this plan over similar plans previously considered is due to the earlier ages of retirement. The earlier ages of retirement reduces the number of years during which the contributions will be made by the employees, cuts off the return of compound interest at the time the interest accumulations are growing most rapidly, and increases the number of employees to receive annuity.

There is no necessity for my stopping to explain that; every Senator will recognize that fact. In the last five years of the period when contributions are paid by the employees interest is compounded upon all the previous payments in addition to the contributions for the five years. There is where the advantage would come to the Government of the United States, and there would be scarcely any disadvantage to the employees; in other words, in many cases, if the period of contributions were five years longer or if the age of retirement were 70 years instead of 65 years, then, of course, the 5 years' interest upon the amount of the contributions for five years, together with the interest on all of the contributions up to that time, would make a substantial difference in the cost. This is one reason why this bill does not provide a fifty-fifty plan. Therefore I hope that those Senators who are interested in the matter will study the question before voting upon the bill.

I wish to say to the Senate at this point that the figures to which I have referred have not been arrived at in a haphazard manner; they do not represent guesswork on the part of the Bureau of Efficiency. As I have already said, I can take any Senator down to the Bureau of Efficiency and secure a file covering the estimate on any employee of the Government, no matter what salary he may be receiving, and follow it according to the provisions of this bill. If after such a visit any Senator would say that the figures I intend to put into the RECORD are not correct, I would apologize to the Senate and to the country. These figures were arrived at after a careful study, as the table of contents of the volume before me indicate. That table includes "list of operations required in the valuation"; "distribution of employees by age, salary, and length of service"; "specimen sheet of Table 1"; "preparation of table of exposure of employees separated from the service during the period from July 1, 1911, to June 30, 1916." We do not have to guess; we know what happened; we know why they were separated; we know for what causes they were separated; how many of them; and the percentage of the employees that were separated. My figures, Mr. President, are based upon information collected along that line—determination of rates of separation from the service with a pension plan in operation.

Mr. President, I must hasten on, and I am not going to take the time of the Senate unduly; but I will simply say that the figures are collected on a definite plan, and can be proven beyond the question of a doubt.

Let us see if the plan provided for by this bill will be self-supporting in the beginning; and if so, for how long. A statement to that effect was made by the Senator from Tennessee on the floor the other day. Let us see how.

It will not require any aid from the Government during the first few years if the Government sees fit to use the contributions of the younger employees to pay the older ones. If that is to be the policy, the statement made here upon the floor of the Senate is correct; but is such a thing conceivable? If so, who is going to meet it at the end of the row? Somebody will have to do it.

The contributions are more than sufficient to pay the annuities during the first few years, because the number of eligibles will be few at first; but as the number reaching retirement age will increase at about the same rate that the service has increased during the past 30 or 40 years, it is obvious that in a short time the income will be inadequate to cover the entire cost of the plan. If the contributions of all of the employees are accumulated with interest at 4 per cent, compounded annually, and are used to pay the annuities of employees retiring during the first few years, the plan will require no aid from the Government during the first 10 years of its operation. Under the terms of the bill, however, money paid in by an employee remains the property of that employee, and must ultimately be returned to him, with interest at 4 per cent, compounded annually, in one of the following two ways:

(a) In one sum, in case of his resignation, or to his estate in case of his death; and

(b) In the form of an annuity upon his retirement.

When an employee pays an annuity in the first year, that money belongs to him. The Government of the United States holds it as a trust fund, and the Government of the United States agrees to pay him 4 per cent interest, compounded annually. If the Government of the United States takes that money to pay somebody else because he retires from the Government service, the Government in the end will have to pay the employee who paid the money that was used by the Government, and add to it 4 per cent interest, compounded annually.

Mr. President, I have before me a statement of the cost of pensioning the employees of the classified civil service. In one column is the year, beginning with 1 and ending with 77. The next column gives the cost of pensioning employees; first, the cost to the Government, and, second, the cost to the employees.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. KELLOGG. Is that under this bill or under the substitute?

Mr. SMOOT. That is under this bill. Then I want to say to the Senator that I hope to put in the cost under this bill as compared with the cost under what was known as the McKellar bill that was before the Senate in the last session of Congress.

Then this statement gives the total cost of the annuities. The next column shows the percentage of the total cost, first, to the Government, and the percentage of the cost each year to the employees; and then follows the summations of cost to the Government and to the employees, and the total cost, which would be the same as the total cost in the first-mentioned column.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah further yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. KELLOGG. I notice by the report of the committee on the Sterling bill that the amount the Government would have to pay the first year is stated as $4,178,500.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. Under the bill now before the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. That is the estimate that they have there.

Mr. KELLOGG. Is that correct?

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; it is not correct.

Mr. KELLOGG. What is the estimate that the Senator has?

Mr. SMOOT. The estimate is $4,584,871. There is not very much difference the first year. The difference comes later; and I want the Senator to follow me, and I will tell him why these differences exist. I am not going to read this table, but I am going just to begin with the first year and take it in five-year periods, and show the Senate how the increased percentage on the part of the employees grows as the years elapse. Of course when the bill goes into effect this year the retired employees will pay nothing whatever; the Government of the United States will pay 100 per cent of the cost.

In the fifth year the percentage paid by the Government would be reduced from 100 per cent to 99 per cent, and the employees would pay 1 per cent.

At the end of the tenth year the Government would pay 96.98 per cent and the employees would pay 3.02 per cent.

At the end of the fifteenth year the Government would pay 94.36 per cent and the employees would pay 5.64 per cent.

At the end of the twentieth year the Government would pay 91.38 per cent and the employees would pay 8.62 per cent.

At the end of the twenty-fifth year the Government would pay 88.15 per cent and the employees would pay 11.85 per cent.

At the end of the thirtieth year the Government would pay 84.74 per cent, and the employees would pay 15.26 per cent.

At the end of the thirty-fifth year the Government would pay 81.34 per cent, and the employees would pay 18.66 per cent.

At the end of the fortieth year the Government would pay 78.39 per cent, and the employees would pay 21.61 per cent.

At the end of the forty-fifth year the Government would pay 76.43 per cent, and the employees would pay 23.57 per cent.

At the end of the fiftieth year the Government would pay 75.24 per cent, and the employees would pay 24.76 per cent.

At the end of the fifty-fifth year the Government would pay 74.65 per cent, and the employees would pay 25.35 per cent.

At the end of the sixtieth year the Government would pay 74.44 per cent, and the employees would pay 25.56 per cent.

At the end of the sixty-fifth year the Government would pay 74.39 per cent, and the employees would pay 25.61 per cent.

At the end of the seventieth year the Government would pay 74.38 per cent, and the employees would pay 25.62 per cent.

At the end of the seventy-fifth year the Government would pay 74.38 per cent, and the employees would pay 25.62 per cent.

Taking the total for the 75 years and averaging the figures, the Government would pay 80 and a fraction per cent, and the employees would pay a fraction less than 20 per cent.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. STERLING. Can the Senator tell me, from the table or the estimate that he has, what the Government would pay in the tenth year in dollars and cents?

Mr. SMOOT. The Government would pay $11,706,324, and the employees would pay $364,300.

Mr. STERLING. Of that amount?

Mr. SMOOT. Of that amount; a total of $12,070,624. The percentages are 96.98 per cent for the Government, and 3.02 per cent for the employees.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Utah misunderstood the question. I want to get it right.

Mr. SMOOT. I may have misunderstood what the Senator said.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator gave a total of something over $12,000,000. I wish the Senator would state again how much the Government would pay. It is eleven million and something.

Mr. SMOOT. Did I say eleven million?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I meant to say $11,706,324.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the total?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. But the Senator gave first the figures that the Government would pay.

Mr. SMOOT. Eleven million seven hundred and six thousand three hundred and twenty-four dollars.

Mr. NORRIS. And then he gave the amount that the employees would pay.

Mr. SMOOT. Three hundred and sixty-four thousand three hundred dollars.

Mr. NORRIS. And then the Senator from South Dakota asked whether the part paid by the employees was not a part of the other sum that the Senator gave.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the Senator from Utah misunderstood the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; then I misunderstood him. I say the total of the two is $12,070,624, and the percentage the Government would pay is 96.98 per cent, and the percentage the employees would pay is 3.02 per cent.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator please state again the amount that the employees would pay at the end of the tenth year?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly—$364,300. The Senator smiles.

Mr. STERLING. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator now that we can prove that that is right.

Mr. STERLING. Just let me suggest to the Senator a few figures. Suppose there are 300,000 employees. They are getting an average of $1,200 a year. Two and a half per cent of that will be how much?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, such a question demonstrates the whole trouble with the theory upon which the committee report has been made up. I do not suppose anything in the statements I have made. We know what the ages are; we know what the employees are receiving; we know when they can retire; and we know what they pay every year under this bill at the assessment of 2½ per cent. There is not any supposition about it. Mr. President, under the committee report that we were asked to consider the estimates made and the number of persons in the various classes are incorrect. I have a statement showing the number of persons in the various classes who will reach retirement age under this bill during the next 17 years. From this statement the Senator will see that the number reaching the retirement age during the 17 years is as follows. Now, there is no guesswork about this, because we know their present ages:

The number of all the employees will be 8,218, but in the committee estimate the number is given at 6,400. The number for the second year is 1,361, and the committee estimate is 1,000. The number for the third year is 1,604, and the committee estimate is 1,000. In other words, they go on for five years with the estimate of 1,000, whereas the number runs all the way from 1,361 up to 2,008. This must be true, because we know their present ages, and if they remain in the Government service we know very well that they will be retired under this bill, and it can not be less than the number I have stated.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, I think I understand the manner in which the distinguished chairman of the committee has been misled in his calculations. The figures which are given by the Senator from Utah give, first, the amount of the cost to the Government, and, secondly, the amount of the annuities which are paid by the annuitants. The difficulty with the Senator from South Dakota is that he is taking into consideration all of the assessments that are paid by all of the employees. A part of those will be paid by annuitants under the figures which are given by the Senator. The others should be credited to the accounts of the hundreds of thousands of employees, and our friend the Senator from South Dakota is borrowing from some of the employees to pay the others. That is the difficulty.

Mr. SMOOT. Just as I referred to before. I will say to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] that under the bill the Government, if it saw fit, need not make an appropriation of a dollar for nearly 10 years, with the exception of the first payment, but in so doing it would be taking the payments of employees to meet future annuities to pay employees on account of age retirement within the 10-year period, but a time will come for the retirement of the employees who are thus used and there will be no reserve to meet the same.

Mr. STERLING. I am glad to have the Senator make that admission, for I think if he makes that admission he must make others.

Mr. SMOOT. I had already made the admission, and I wish to call it to the attention of the Senator again. I thought he was listening to it. This is what I said, and I happen to have it here in writing and I am going to repeat it, so there will be no mistake about it:

> Under this bill the total amount of the retirement allowances the first year will be paid out of the Federal Treasury. With each succeeding year the employees retiring will have provided a larger proportion of their annuities.
> Will the plan provided by this bill be self-supporting in the beginning, and if so, for how long?

This is what I stated:

> It will not require any aid from the Government during the first few years if the Government sees fit to use the contributions of the younger employees to pay the older ones.

> The contributions are more than sufficient to pay the annuities during the first few years, because the number of eligibles will be few at first, but as the number reaching retirement age will increase at about the same rate that the service has increased during the past 30 or 40 years, it is obvious that in a short time the income will be inadequate to cover the entire cost of the plan. If the contributions of all of the employees are accumulated at interest at 4 per cent, compounded annually, and are used to pay the annuities of employees retiring during the first few years, the plan will require no aid from the Government during the first 10 years of its operation.

That is what I said, and that is what I say now. It will be exactly as though the Senator from Nebraska should go to a bank and deposit every month $5, and if he did not draw it for 10 years and the bank had made use of money in paying the withdrawals of some other depositor, the bank would have to raise the money from some other source when the Senator demanded his money.

I wish to call the attention of the Senator to another vital mistake in the estimates of the committee, and very vital. I wish to invite attention to the estimate of separations from service shown on page 4 of the report of the committee. The probable number of employees who will leave the service is shown as 20,000 during each of the first 10 years of the operation of the plan. I have a tabulation which shows the number that will leave the service, according to the actual statistics for the five years ending June 30, 1916; the number that will leave the service according to Mr. Beach's estimate; and the difference. Here they are:

All employees, based on 300,000 as the Senator suggested, the separations will be during the first year 15,290, while Mr. Beach says 20,000; the second year 14,688 and Mr. Beach says 20,000; the third year 14,222 and Mr. Beach says 20,000; the fourth year 15,838 and Mr. Beach says 20,000; the fifth year 15,552, and Mr. Beach says 20,000; the sixth year 13,247 and Mr. Beach says 20,000.

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator please wait until I complete my statement, and then I will yield?

The overstatement of separations, ranging from 4,710 in the first year up to 7,298 in the tenth year, results in a very great underestimate of the cost of the plan.

In this connection I have here estimated the number of employees leaving the service each year to whom contributions must be returned, and I have it for 20 years, as applied to the railway postal clerks, the rural letter carriers, the city letter carriers, the post-office clerks, the mechanics, the general employees of the District of Columbia, the general employees outside of the District of Columbia—to all employees in the Government service—and all based on 300,000 employees. I show the number of refunds and then the difference. That picture itself is enough to convince any Senator that the report of the committee is based upon figures that can not be sustained.

I ask at this point in my remarks that the table to which I have just referred be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

Estimated number of employees leaving the service each year to whom contributions must be returned.

Year. (a)	Railway postal clerks. (b)	Rural letter carriers. (c)	City letter carriers. (d)	Post-office clerks. (e)	Mechanics. (f)	General employees in District of Columbia. Mr. SMOOT. I wish now to say to the Senator from South Dakota that rather than have it claimed that the bill is a half-and-half contributory bill, I would prefer that the Government of the United States pay every cent of the expense. If we are going to be fair, let us be fair to all. If it is a half-and-half contributory plan, let it be so. If it is not, let us say to the employees of the Government, "The Government of the United States will not ask you to contribute a cent." There would be some sense in a plan like that. But this is neither fish nor fowl; it is neither the one thing nor the other.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah how far this comes from the estimates made when the hearings were had on the McKellar bill by Dr. Maddrill in regard to contributions, which was a trifle over 5 per cent. It was insisted that 5 per cent of the salaries would pay the annuities provided for in the McKellar bill, the maximum annuity, I think, being $600.

Mr. SMOOT. I expected the Senator to ask that question, and I hope to be able to answer it in detail.

Mr. POMERENE. Before the Senator from Utah answers the question, allow me to say that the statement just quoted from the hearings on the McKellar bill is another of those very loose statements which are made when it comes to trying at least to minimize the amount to be paid by the Government. Those hearings indicate not that the total cost would be 5 per cent of the salaries paid, but nearly 6 per cent. To use the exact language used by Dr. Maddrill, one of the witnesses, it is to the effect that it would be a few tenths less than 1 per cent over and above 5 per cent, of which amount 2½ per cent would be paid by the employees and 2½ per cent plus a few tenths less than 1 per cent by the Government. That is what it means.

Mr. STERLING. The thought that occurred to me is that even under the corrected figures given by Dr. Maddrill this would be strictly a contributory or partially contributory plan in which the employees would contribute nearly if not quite one-half of the cost of the system. I will quote from the hearings, soon after Dr. Maddrill had changed his view a little in regard to the percentage that would be required, the previous estimate being upon a basis of 5 per cent of the salary of the employees. Five per cent of the salaries of the employees, it was stated, would finance the system, and that it would be a half-and-half system. If the employees paid 2½ per cent as provided in that bill, how much would it lack of being a half-and-half system?

Mr. SMOOT. Why does the Senator speak that way when he knows that the bill has nothing to do with the ages that were provided in the bill to which he has referred? The McKellar bill did not retire the employees at the ages which are provided in the pending bill.

Mr. STERLING. It has something to do with the ages. The ages are approximately the same.

Mr. SMOOT. Approximately is where a part of the difference in cost is found. I desire to answer the question asked by the Senator——

Mr. STERLING. May I, as I started to do, quote from Dr. Maddrill?

Mr. SMOOT. I have a reference to the doctor also in my answer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; to make a statement.

Mr. STERLING. The chairman of the committee said:

> Doctor, you do not feel that there is any doubt about 5 per cent being sufficient to pay the annuities provided for in this bill, do you?
> Mr. MADDRILL. Five per cent will cover the annuity, as provided in the proposed plan.
> Mr. JORDAN. But not in this one?
> Mr. MADDRILL. It will be five and a fraction in this one.

The CHAIRMAN. I thought you stated before that 5 per cent would cover it.

Mr. MADDRILL. My statement was that the 5 per cent would come within a few tenths of 1 per cent.

Mr. JORDAN. It can be referred to still as a 5 per cent bill?

Mr. MADDRILL. It can be referred to still as a 5 per cent bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, let me answer the Senator if he is through.

Mr. STERLING. He says it can still be referred to as a 5 per cent plan.

Mr. POMERENE. It was Mr. Jordan who made that statement.

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; he does make it.

Mr. STERLING. So does Dr. Maddrill. I read:

Mr. JORDAN. It can be referred to still as a 5 per cent bill?

Mr. MADDRILL. It can be referred to still as a 5 per cent bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; it can be referred to, but it is not so.

I will answer the Senator's question and say Mr. Beach and Mr. McCoy used the tables prepared by Dr. Maddrill. The table submitted by Dr. Maddrill and printed in the hearings before Senator MCKELLAR's committee were compiled exclusively with reference to the McKellar bill and could not be used in calculating the cost of the Sterling bill, because the groupings of the employees in the two bills are entirely different, as shown in the table. I hope the Senator will follow this statement.

As to the group of railway postal clerks, the age of retirement under the Sterling bill is 60 years, under the McKellar bill 65 years. That is where that five-year service brings to the Government of the United States, as I have already said, not only the amount that the postal clerk pays for the five years toward meeting the annuity when he retires, but the Government of the United States receives for five years compound interest upon all of the payments that he has made during the whole time, and that amounts to perhaps almost as much as the preceding 20 years amount to.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator from Utah state how many of those railway postal clerk employees there are?

Mr. SMOOT. I think I have put that statement in the RECORD already and I am not going to refer to it again, but I do desire to complete my answer.

For another group, the city letter carriers, the age of retirement under the Sterling bill is 62 years, the age under the McKellar bill was 65 years; rural carriers, under the Sterling bill 62 years, under the McKellar bill 65 years; mechanics, under the Sterling bill 62 years and under the McKellar bill 65 years; post-office clerks, under the Sterling bill 62 years, under the McKellar bill 68 years; general employees, 65 years under the Sterling bill and 68 years under the McKellar bill. In all the bills previously reported to the Senate the retirement age was 70 years, the very lowest that had ever been reported before.

I desire that Senators shall know that the additional age of retirement of five years is what imposes upon the Government of the United States the burdensome payments of 75 per cent of cost as against 25 per cent by the employees.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. KELLOGG. I find it utterly impossible to reconcile the estimates given by the Senator from South Dakota and those given by the Senator from Utah. As I understood the Senator from Utah, he stated that at the end of the tenth year the Government would be contributing approximately 96 per cent and the employees 4 per cent, while the statement made by the Senator from South Dakota is that at the end of 10 years the Government would be contributing only about 60 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that if he will go to the Bureau of Efficiency and examine an individual case under the figures that I have given—and what will apply to an individual case will apply to all employees when we know the total number that we are to figure on and that we are all agreed upon—and carry that one case through to the end, I am positive that he will find that the figures I have given are correct.

Mr. KELLOGG. Then the Senator from Utah insists that the figures of the Senator from South Dakota are not correct?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and I have called attention to that fact. I have placed in the RECORD a statement showing the number of persons of the various classes who will reach the age of retirement under the bill during the next 17 years, and from that statement the Senator will see that the total number who will reach the age of retirement during the next 17 years is as I shall state.

Note the difference between the actual figures and the estimates made in the report of the committee:

The first year the number of employees reaching the age of retirement, and we know their ages, are 8,218. The estimate in the committee report is 6,400. The second year the number would be 1,361. The committee report says 1,000. The third year the number would be 1,604, and the committee report says 1,000; the fourth year 1,790, and the committee report says 1,000; the fifth year 1,963, and the committee report says 1,000; the sixth year 2,088, and the committee report says 1,000. There need be no guessing about the numbers. I will say further that I called attention to the number of refunds as to all employees, based on 300,000, for the first 10 years, and this greatly affects the cost to be paid by the Government. The committee report shows the number of refunds under the bill will be 20,000 a year for the first 10 years. Based on the actual figures, the highest number of refunds will be 15,290, and at the end of the tenth year will be but 12,702 instead of 20,000, as claimed in the committee report. Of course that is sufficient to make a great part of the difference between the actual cost and the estimated cost of the committee. If we are to have a retirement plan, as I said before, let us have one that employees in the Government service can not say they have contributed a cent to it, or else let us have a contributory plan as was first intended and has always been intended and is what the pending bill is claimed to be, but is not.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him at that point?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. I am sure the Senator will recall that employees of the Government generally object to a straight pension plan, and this is out of the abundance of experience that employees had under the British law. It turned out that every time the employees would ask for an increase in their pay they would constantly be reminded that they had a straight pension, and so forth, so that it developed later that that portion of the employees who were under the straight pension plan were paid less than those who were contributing to their pension. That is the experience everywhere.

Mr. SMOOT. If it were not for taking too much space in the RECORD I should like to have a copy of the statement that was made in the British Parliament 60 years after the first retirement bill went into effect in England, showing the mistakes that were made and how they were made. I desire to say now that if we pass the pending bill as reported to the Senate, it will not be 60 years before Senators will arise upon the floor of the Senate stating that those who passed the bill and who made the reports upon it knew very little about what the cost of it would be. Yes, as far as I am concerned, I would rather have a bill that would require the Government to pay every cent of the annuity, so that no employees of the Government could say that the Government retained one cent of their salaries to pay for their annuities at retirement.

Mr. President, I have enough data before me to occupy not only the balance of this day but another day, but what is the use?

I will close for to-day by stating to the few Senators who are in the Chamber that if we could have 75 Senators present who would remain two hours and discuss this bill in all its details I know what would happen to it. It would be just what happened before when we discussed this question and when the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] offered his bill as a substitute for the McKellar bill.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. MYERS. If the Senator from Utah will permit me, I will suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; I will not yield for that purpose, for I desire to conclude. I will ask the Senator not to make that suggestion now.

Mr. MYERS. Then I withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, at this time I shall for the present conclude what I have to say. Later on I may say a few words more. I desire to get the tables which I wish to put into the RECORD in shape so that they will summarize the whole case.

I desire again to assure Senators that I am in sympathy with a retirement plan; I think such a plan is absolutely necessary and I should dislike to see the defeat of all legislation of this character; but I do not desire a bill to go through the Senate of the United States upon a false basis. Remember, Senators, that every Senator who votes for this bill, based upon the figures furnished in the committee report, will live to see the day when he will and must admit they are not correct.

Pensions for the Spanish War and Other War Veterans.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN W. SUMMERS,

OF WASHINGTON,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, March 1, 1920.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, more than 20 years have passed since the world stood appalled at the cruelties, the outrages, and the butcheries that were implicated upon the weak and helpless Cubans by the Spanish Armies. More than 20 years since an overwrought, humane, and justice-loving United States was shocked by the sinking of the Maine in Habana Harbor and the slaughter of our own citizens.

Then came the call to arms to vindicate our rights and to maintain the honor and the supremacy of the Stars and Stripes. Within a remarkably short time 335,000 volunteers joined with 100,000 Regulars and entrained for southern camps, while tens of thousands of us who tendered our services were denied an opportunity to serve.

These strong and sturdy young patriots were taken to hastily constructed, insanitary camps, located in a climate to which most of the men were not accustomed. They were fed upon unwholesome food and were stricken with malaria, dysentery, typhoid, and other semitropical diseases by the thousands and by the tens of thousands. Medicines were scarce and, unfortunately for the men, medical records were poorly and incompletely kept, so that Spanish-American War veterans from my district, and no doubt from every district in the United States, are finding great difficulty in establishing the connecting link between the insidious, undermining illness of 22 years ago and the physical disability of to-day.

Through the Pension Department and by special bills I am endeavoring to secure tardy justice for these veterans of my district, but the burden of proof falls upon a petitioner who seeks in vain through the War Department for records which were never kept.

In Cuba, in the Philippines, and in China they participated in 826 battles, engagements, and skirmishes, in which 515 men were killed or wounded. Their record is little less than marvelous. While hurriedly recruited, poorly equipped, and fed on hardtack and the appetizing flesh of bucking bronchos, they fought on foreign soil and never lost by capture a man, a boat, a gun, nor an inch of ground. But disease claimed 11,500 of them. Thus, disease and bullets claimed 12,000 men out of an army of 435,000 in 1898 and 1899, while sanitation and warfare had made such progress than an American Army of 800,000 only lost 8,634 men during the first 12 months of the great World War.

Spanish-American War vetersans are patriotic leaders in every community and have been loath to press their claims, but now that the ravages of long-lurking diseases are being felt, there comes to this Congress the patriotic duty of lending a helping hand. The bill provides:

Be it enacted, etc., That all persons who served 90 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the War with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, and the China relief expedition, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from any mental or physical disability or disabilities of a permanent character, not the result of their own vicious habits, which so incapacitates them from the performance of manual labor as to render them unable to earn a support, shall, upon making due proof of the fact, according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, be placed upon the list of invalid pensioners of the United States, and be entitled to receive a pension not exceeding $30 per month and not less than $12 per month, proportioned to the degree of inability to earn a support; and in determining such inability each and every infirmity shall be duly considered, and the aggregate of the disabilities shown be rated, and such pension shall commence from the date of the filing of the application in the Bureau of Pensions, after the passage of this act, upon proof that the disability or disabilities then existed, and shall continue during the existence of the same: Provided, That any such person who has reached the age of 62 years shall, upon making proof of such fact, be placed upon the pension roll and entitled to receive a pension of $12 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 68 years, $18 per month; in case such person has reached the age of 72 years, $24 per month; and in case such person has reached the age of 75 years, $30 per month: Provided further, That persons who are now receiving pensions under existing laws, or whose claims are pending in the Bureau of Pensions, may, by application to the Commissioner of Pensions, in such form as he may prescribe, showing themselves entitled thereto, receive the benefits of this act; and nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent any pensioner thereunder from prosecuting his claim and receiving his pension under any other general or special act: Provided, however, That no person shall receive more than one pension for the same period: And provided further, That rank in the service shall not be considered in applications filed under this act.

SEC. 2. That no agent, attorney, or other person engaged in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting any claim under the provisions of this act, shall, directly or indirectly, contract for, demand, receive, or retain for such services in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting such claim a sum greater than $20, and any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section, or who shall wrongfully withhold from a pensioner or claimant the whole or any part of a pension or claim allowed or due such pensioner or claimant under this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall, for each and every such offense, be fined not exceeding $500, or be imprisoned at hard labor not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

While Civil War pensions have always been opposed by the great majority of Southern Members, the Spanish-American War was not a sectional war and I can not understand the opposition of the gentlemen from Texas [Messrs CONNALLY, BLACK, and RAYBURN]. They insist they are opposed to the general policy of pensions. On the other hand, may I say, no legislation has appealed to me more than that which gives at least some degree of justice and comfort and support to the men of all American wars, who have upheld American rights and American standards and who have preserved to us a Nation and a flag that are the just pride of every American patriot.

I sincerely trust the Senate may give the bill the favorable and speedy consideration which it has received in the House.

National Victory Memorial Building.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROYAL C. JOHNSON,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVE

Thursday, February 26, 1920.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the great book of America's participation in the World War requires the erection of a formal national symbol of its effort, sacrifice, achievement and glory—an enduring physical memorial monument—of some kind. Without it the war and all it means would seem to pass into history like a denoted but unmarked grave. There is need for an enduring record in lasting material of the esteem in which the Republic holds the heroic fighting men; the tireless labor and business leaders who directed the industrial mobilization and administration of the country; and the magnificent contribution in effort and sacrifice of the women of the land.

Such a memorial must be more than a beautiful monument; it must be of patriotic service—the national center of patriotic activities and the conserver of the lessons of the war; the gathering place of great national societies, the home of conventions, and the preserver of invaluable records of the war effort in all its phases.

This war memorial for the Nation as a whole is to be erected in Washington, the Capital, and is to take the form of a majestic national victory memorial building. Congress has donated the site for the building on the spacious Mall, about halfway between the White House and the Capitol, adjoining the new National Museum, and has authorized the George Washington Memorial Association to collect the necessary funds for its construction and maintenance—$10,000,000.

Plans for the building were submitted in open competition by many of the leading architects of the country. From them the Society of Fine Arts selected the design submitted by Tracy & Swartwout, architects of the Missouri State Capitol and of other public buildings throughout the country.

It is the essence of the memorial idea and of the plans that the building shall be at once a noble monument to the men and women of the great struggle and importantly and nationally useful. It will supply a long-felt national want—an edifice that will be the national center of the quasi official and unofficial public life of the Nation. There is no place in the National Capital large enough or dignified enough to house the great social gatherings, conferences, and conventions that will naturally be held in Washington, such as the annual meetings of the great national associations and patriotic societies, inauguration functions, international conferences, musical festivals, and so forth.

There is need also for a fitting place in which may be kept many of the public and private documents and records relating to America's part in the Great War. By housing such papers in a monumental building, where they may be classified, studied, digested, and referred to, it will become and remain a perpetual source of information and inspiration, thus preserving the lessons of the war, preparing the Nation for wars that may yet come, and making of the commemorative building something that will be daily of patriotic service.

A GREAT AUDITORIUM.

The national victory memorial building will contain an auditorium accommodating more than 7,000 persons, several smaller halls and reception rooms; a banquet hall seating more than 700 persons; a special room for each State in the Union and for each of its outlying possessions; national headquarters rooms for the George Washington Memorial Association, the National Council of Women and its affiliated organizations, and Washington headquarters for the American Legion and other patriotic, industrial, social, and civic bodies of a national character.

In front of the great building will be a suitable victory commemoration statue or statuary group surrounded by beautiful gardens, which will be particularly symbolical of the part played by the women of America in the Great War.

The national victory memorial building conception has been approved by persons high in the official, educational, social, and industrial life of the country, including the President, all the members of the Cabinet, and the governors of all the States. They commend it as a most necessary addition to Washington's great group of national buildings as well as a fitting tribute to the epoch of the World War. The idea has also been indorsed by the churches and the most prominent fraternal, patriotic, and social organizations of national scope.

The building, together with the endowment fund, will be administered by the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, of which the President of the United States is the presiding officer.

A MONUMENT OF SERVICE.

More than half a million dollars has already been subscribed, and many more thousands have been promised. It is intended to raise quickly the whole of the $10,000,000 required, so that work may be begun at once and rushed rapidly to completion.

The victory building will not only commemorate the war, but it will preserve within its walls many of the original records of the manifold activities of the American people in relation to the war. American business men and toilers played as great a part in the war as did the fighting men themselves. In no other war did they participate so greatly and decisively as in this war, but no permanent record of their work has been compiled. Neither is any record being kept of the splendid service rendered by the women of America in the organization and conducting of the war effort. The George Washington Memorial Association purposes to place in the public archives of the national victory memorial building the histories of the participation by America's women and her industrial leaders in the World War. It is intended to preserve in the building also the official records of the cooperation between business and industry, the women of the country and the masses of the civilian cooperators and the Government, such as the records and files of the Council of National Defense, the War Industries Board, the War Trade Board, the Committee of Public Information, the Division of Planning and Statistics, and possibly of the district and local draft boards, and so forth.

Personal records will also be kept of the services rendered by those who assist in the organization required to raise the building fund, of those who contribute to the fund, of the men and boys who served under the flag, and of those who gave their lives.

THE WOMEN'S WORK.

Inasmuch as the national victory memorial building is to commemorate the work the women did for the soldiers and the Nation, as well as the deeds of the fighting men and the patriotic labors of men of affairs, it has been decided that as a fitting finale of their war work the privilege of raising the fund shall be theirs, and that the enterprise shall be directed by the Women's Division of the Council of National Defense. To the Women's Division has been tendered the active cooperation and support of the National Council of Women and of the Council of National Defense itself, which is a permanent governmental agency in peace as well as in war. Many other organizations of a public or patriotic nature have offered to cooperate.

A well-known author writes of the national victory momorial building project as follows:

"As the curtain descends on the last act in the greatest drama of all history comes the consciousness of a demand for a fitting token in commemoration of the deeds of American men.

"The Nation's heart pumps quick with emotion at the sight of her returning heroes; it bleeds with the wounds which her manhood has suffered; it swells with justifiable pride at her thorough, decisive achievement. The whole Nation, as though actuated by a single mind, desires a perpetual tribute to those millions of her men who saved the day for self-government and brought peace to a stricken world.

"And so the George Washington Memorial Association arose to the occasion. Its project already is under way—a national victory memorial building, which will link the glories of Washington and Pershing, the spirit of '17 and the spirit of '76. The mettle which endured at Valley Forge triumphed in the Argonne. The men of '76 may sleep in peace.

"What, indeed, more fitting than a linking up for all time of these great epochs of American life? Where, indeed, a place more suitable for such acknowledgment of a nation's debt to her men than the Nation's Capital?

"Congress has granted the George Washington Memorial Association an ideal location on the Mall, in the center of the city of Washington, which formerly was occupied by the Pennsylvania Station.

A SUPREME ARCHITECTURAL GLORY.

"On this site will be erected immediately, according to designs which have been selected in a competition of foremost American architects, a majestic monument—not a monument in the accepted meaning of the term, but a monument in the form of a spacious and architecturally beautiful building, to be daily devoted to patriotic utilities, to national and international conventions and usages, and to be made the center of both American and world activity. This national memorial structure at Washington, of course, is to be apart from the many arches and columns and shafts to be erected in the local communities. It is to be a practical monument to the memory and eternal honor of the Nation's men and women. It must be inspiringly grand and beautiful. The exterior will therefore be one of the supreme architectural glories of the world.

"The central feature of the edifice will be a national auditorium of spacious dimensions, thus giving to the Nation's capital what, strangely enough, it now entirely lacks—a public meeting place of ample size. It will be completely canopied by an acoustical dome three times the diameter of the dome of St. Peter's. This auditorium will seat 7,000 people and will consist of a main floor of 38,500 square feet and a gallery of 10,000 square feet. Here in the future will be held inaugural receptions, national and international conventions, concerts, public ceremonies, and celebrations.

"A great war, nobly undertaken, bravely and victoriously fought, proving that after the lapse of nearly 150 years the hopes, principles, and aspirations of the founders of the Nation are still cherished, will thus receive adequate national memorial acknowledgment.

"What the Pantheon is to France, Westminster Abbey to Britain, such in some degree and manner the national victory memorial will be to America. Greatly conceived, nationally erected, dedicated to patriotism, it will stand through the generations as the national monument raised in the awful presence of the world's greatest political convulsion to commemorate the victorious feats of American democracy in arms. Hallowed by the passage of time, stored with the pictures and sculptuary that will record the achievements of the Republic and its conspicuous sons from age to age, it will become the Mecca of American patriotism and an inexhaustible source of stimulation to national duty and service.

"You gave your sons—you gave your services—that democracy might live. The opportunity is now offered to perpetuate the memory of your sons' great deeds and your own sacrifices."

A unique and peculiarly appropriate plan for raising the funds required for the erection of the building has been devised by a business man who is the world's leading distributor and producer in his line. It has been called the service-star plan and is described as follows:

SERVICE STAR PLAN.

CONTRIBUTIONS ARE A PRIVILEGE.

"The service-star plan, by which the fund to erect the national victory memorial building is to be raised, was submitted to many representative men and women and national organizations and numerous commercial, financial, industrial, and educational institutions and was approved by them.

"It will be recalled that early in the war every family, business house, club, college, factory, community, or institution of any sort took up the practice of displaying flags with a star thereon for each member of the organization serving with the colors—hence the name, 'service flag.' These flags were displayed as a mark of honor, respect, and gratitude to the service men and as a proud proof of the organization's representation in the war effort. To the boys themselves the thought that somewhere at home at least one service flag had a star that represented them individually had a tremendously inspiring and gratifying effect. It seemed as if a shining symbol of their sacrificial spirit had been left at home to cheer their dear ones. And mothers, fathers, brothers, sisters, and sweethearts, and organizations did derive solace and pride from those stars. They also meant much of inspiration and cheer to all of us who remained behind. Wherever one went there was always before his eyes a stimulus to his own patriotic bit, whatever it was, in these reminders of how much more others were doing. These flags will remain indefinitely among the treasured relics and records of families and all manner of associations of men and women.

"Now, the central idea of the service-star plan is to have every one of the more than 4,000,000 service stars represented in the victory memorial building and to have the stars themselves actually, separately, and individually reproduced on some suitable surface in the building, thus in effect making a great national service flag which will for all time be a visual record and reminder of what each and all of the 'boys' did. Supplementing the transferred stars will be the records of honor of the men and women who sacrificed and toiled behind the lines that victory might be ours.

"In fact, the whole great national victory memorial building will be, figuratively, the Nation's service flag, thus preserving in the national recollection and consciousness what is so sacredly preserved in every home, for every brick and stone in it will proceed from the idea and the idealism of the service flags.

"Under the service-star plan each individual employer, institution, club, church, college, organization, or community, as the case may be, will be permitted the honor of financial representation in proportion to the number of stars in its respective flag—$5 for each blue star and $100 for each gold star, and no more.

"For example, if a given firm had 10 men in the service, 2 of whom did not return, it would be entitled to have the stars on its service flag represented in the national victory memorial building and be permitted to raise in its organization and contribute $200 for the two gold stars and $40 for the eight blue stars, or a total of $240.

IN SMALL COMMUNITIES.

"While in larger towns and cities the service stars and honor rolls will be fully represented by a careful inclusion of all employers, clubs, associations, institutions, and so forth, that had the privilege of displaying service flags, it will be advisable in small communities and in country districts to treat them as units and call upon the local representatives of the plan in such localities to ascertain the number of stars that represent the community as a whole, and see that the representative amount is subscribed by the community in order that their service flag or honor roll is represented. As it may often happen that a 'star' family is not in a position to avail itself of its privilege from its own means, other interested families, better circumstanced, will doubtless count it a special privilege to contribute beyond their proportion. Again, as the honor of the whole community is involved, it would be proper here for those who have no service-star associations through family or business or social relationship to be permitted to share in the raising of the fund. In a word, the smaller communities may be treated as a large family, whose sons honored them with the right to display service stars; and, in fact, many such communities did display community service flags or honor rolls.

"When the campaign is concluded the service stars will be carefully recorded, as represented in the building fund raised through it; and in due time will, figuratively speaking, be transferred to the national victory memorial building, where each star will be reproduced probably with the initials and possibly the name of the man it stands for, each in its proper geographical group, so that it may be readily located. The details of the manner in which this shall be done have not yet been completely worked out, but it is now the intention of the architects to use the interior walls and the ceiling of the great dome of the auditorium for that purpose. Thus it will be possible for the service men themselves and their associates who made possible the great memorial building, and their relatives and friends, to realize by aid of physical vision that the edifice of patriotic honor was raised from sources that honor them intimately, and that their spirit is built into the lofty structure and visually symbolized in the reproduced service stars. The men of this war and their children from generation unto generation will feel, as they visit the great temple of patriotism, that it is theirs in substance, sentiment, and symbol.

"So it will come about by this unique plan the national victory memorial building will be more intimately and sacredly related to the cause it honors than any other public building erected in all the history of the world. No unit that has the right to participation in this patriotic enterprise will for a moment hesitate to avail itself of that right."

Pershing, and others, and excerpts from the law granting the site for the building, and a portion of the address of Wallace D. Simmons, of St. Louis, before the biennial convention of the National Women's Council.

SOME COMMENTS ON THE NATIONAL VICTORY MEMORIAL.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington.

Mrs. SUSAN WHITNEY DIMOCK,
Scott Circle, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MRS. DIMOCK: I have noted with genuine interest the plans of the George Washington Memorial Association for a memorial to the Boys of 1917 as well as those of '76. No one could withhold approval from such plans. They undoubtedly express what the heart of the whole country approves.

Cordially and sincerely, yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

Mrs. HENRY F. DIMOCK,
President George Washington Memorial Association,
Washington:

I indorse in strong terms the efforts of the George Washington Memorial Association to raise funds for the construction of the national victory memorial in Washington. This building, dedicated to the gallant men who have died for their country, will be of great value in offering headquarters for the various war memorial associations, and will afford facilities, which have heretofore been lacking, for conventions that may be called from time to time to honor the memory of the dead and to help those who have fought and survived the conflict.

PERSHING.

David Jayne Hill: "I consider the Washington memorial the most important of the movements of this kind now appealing to the patriotism of the country and shall neglect no opportunity to urge upon all my friends who are able to promote it by their generous consideration."

Hon. William H. Taft: "The memorial must be accomplished on a magnificent scale."

Hon. Elihu Root: "Such a building is very much needed, and if erected will contribute very materially toward the process of conference, consultation, discussion, awakening of public interest and conscience, reconciliation of views, recognition of abuses—the processes through which a great self-governing people works out its problems and reaches its results."

President Hadley: "It will certainly be a most worthy memorial."

Dr. William Welch: "One of the most urgent needs is a suitable meeting place for national and international societies in Washington."

Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior: "It is a most happy idea to make the George Washington memorial a memorial to our soldiers and sailors of 1917."

Frank P. Glass, president American Newspaper Publishers' Association: "The need of such a building at Washington as well as the desirability of such a memorial is manifest to every thinking citizen."

Hon. Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War: "I am naturally interested in projects which aim to memorialize the splendid services of the American soldiers in the Great War. My interest in the George Washington Memorial Association, however, has an added spur from the fact that it associates those who defended our institutions in 1917 with those who established them in 1776, and covers the patriotic fathers and the patriotic sons with the great and inspiring name of George Washington, whose work is only now showing its full fruits. Washington will undoubtedly become some day a city of great memorials. There ought, therefore, to be a memorial of this war, and as your association plans to make such a memorial useful and an addition to the public facilities of the city, it is especially to be commended. I wish the project every success, expressing as it does the grateful sentiments of the country for its soldiers."

Admiral Henry T. Mayo, United States Navy: "It is a memorial to the service of the young men; those who lived on field rations and sometimes no rations at all; who endured the mud and the cold and rain on the front in France; who suffered from wounds and disease; who lost limbs, eyesight; and who to the number of fifty or sixty thousand made the supreme sacrifice."

[Excerpts from an address by Wallace D. Simmons, president Simmons Hardware Co., to the biennial convention of the National Women's Council, St. Louis, Nov. 12, 1919.]

DON'T FURL YOUR SERVICE FLAGS; IMMORTALIZE THEM.

"I greet you as representative women of America, and as such I address to you this message of commendation of a great and beautiful work which is about to be undertaken by the women of this country as a fitting finale of their wonderful work during the war. It revealed to the world a new concept of American character and was a large factor in giving to this Nation the new place it now holds and should keep in the esteem of all peoples.

"So rapidly are great history-making events coming, one upon the heels of another, that I am constantly reminded that 'we live in deeds, not in years.'

"It seems to me this thought is particularly applicable to the work which has been undertaken by the George Washington Memorial Association, because it is designed not only to memorialize the heroic deeds of all defenders of America's liberty, but thereby to inspire worthy deeds by others for all time to come.

"I do not know when any project has impressed me so favorably right from the beginning as that of having the women of America undertake the erection of this beautiful memorial to the soldiers, sailors, and marines who have done their parts in the establishment and the preservation of those great principles of democracy which have made these United States of America the foremost of all nations and which have enabled its people to assist all other peoples in their efforts for freedom and in their progress toward government by the consent of the governed.

"The project seemed to me to have in its make-up not only all the elements necessary to what is usually deemed to constitute success in such efforts, but what appealed to me particularly were its wonderfully great possibilities for widespread and most beneficial influence not only upon our own people of this and coming generations but upon all other peoples. It appeals to me as having potential influence upon the future of the world to an extent which it is difficult to foresee.

"It is very gratifying to me to know that my suggestion of a plan by which the money might be readily and promptly raised has been deemed worthy of adoption, and even of being protected by copyright, and I think it fitting that I should tell you of a situation which I find exists quite generally throughout the country and which suggested to me the idea of having the service flag the basis of a popular subscription.

"The nature of our business brings me into most intimate and sympathetic touch with the people in all parts of the country, not only in the larger cities and towns but even in the smaller villages of every State in the Union.

"I know that not only among the larger business firms in our cities, but to an even greater degree among the people of these smaller towns and villages, there is a feeling that what we started out to do in the unfurling of our service flags is now lacking in some final ceremony through which we might make permanent, in fitting manner, that record of which we are all proud and of which our service flags were the first exponents.

"There is universal reluctance to put aside and to appear to forget this outward evidence of our worthy pride in the relatives and friends who joined the colors to fight for the greatest and most unselfish cause that ever brought together a great force of fighting men.

"These are the thoughts to which frequent expression is given whenever the question of the service flag is discussed:

"'We want to do something, something worthy of the occasion, something that will satisfy the depth of feeling in our hearts. But what can our little village do with its limited resources? What could be done with the few dollars that we could raise here, even to the straining of our purses?'

"There seems to be a universal desire to do some big and beautiful and fitting thing, in which each group may have its full and proportionate part, something in which all may feel that they have had their full share, and to which all have contributed on the same basis.

"I can not imagine a plan for meeting this universal desire with more general satisfaction than the erection of this beautiful temple in the Nation's Capital, not alone to be a memorial to all who took part in this great World War but also to link them up for all time in the memories of our people with the patriots of former generations who fought and died that freedom might live.

A PLAN THAT APPEALS.

"So it seems to me your plan has a most unusual setting. First, you have a great subject. There never was one more worthy of commemoration. Next, you have a great people, who are not only ready to cooperate in doing something of this kind—they are most patriotically restive to put some such fitting final touch upon the great work which was done so well. And last, but by no means least in importance, you have assured a memorial which in beauty and artistic merit will leave nothing to be desired. That is guaranteed through its selection by a jury of most competent judges and from a number of designs submitted by the best and foremost architects of the entire country and by the high quality of other work by the same men—work which has been pronounced by our ablest critics as the best work done in America.

"So, as I see it, you have a great subject, a most beautiful design for your building, a country anxious for just such a project, and a plan that will appeal to them so instantly that it is only a question of working out the details of your nation-wide organization through which to reach the American people with a message to this effect:

"'The women of America have undertaken to build in the Nation's Capital a beautiful and fitting memorial to the soldiers, sailors, and marines who have fought for America's freedom.

"'Instead of allowing a few wealthy people to contribute the required funds, we mean to allow the people throughout the length and breadth of the land to do that upon a basis of share and share alike, and in such a manner as to make it a burden to none, but an equal honor to all.

"'We find among the American people everywhere a feeling that there should be some fitting and final sequel to the unfurling of our service flags—some permanent record of our pride in them and in those whose patriotism they symbolized.

"'We find that by allowing all to contribute in proportion to the number of stars in their service flags, it will keep easily within the giving ability of even the smallest village an opportunity to have the same proportionate share in erecting this great national memorial as will be given to the richest metropolitan district in any State in the Union.

"'We propose to invite all to share alike in this democratic plan in order that the building and its memorials may be representative of our whole people, rather than any one class or geographical section.'

"The germ of the success of the service flag was in its personal touch: First of all, in the single-star flag which hung in the window of the little country home, and then in the flag of the village which the good ladies of the sewing circle made and hung with great pride over the principal street as evidence of that little community's patriotism. Each star in those flags stood for an individual in somebody's heart, and the success of this plan to perpetuate the sentiment of the service flag will be largely in proportion as you find a definite manner of making these fathers and mothers and wives and sisters and daughters and sons feel that this memorial is designed to perpetuate the memory of that particular service star—that it is to establish and keep alive for all time the record that John Lawrence Adams was one of those who served his country in the Great War for humanity.

"Put that kind of personal touch into your plan. Make it definitely effective in some simple, practical manner, and for every man who wore Uncle Sam's uniform you will have at least a mother or a wife or a daughter or a father or a son, or all of them, enthusiastically working for the success of your movement.

IMMORTALIZING THE SERVICE FLAG.

"Say to them that instead of withdrawing from view that service star of which they are so justly proud, you propose to display it in the Nation's Capital in a beautiful memorial temple, where it will stand as a public record for all time. Say to them:

"'We mean to put that service star where it will never cease to shine forth as an evidence of his patriotism and an example to future Americans to support the Government of the United States and the principles for which it stands.' Say to them:

"'We mean to place there, in that beautiful temple, where you and your great-grandchildren may always see it, a star bearing his initials and other identification marks, so that it may be found there a hundred years hence by your descendants when they go to the Nation's Capital to see the memorial to the men who have helped to make and save to them this land of the free.'

"But how can we put into effect such a program of individual record, one that will measure up to such a prospectus? That, it seems to me, is only a matter of detail, and one which, in comparison to similar war work in which I took part during my two years' service in Washington, will be very simple.

"My first thought is of the great dome over the convention hall. Could there be any more appropriate treatment of it than that of a starry heaven, each star bearing marks which in military language are called name, rank, and organization, necessary to associate it with the individual for whom it stands? The location or grouping of these stars could be worked out geographically, so that all of those which appeared in the service flag of some small town would be found together.

"I believe the whole 4,000,000 stars could be thus placed, the location of each duly charted, and the result be not only most effective from an artistic standpoint, but when considered with respect to human interest and the influence it may exert in the future upon our national life will be wholly beyond comparison with that of any other building that was ever erected.

"If it should be found not practical to place all of the 4,000,000 stars in the great dome of the convention hall, as I hope they can be, certainly the golden stars can be placed there and the blue stars used to make up some unique and appropriate decoration which your architects are so eminently qualified to design for this Temple of the Stars.

"The way to test the real merit of such a project is to intelligently think out just what will be its effect and influence upon people; and with that idea let us for a moment draw one or two mental pictures of the scenes that may be brought about by the influence of this building upon those who will visit it.

"Let us think first of the poor mother whose son fell in France, a martyr to the cause of humanity. She feels that only in her heart is now being fittingly kept alive the memory of that supreme sacrifice. She yearns to see some permanent memorial of it, but she has not the means to do anything that will satisfy that most natural and worthy ambition. Think of the joy that will come to her when she learns of the project of building this beautiful temple and of placing in it a golden star, to be definitely identified as her boy's star, in order to make it evident to the world that this great temple has been erected to memoralize his service and that of others who fought for the cause—but as much for him as for any other one man, whether general or private."

In Opposition to Compulsory Military Training.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WELLS GOODYKOONTZ,
OF WEST VIRGINIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, March 6, 1920.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, the bill now under consideration, brought before this body by the Appropriations Committee, on its face clearly indicates a good-faith effort on the part of that committee to reduce expenditures. Almost every section of the bill shows a reduction not only below the estimate of the department calling for the appropriation but, indeed, below what in normal times would be a reasonable appropriation for the particular object or purpose involved. The people who sent me here as their Representative in Congress insist on retrenchment. They want a reduction of the cost and expense of every department and bureau of the Government, except, of course, in those rare cases where such reduction would unduly cripple the service and prejudice the interests of the public. Systematically and almost constantly have I voted against every amendment to increase expenditures and for every amendment tending to reduce expenditures. While I am on this subject of economy in governmental affairs, I propose to say a word in opposition to what I regard as the un-American policy of compulsory military education. It seems that the President, the Secretary of War, the General Staff, and a majority of the members of the Committee on Military Affairs of both the House and the Senate are in favor of the passage of a law compelling young men of a certain age to enter a military school and be subject to Army discipline and regulations and be forced to take military education and training. Members of the respective committees who favor this plan and proposition are mainly from communities that have been engaged in manufacturing the implements of war. Insidious propaganda is being circulated to induce Members of Congress to vote for the bill. Not long ago I received through the mails an illustrated booklet which must have cost more than a dollar the copy, sent out by a society styling itself "Universal Military Training League." I have no means of knowing how many of these booklets have been distributed throughout the land, but the cost of printing and circulating them perhaps ran well up into the thousands of dollars. Who is putting up the money for this propaganda? What insidious influences are working for this compulsory business?

We have hundreds of military schools and academies in this country. Also the War College, at Washington; the Military Academy, at West Point; and the Naval Academy, at Annapolis. But these do not seem to be sufficient to meet the requirements of those who are inoculated with the military germ. It is true that the present proposition only provides that the young man shall be required to attend a military school for six months, but if the measure should be enacted into law, and the country be taxed for an amount estimated all the way between four hundred millions and a billion dollars annually, then it will be insisted that military education can not be completed within six months, which assertion we would immediately recognize as absolutely true, and that, therefore, the time for such schooling should be extended to 12 months, and Congress would be besieged and bombarded with propaganda for an extension of the term to 12 months. This done, it would be only a little while until there would come another agitation and more propaganda, and in the meanwhile the military would have gotten into the saddle, for a further extension, this time to two years. Having been successful in that effort we then would find ourselves in the same predicament as Germany for years before and at the time of the World War. By this gradual process of induction our country would be transformed from an American democracy into a Prussian military camp.

Since I came to Congress I have had much advice from certain older Members. These generally advise never to commit oneself on a given proposition until necessity compels, but I am not a "time server." My object is not to stay in Congress, but rather to give expression to honest views. I regard it as a duty, when under a conviction, not to remain in silence and follow public opinion, but rather to undertake to lead the minds of the people in what I believe to be the proper direction. Members of Congress are presumed to have been chosen for their fitness to represent their constituents. Their time is devoted to a study of the questions—public questions—that concern the welfare and happiness of the people. If Members of Congress be so cowardly or weak as to shirk this responsibility in the hope of sustaining themselves in public life, then they are unworthy of the trust and confidence that the people have reposed in them.

Should my mind change on this subject, I will have the courage to say so and to reverse myself, but now, in the light of the present, my understanding and convictions are entirely and strongly opposed to the military plan. The Secretary of War insists upon a peace-time Army of 600,000 men, not to include officers. This shows the military spirit that takes hold of a man after he gets into the Army or at the head of the Department of War. We well know that the Secretary, before he was put at the head of the department, was the last man in the world to stand for a great standing army. The military, by reason of its training and traditions, is a fighting force. It is militant, and fights for power, for additional authority, and is constantly engaged in extending its jurisdiction by an encroachment upon the domain of the civil authority, and if not curbed ultimately it becomes paramount to civil authority.

The influence of these Departments of War and Navy, respectively, I see operating now. The fact that a majority of the Military Committee of each branch of Congress has reported in favor of military education indicates to my mind that the Army and Navy fellows have been busy. There is no demand in this country for any such program outside of the military and the concerns engaged in manufacturing dreadnoughts and superdreadnoughts, machine guns, cannon, and the like, and perhaps a few coast cities, where the people's minds have been wrought upon by propaganda circulated at the behest of the producers of munitions and implements of war. The people of this country are not for such a program. The American people are already staggering and groaning under a great burden of taxation. They do not admit that it is necessary to take the young men from home at a time when they are needed in the various occupations that engage our people and put them in a military school to learn how to shoot a musket or to flourish a sword or wear a spur, and at the same time subject the people to the enormous expense of maintaining such great military schools. There are thousands of swivel-chair officers who do not want to take off their uniforms and go back to work. These gentlemen are holding their commissions and with folded hands waiting to be called as military instructors. What parent wants to give up his son for 6 months or 12 months or 2 years to be taught in a military school and there subjected to the mandatory orders of subaltern officers who would land the boy in the penitentiary for five years for refusing to shine that officer's boots?

In this connection a brief consideration of the fate of Rome might be profitable. The Romans declared that the voice of the people was the voice of God, but the rulers of Rome were, generally, of the aristocratic class. The right of one of plebeian birth to hold office was recognized in the jurisprudence of that country, but in practical effect it was seldom that men of the proletariat sought public office; the latter were content to allow their representatives—men of erudition and culture—to voice their will. This, nevertheless, was a kind of representative government, and under it Rome prospered and expanded. But the mistress of the world, with all her matchless civilization, her orators, poets, painters, sculptors, philosophers, having reached the apotheosis, began to decay and went into decline, and as she receded into darkness she lost her power and finally was dissolved.

Like a great meteor performing a trajectory across the celestial vault, she shone with a brilliancy and luster that was wonderful to behold, but when the fires of her civilization were extinguished she collapsed and went down.

Two main causes have been assigned for the decline and fall of the Roman Empire, and I believe the phenomenon explicable on these two grounds, one being the opulence of the people, their resultant indolence and consequent profligacy, and the other being the ascendancy of the military over the civilian branch of the Government.

Aside from the potential considerations involved in the war with Germany, I am constrained to believe that, in addition thereto, it was necessary for the perpetuity of the Republic that the tremendous fortunes, whether they be the accumulation of generations or the acquisitions of the noveau riche, should be severally pruned; that the indolent, reclining on flowery beds of ease, should be aroused from their slumber and made either to work or else to keep step with soldiers who marched to the strains of martial music; that mental, moral, and physical strength be restored to the people; that their ability to undergo pain, sorrow, and privation be renewed; that the power of resistance and endurance of the race be established; and that the souls of men should be chastened in the crucible of war, notwithstanding that many had to suffer the agony of pain and others enter the penumbra of death.

So may it not be that the Almighty Power whose hand controls the revolutions of the uncounted millions of spheres which constitute the universe and whose infinite mind, comprehending all things, even the fall of a sparrow, has subjected us to the travail of war that we might experience a new birth in order that the great Republic of the New World might properly perform its function in the accomplishment of the destiny of the race.

But, Mr. Speaker, military power fattens upon what it feeds, namely, war. It becomes impatient of the slow processes of the courts. It prefers summary action, such as the command of the general or the verdict of a drumhead court-martial.

I have made allusion to the ascendancy of the military power in Rome as one of the main causes of her downfall. It was perhaps the chief cause of her destruction.

Although Nero had murdered his brother, his mother, and finally, I believe, his wife, and had committed almost every other crime in the category; although he was not only hated and despised by the people, yet he was permitted to continue for many years in his ignoble career, characterized at all times by corruption and crime. Why? Because of the military power. He was backed by the Roman legions. Our forefathers dreaded the malign influence of the military forces, and therefore wrote into the Constitution the words that read:

> The right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed.

Democracy may institute war, and wisely did so in the recent circumstances, but armies and navies, the forces of war, should never be allowed to become paramount to the people themselves, and thus become the instruments of oppression.

The war being over, the people, ever vigilant as they should be of their constitutional rights, demand the repeal of the statutory laws that have vested autocratic power in the hands of the Executive.

Human freedom will continue to flourish when cultivated by a democracy in a Republic like ours, provided the people remain on guard, for, as we have been told, "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

In these fitful times we, as the Representatives of the people, should deeply meditate upon our duty to the country and, employing Lincoln's words, "highly resolve" to give to the Nation the best that is in us, confident in the hope that it matters not with what difficulties we are beset—the clouds of war having dispersed and the great Republic having emerged from its baptism of fire, consecrated as never before to the cause of human freedom—if we let compulsory military education alone America will continue to be independent and free of internal danger.

And let me further say that if we steer clear of the League of Nations we will thereby avoid an external danger more imminent and sinister than any that have hitherto cast their baleful shadows across our national pathway.

Return of the Polish Legion to the United States.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WALTER H. NEWTON,

OF MINNESOTA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, March 3, 1920.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, during the late war 229,000 alien registrants from the first draft claimed exemption from military service by setting up their citizenship in a foreign country. This has justly called forth censure and condemnation. In striking contrast to the unpatriotic action of these was the action of thousands of other noncitizens who, not having fully completed their naturalization, waived any claim to exemption and gladly went forth to fight for their adopted country.

Many of them died in the service. This is attested by the names marked upon many a simple cross in various cemeteries that I visited in northern France.

Among the various peoples of foreign birth who thus so nobly responded to the defense of our country were none who showed more devotion than those of Polish birth and origin.

They came from a country with an interesting and glorious history. During the Middle Ages Poland was one of the great and independent powers of eastern Europe. For several centuries it was the chief bulwark of Christendom against the repeated onslaughts of the Moslem Turks. In the seventeenth century the Turk had made his way into Austria and was besieging the great city of Vienna itself. It was then that John Sobieski and his army of fighting Poles went to the succor of Vienna. By the fiercest kind of fighting the Turkish Army was driven back with tremendous losses and Vienna and Christian civilization was saved. The defeat was so decisive that the Turk never tried it again.

A century and a half later the nations of Europe, under the leadership of autocratic kings and emperors, including among them Frederick the Great of Prussia, a direct ancestor of William of Germany, the deposed Kaiser, ignored the debt that they owed to the Polish people and broke up the country, parceling it out to Austria, Germany, and Russia.

Thus it remained until the close of the Great War. Its people, however, as of old, continued to be lovers of freedom. Every American knows of the gallant soldier, Count Pulaski, who, driven out of Poland during the days of our Revolutionary War, came over to America and fought side by side with Washington for our independence. He lost his life in gallantly and successfully resisting the British in South Carolina.

When this Great War broke out the Poles, by reason of their division among Austria, Germany, and Russia, were conscripted into the respective armies of these countries and were compelled thereby to fight each other.

The sympathies of those people of Polish blood in America from almost the very start of the great conflict was with the allied nations of France, Britain, and Belgium and not with Germany. They knew what German autocracy meant. They knew that if Germany triumphed the freedom of America would be destroyed. What did they do? Thousands joined our own Army, while hundreds of others, unable to gain admission for one reason or another into our own armies, enlisted in the Polish Legion recruited in America and went over to France and there fought nobly under the command of Gen. Haller until the armistice was signed.

They then proceeded to their native land, which was being attacked from the east by the Bolshevist forces of Russia. There, as John Sobieski and the Poles of old, they fought to save Christian civilization from the Turk, they fought to save it from the menace of Russian Bolshevism.

Their labors over, several thousand of them desire to return to this country and complete their American citizenship. In their struggles in Europe with the Army of Gen. Haller the members of the Polish Legion have been compatriots and contemporaries of the American doughboy. This resolution, which will authorize the War Department to bring these brave men back to America at our expense upon American transports, should pass. All honor to these brave men who are in every respect worthy successors to John Sobieski and the soldiers of his day.

OF

HON. CALEB R. LAYTON,

OF DELAWARE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, March 8, 1920.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I desire to bring to the attention of the House a matter not only of interest to my constituents and to those of several other States of the Union, from a manufacturing standpoint, but also of great interest to the consuming public generally. I refer to the present condition of the glazed-kid industry in the United States. About 50 per cent of the raw material used in the manufacture of glazed kid is exported from India. India has an export duty of 15 per cent, 10 units of which she remits to Great Britain, including Canada. This is in effect a bounty in competition with the glazed-kid manufacturers of this country, and logically threatens the labor employed in these industries. There is a law upon the statute books, enacted October 3, 1913, chapter 16, Thirty-eighth Statutes, page 193, expressly passed by Congress to meet such conditions. This is known as a countervailing duty, the power to impose which is placed in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury, by the direction of the President, to impose upon any article imported into this country an additional import duty to that already established under a tariff equal to any bounty which the manufacturer of foreign countries may enjoy. This law was evidently enacted to give flexibility and additional protection to our own industries, without waiting for Congress to correct the same. Great Britain is evidently seeking to command this trade by building it up not only in India but in England and Canada as well. I have interested myself in this matter not only because the city of Wilmington, situated in the State which I represent, is the center of the glazed-kid industry, but because this industry is also established in New Jersey and Pennsylvania and other States of the Union. In my State there are 8,000 working men and women jeopardized by this Indian preferential export duty, and there are throughout the country engaged in this industry some 20,000 working men and women also jeopardized by this preferential export duty.

E. That whenever any country, dependency, colony, province, or other political subdivision of government shall pay or bestow, directly or indirectly, any bounty or grant upon the exportation of any article or merchandise from such country, dependency, colony, province, or other political subdivision of government, and such article or merchandise is dutiable under the provisions of this act, then upon the importation of any such article or merchandise into the United States, whether the same shall be imported directly from the country of production or otherwise, and whether such article or merchandise is imported in the same conditon as when exported from the country of production or has been changed in condition by remanufacture or otherwise, there shall be levied and paid, in all such cases, in addition to the duties otherwise imposed by this act, an additional duty equal to the net amount of such bounty or grant, however the same be paid or bestowed. The net amount of all such bounties or grants shall be from time to ascertained, determined, and declared by the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall make all needful regulations for the identification of such articles and merchandise and for the assessment and collection of such additional duties.

WILMINGTON, DEL., March 8, 1920.

To the honorable Secretary of the Treasury and Members of the Senate and House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., greeting:

The workers engaged in the manufacture of glazed kid desire to protest against the unfair discriminatory export tax placed by Great Britain on all Indian goatskins coming into the United States. The American manufacturer must pay this export tax of 15 per cent, while the English tanner secures a rebate of 10 per cent of this tax, giving him an unfair advantage. The effect of this rebate on the part of India to Great Britain is that it is extremely harmful to the workers engaged in glazed-kid production.

On this exhibit there appears a frank statement of the true present condition of the glazed-kid industry. It is a well-known fact that the center of the industry of glazed kid in the United States lies in Wilmington, Del., Philadelphia, Pa., and Camden, N. J. Our joint local committee represents a total of 19,000 leather workers who gain their livelihood in the industry. The discriminatory tax on raw goatskins is harming the industry in which we are engaged, and we feel that a serious mistake is being made by Great Britain (one of our allies in the World War) in imposing the tax on goatskins exported to the United States, while rebating 10 per cent of the tax to its own tanners. When the call to arms came, then our boys went across and did their part in winning the war, side by side with the soldiers of France and England. To-day it seems rather peculiar to see England, by the discriminatory tax on goatskins, harming the interests of workers engaged in the production of glazed kid who did their utmost to help this Nation's and the Allies' war program. Members of our organization who went across, and who saw strenuous service abroad alongside of the soldiers of Great Britain, who are back once more at their machines or toiling in the different departments of the tanneries, can not understand why one of the nations by whom America stood would be guilty of placing the tax referred to previously.

It is our understanding that it is within the power of our Government to settle the unfair tax situation by enforcement of the "countervailing duty law." It is our desire as glazed-kid workers to have Great Britain remove the discriminatory tax, but if it is not possible to have the situation adjusted by action along this line, then we would most respectfully submit that it would be right and just and proper to enforce the "countervailing duty law," by which the honorable Secretary of the Treasury of the United States can impose a duty in addition to the tariff schedule to equalize any bounty which any nation enjoys, by which that nation would have the advantage in competition due to such bounty.

We can not make our position too clear. As leather workers in the glazed-kid industry we believe the industry is entitled to protection from discriminatory taxation. We most respectfully desire to call full attention to the situation and to submit to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and the honorable Members of the Senate and House of Representatives, that their attention be given to fully considering the facts in the hope that the matter can be adjusted satisfactorily to all concerned.

Most respectfully,

[SEAL.]

THE NEWS ABOUT THE GLAZED-KID INDUSTRY IN INDIA FROM A PAPER PRINTED IN CALCUTTA REGULARLY—NEWS ITEMS PUBLISHED IN CAPITAL, A PUBLICATION ISSUED IN CALCUTTA, INDIA, PROVE CONCLUSIVELY THAT THE UNITED STATES SHOULD FACE THE SITUATION REGARDING THE PRESENT CONDITION OF OUR GLAZED-KID INDUSTRY—BIG PROGRAM AHEAD IN INDIA.

To further augment the statement of facts regarding the condition of the glazed-kid industry of the United States and to prove that India (a colony of Great Britain) is preparing to endeavor to destroy the prestige of that industry in which there are in the Pennsylvania-Delaware-New Jersey center over 19,000 workers engaged, news items published in Capital, a publication issued at Calcutta, India, are herewith reproduced. The items given appear in the issue of Capital dated Calcutta, India, October 31, 1919.

A careful perusal of the news items will prove conclusively that the United States Government can well afford to give full consideration to helping the glazed-kid industry and these workers by using its utmost endeavor to have the discriminatory tax situation adjusted satisfactorily to all concerned.

The items are as follows:

The imposition of an export duty on all raw hides and skins has been adversely criticized by shippers on the grounds that the price of other countries' hides must affect Indian values, and consequently the duty will, in effect, be borne by Indian dealers. Within a month of the imposition, however, local market prices have gone up to the highest recorded for some years, especially in goatskins.

Judging from criticisms in their trade journals, American buyers fear as an immediate result that the preferential rebate will enable Canada to seriously threaten America's predominant position. There is no suggestion (or even hope) that India will suffer, but, on the contrary, one can clearly trace in all their criticisms a feeling of disquietude at the most probable outcome of the very strong position in which the export duty places the British Empire generally.

Indian tanners are satisfied that the duty will put their industry on its feet for good. The world shortage of leather makes it impossible for foreign tanners to dictate terms to rawhide sellers for some time, and it is during this period that the Indian tanner will be able to concentrate on improving qualities and building up connections to such an extent that it is anticipated that the duty can be safely removed before the world's leather markets have adjusted themselves to such an extent that the duty might really be a handicap to Indian hide dealers or encourage retaliatory tariffs.

The ideal is that there should be practically no raw hide or skin exports from India, but it will take many years before that position is reached, and the Indian tanner says: "Give me a good start for the first two or three years and I'll be strong enough to finish the job myself."

To the vast body of middlemen who collect hides from up-country districts and carry them to central markets, such as Cawnpore and Calcutta, it is immaterial whether exporters or tanners buy the hides, and it was only the possibility that they might suffer while Indian tanneries increased their capacity that led to any opposition to the duty from them. Indian tanneries are, however, developing very rapidly, and each week sees new concerns come into being, and the comprehensiveness of some of the recent schemes are evidence that some of our leading merchants are quite satisfied with the prospects of Indian tanning.

Messrs. Bird & Co.'s group seems particularly strong. Besides being one of the largest shippers of raw hides, we understand they will shortly have two tanneries and a boot and shoe factory. The Kidderpore factory of Indian Tanneries (Ltd.) will, when completed in March, be the biggest single unit tannery in India, its daily capacity being 600 hides by vegetable process, 600 hides by chrome, and 400 skins.

The Allahabad factory, recently acquired from the Government, will, when extended and equipped similar to Kidderpore, have a capacity of 400 hides per day by vegetable and 100 per day by chrome, and the boot factory at Kidderpore will be capable of producing 250,000 pairs of boots and shoes per annum. The plant and machinery will all be the most modern available, and particular attention is being paid to the equipment and staffing of the currying and finishing department, the processes, in fact, upon which the success of a vast Indian tanning industry depends.

The boot factory will contain some 200 of the most modern machines, the place being equipped solely by the world-famous British United Shoe Machinery Manufacturing Co., of Leicester, whose confidence in the prospects of such concerns is illustrated by their opening depots in India and introducing similar leasing and royalty terms to those which have given them 95 per cent of the factory-equipment business in Britain.

The selling value of the products of these three concerns, assuming full capacity and good quality upon which every new Indian tannery depends, will be about Rs. 1 crore per annum, and we believe arrangements have been made for India Tanneries (Ltd.) to acquire both Allahabad and the boot factory without any increase in their capital of Rs. 10,000,000 lakhs.

Right here is shown the immense strength of India's managing agents' system. The capacity to not only provide working capital but also to nurse a new industry by temporarily financing a part of actual block expenditure, and thus keep the issued capital down to the lowest possible is of immeasurable advantage to shareholders; and this group, which we have detailed as an example, with a prospective turnover of ten times its called-up capital, is in an extraordinarily strong position compared with most other industries and with other concerns in the same industry. We understand that Messrs. Bird & Co. anticipate, given initial success, having running within the next five years probably 10 large tanneries, all part and parcel of India Tanneries (Ltd.). Messrs. Bird & Co.'s group, however, represent a very small fraction of the total development to date in this new and most promising industry.

Messrs. Graham & Co., also shippers of large quantities of raw hides and skins, have already in the Bengal Tanneries (Ltd.) one of the most up-to-date vegetable tanneries in the world, with a capacity of some 600 hides per day. Under construction is a boot and shoe factory, with a capacity of 250,000 pairs per annum, and we believe that they contemplate the erection of a chrome tannery for 600 hides per day and also the installation of a modern plant in a really serious attempt to produce first-class pickers, belting, etc.

Messrs. Walker & Co., for many years tanners and exporters of first-class crust tannages, are now also doing a large business in the export of raw hides and skins; and Messrs. David Sassoon & Co. (Ltd.) are also exporters of both raw and crust tanned leather, their tanning capacity being about 300 hides per day.

As purely tanners we have Messrs. Chari & Co., whose latest venture, India Glacé Kids (Ltd.), is capable of tanning over 2,000,000 skins per year. Calcutta Chrome Tanning Co. (Ltd.), managed by the same people, has a capacity of about 500 hides per day, and Messrs. Chari & Co. are directly or indirectly interested in several smaller concerns.

Messrs. Martin & Co., Kilburn & Co., and R. A. Dickie & Co. have already moderate-sized concerns, and, we understand, are contemplating either large extensions to existing plant or development elsewhere. Messrs. R. A. Dickie & Co., in particular, we believe, contemplate very large extensions.

Messrs. Davenport & Co. are the last, but by no means the least, in this new enterprise. Already two companies—Rajshahi and Behar—have been located. Very shortly, we understand, a scheme in Central India will be put out. This one is reckoned by many experts to be the finest one in India, inasmuch as the tannery will be situated alongside a slaughterhouse dealing with about 1,000 head of cattle per day.

The above concerns, when running full capacity, together with many small schemes we have not enumerated, give an addition to India's prewar tanning capacity of approximately 2,250,000 hides and 2,500,000 skins per annum, and the value of India-produced leather will by 1921 be at least £8,000,000.

PROSPECTUS OF INDIAN TANNERY TELLS ANOTHER SERIES OF FACTS ON SERIOUSNESS OF THE GLAZED-KID INDUSTRY OF THE UNITED STATES.

Following is the wording of a prospectus of the Indian Glace Kids (Ltd.), of Calcutta, India, giving in detail the hopes and ideals of England's colony for the domination of the glazed-kid manufacturing of the world:

THE INDIAN GLACE KIDS (LTD.).

A copy of the prospectus has been filed with the registrar of joint-stock companies, Calcutta. Capital, Rs. 50,000,000, divided into 500,000 ordinary shares of Rs. 10, each payable as follows: Rs. 2 on application, Rs. 2 on allotment, and the balance in calls of Rs. 3 per share at intervals of not less than four months each. Twenty-five lakhs of rupees worth of shares have already been taken up and the balance is now available for public subscription.

PROSPECTUS.

Though India produces an enormous number of goatskins annually of excellent quality and eminently suitable for the production of kid leather, by far the greater number have hitherto been exported to the United States of America, where, in the huge American tanneries, which are especially constructed for the purpose, the raw skins are transformed into glace kid by means of the chrome process, and, after satisfying the domestic requirements of America, the balance is exported to the United Kingdom.

During the years 1916–17–18, when, as it is well known, the import of leather into the United Kingdom was greatly restricted, the United States exported annually to the United Kingdom 30,000,000 square feet of glace kid, and in addition to this the United States exported to other countries in Europe an almost equally large quantity, and this in face of the fact that such European countries had a very high restrictive tariff on the import of foreign leather, in certain cases amounting to 25 and to 30 per cent ad valorem.

There is no possible reason why India should not take advantage of her large supplies of goatskins by converting them into glace kid in the country itself and not only satisfy her own requirements in this particular commodity but export the balance at prices which would show a very handsome return.

The promoters of this company have made extensive experiments some time past with respect to the production of glace kid, with the result that they have satisfied themselves that first-class glace kid leather can be produced in this country which will favorably compare with that manufactured in any other part of the world.

The business, however, of manufacturing glace kid if it is to be a success must be conducted on a large scale, since the market conditions require that glace kid should be produced in a number of different grades, and this naturally means that there must be a big output of the kid leather if the business is to be a paying one.

The proposal of this undertaking is, therefore, to start a large glace-kid tannery having a capacity of 500 dozen skins per diem. To accomplish this it has been estimated that the capital of the company must not be less than Rs. 50 lakhs, which will be divided into 5 lakhs of shares of Rs. 10 each.

A strong inducement for the flotation of this company lies in the important fact that there has been a recent announcement by the Government of India under which a 15 per cent duty on the export of raw hides and skins will be levied with respect to countries outside the British Empire, the effect of which will be to place this company in a very favorable position, enabling it to hold its own even in the protected markets of the world.

It is estimated that the machinery which will be required for this company's tannery will cost somewhere about £65,000, and a further sum of £35,000 will be required to meet the expenses of erecting the necessary buildings, including managers' and workmen's quarters, as well as a filter and septic tank for the disposal of effluents, which means that the block account will absorb some Rs. 15 lakhs will be required for chemicals and for a three-month supply of skins. This will leave a balance of Rs. 10 lakhs of the company's capital, and out of this a sum of Rs. 2 lakhs should be set aside to cover the cost and expenses of training skilled labor for the manufacture of glace kid.

Set out below is a comparative statement of the cost of manufacture of glace kid on the basis of prewar and present prices:

Cost of manufacture per foot.

AT PRESENT PRICES.

Raw materials	Rs. 0	13	0
Chemicals	0	2	0
Establishment	0	0	4
Labor	0	0	6
Power	0	0	3
Depreciation	0	0	1½
Sundries	0	0	1½
Travel allowance, auditors, and managing agent	0	0	8
Total	1	1	0

The present prices of glace kids vary from Rs. 1–40 to Rs. 3 per foot, according to quality and selection.

AT PREWAR PRICES.

Raw materials	Rs. 0	6	0
Chemicals	Rs. 0	0	9
Establishment	Rs. 0	0	4
Labor	Rs. 0	0	4
Power	Rs. 0	0	2
Depreciation	Ds. 0	0	1
Sundries	Ds. 0	0	1
Auditors and managing agents and traveling allowance	Rs. 0	0	8
Total	Rs. 0	8	5

The prewar prices of glace kids varied from 9 annas to Rs. 1–8–0 per foot, according to quality and selection.

It is reasonable to suppose that the company's tannery, when fully equipped, will be in a position to turn out 9 lakhs of square feet of kid leather per mensem, and taking a profit of 3 annas a foot the total yearly profits would amount to Rs. 20,250,000; in other words, a return of nearly 40 per cent on the capital.

The erection of the necessary factory buildings and the installation of machinery will naturally take some little time, but, all being well, the factory should be in a position to commence work within 18 months from the present time. Prompt deliveries of machinery have been promised by the American manufacturers from whom it is being purchased.

Qualification of directors and their remuneration: The number of directors shall not be less than three nor more than eight, and the qualification of every director shall be his holding in his own right not less than 200 shares. Each of the directors, unless otherwise determined at the general meeting, shall be paid Rs. 100 per mensem, plus all necessary traveling expenses for such of the directors who reside outside Calcutta.

Agreements: The following agreements will be entered into by or on behalf of the company:

A contract between the company and Messrs. Chari & Co. (Ltd.), whereby the latter are appointed as managing agents of the company for a period of 30 years unless they shall voluntarily resign the office, and subject to various terms and conditions as to remuneration and otherwise as contained in the agreement.

Commission: No commission exceeding 2 per cent on the face value of the shares will be paid to brokers.

Allotment: The company shall not proceed to allotment unless and until 20 per cent of the total share capital is subscribed for.

Preliminary expenses: The preliminary expenses are expected to be Rs. 30,000.

Application for shares: Application for shares should be made in the accompanying form and forwarded to the managing agents, together with a remittance for the amount payable on application.

(a) If no allotment is made, the deposit will be returned in full, and, where the number of shares allotted is less than the number applied for, the surplus will be credited in reduction of the amount payable on allotment.

(b) Failure to pay any calls on shares allotted when due will render previous payments liable to forfeiture.

(c) Copies of the prospectus and forms of application for shares may be obtained from the company's managing agents, Chari & Co. (Ltd.), 2 Lyons Range, Calcutta.

General: Copies of the memorandum and articles of association of the company and of the agreement referred to may be inspected at the registered office of the company at any time during the usual business hours, and any person applying for any shares in this company, or who is allotted any shares in this company, will be deemed to have inspected the documents and agreements above referred to and to be bound by the same.

A copy of the memorandum of association of the company is attached to this prospectus and forms part of it.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN Q. TILSON,

OF CONNECTICUT,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, March 11, 1920.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with permission granted me by the House, I here insert some remarks made by me at the annual dinner of my college class at the Yale Club in New York City, on Friday evening, March 5, 1920, as follows:

"Mr. Toastmaster and gentlemen of the class, as I journeyed from Washington to-day in the day coach of a Pennsylvania Railroad train, I pondered somewhat upon what I should try to say at this annual gathering of our class. It occurred to me that in the twenty-ninth year after our graduation and in the first year of the great national drought, it might be possible for me to make a spread-eagle, flap-doodle speech and get away with it. Of course I knew that nothing of the kind could have been put over in the earlier days of your pristine vigor, when there was a more healthy and less stealthy flow of spirits. Such speeches are easy now because there are so many safe subjects to talk about, such as Americanism; the reds; service to mankind; Bolshevism; the League of Nations, with or without, and the like. I see and hear it done every day, but I do not wish you to go away with the notion that Senators and Representatives are the only ones who indulge in such pastime. However, in line with safety-first principles, I have decided to take no chances with such a program this evening.

"Another suggestion was to follow the lead of the great Methodist Church class meeting and give the testimony of my experience, especially during the war. It is said that life consists largely in its experiences. If it is measured by them it would require only about one more first-class war to put me in the Methuselah class.

"Some of these experiences have been most encouraging in their revelation of the higher and better side of human nature, while others have been equally disheartening in revealing the existence of traits of human character that should not exist. Many experiences have been of the most absorbing interest, while all have been broadening in their effect upon one's outlook upon life and the world. However, I shall not venture upon this field.

"Among the other courses left to me I might turn schoolmaster for the moment and proceed to read you a lecture upon your duty as citizens, for I have no doubt whatever as to your deserving it. There is the still further possibility of taking the toastmaster seriously and proceeding to defend myself and the wisdom of my official acts, for it must be admitted that not even a Member of Congress is omniscient. I might even take up the task of defending Congress as a body and its Members as individuals. Doubtless most of you would say, 'Go to it; they need it,' while the wary ones would say, 'Spare us; we have not time for another four-years' course now.' I am going to surprise you by saying that neither Congress nor Members of Congress need a defender. Collectively and individually they are as a rule much better than you, representing the great popular electorate, deserve. They come from the people and soon return to the people; sometimes too soon, as I found to my regret upon one occasion.

"As a rule Members of Congress are just as good as the people will permit them to be and continue them in service. When I reflect upon some of the things that Members of Congress are asked by some of our very 'best citizens' to do, I feel that if Congress and the Government were half as bad as people assume when asking something for themselves, we should be unfortunate indeed.

"A few decades ago there was sometimes talk of graft in connection with Congress. Fortunately, if there was ever ground for such talk it has long since disappeared. No sensible person would think of making such an accusation now, much less think of believing it.

"Cowardice is the most glaring weakness in the character of mankind, and unfortunately not all Members of Congress are entirely free from this most human defect; but again I warn you not to go away with the idea that they have any monopoly of it.

"The Psalmist tells us that he said in his haste 'All men are liars.' He might have added after more mature deliberation, 'And, for the most part, cowards.' If I see a weak-kneed Member of Congress in the cloakroom trembling like Belshazzar at the approach of a 'yea' or 'nay' vote that may mean political life or death to him, I feel pity rather than contempt. I do not attempt to justify him if, regardless of his own convictions, he decides to vote the way he thinks will lose him the least number of votes. He ought to stand up and vote for what he conceives to be right regardless of the possible disastrous effect upon himself; but if all those who fail to act up to this high standard in every walk of life are to be condemned along with him he will have the satisfaction of much excellently reputed company. Scarcely a week goes by without its instances of reputable, high-grade men coming to me with matters of great import involving the good name or reputation of some official or other individual, calling upon me to take up something liable to burn my own fingers before I can let go of it, and in almost every case the public-spirited citizen furnishing the accusations makes the reservation that his name is not to be used lest it do him some slight injury in his business. How often we hear the excuse, 'I should be glad to help in this unpleasant matter, but it might injure my business.' Another might give information, but not if it endangers his job. Even he of the most exalted calling among us, the minister, is sometimes said to hesitate in proclaiming the highest truths for the same worldly reason. Even such men as frequent the Yale Club and other clubs of its high character, where withering scorn and contempt may be freely and safely poured out upon the heads of cowardly Congressmen who fail to vote properly, have been known to keep themselves well in the background until all danger of injury has passed. Again I say that I do not approve or justify the legislator who votes one way or another through fear of losing votes at the next election, but his punishment will probably be somewhat delayed and mitigated if we wait for him who is guiltless of the same offense in principle to cast the first stone.

"The general theme of to-night's meeting was announced to be what is being done toward meeting the issues of the day.

There are now many great, far-reaching, and all-absorbing problems. These must and will be fairly met and eventually solved, for I have full confidence in the strength, capacity, and resourcefulness of America. I shall speak only from the viewpoint of my own little niche in the great structure and only of some of the problems facing the Government and the Congress as part of the work immediately in front of us.

"In order to win the war quickly it was thought necessary to rapidly and very largely increase the number, magnify the scope, and multiply the personnel of the civil establishment of the Government. I seriously doubt the wisdom of many of them, but numerous new activities were entered upon and the expense of Government was rapidly rolling up when the armistice suddenly came. It would seem that it ought to be an easy task, as it would surely be the natural thing to expect, to begin at once to reduce the war-time expenditure. It has proved, in fact, to be an almost insuperable task. Congress has tackled the job, but with little or no help from the executive branch, has not achieved all that should have been accomplished. Without such help Congress must cut appropriations somewhat blindly, if at all, and then the trouble begins. All the employees affected begin at once a campaign of pressure upon Congress, which, as I have explained, is not always easy to resist. It has become a common saying that it requires nothing less forceful than dynamite or an earthquake to shake loose anyone once attached to an executive pay roll.

"Next to cutting down the war-time expenditure the most apparent thing would seem to be that taxes enough should be imposed to at least carry the current burden of expense, but this is not easy.

"Taxes are always distasteful and usually unscientifically imposed, even if there be any such thing as a scientifically imposed tax. Congress is urged from all sides to repeal this, that, or the other tax, without even so much as a suggestion as to what should take its place, except to take it off of 'us' and place it upon the 'other fellow.'

"In addition to all the other perplexing problems with which we are contending, a new one is now up to Congress, and that is to make an additional payment to ex-service men of the late war. The smallest demand would aggregate $2,000,000,000, while the most liberal would doubtless amount to $20,000,000,000. Every American with a heart, soul, or patriotism in him wishes to do the right thing by the boys who fought the Great War. What shall be done? How shall the expense be met? What will be the effect upon the ex-service men themselves and upon the rest of the people? These are difficult and perplexing questions. Members of Congress must face them and try to answer them correctly.

"Some of you who made fine records in the service during the war have appealed to me to-night to stand firmly against any form of bonus for ex-service men, declaring that you do not wish to see a patriotic service thus commercialized. Such an appeal is perfectly safe when made within the confidential portals of the Yale Club. Who of you will go to Washington and in the presence of the legislative representatives of several service organizations say the same thing to the Ways and Means Committee? It will require courage not less than that displayed in the Argonne.

"How much help does the Member of Congress from the district in which any one of you lives ever receive from one of you in his effort to speak and act wisely upon any of these knotty questions? I will lay a wager that not one of you ever even wrote to your Representative, except to ask him to do one of three things—to do something for you or some friend individually, to increase some appropriation of doubtful utility, or to reduce some tax that particularly affects you or your business.

"Thanks in some measure to our alma mater and the four years spent at New Haven, you are men of position and influence in the several communities in which you live. You are leaders of thought and action. If Congress is not all that it should be, you can help to make it better. Education can do more than anything else, but be sure that you begin at the right place. Do not begin with the Congressman. Nine times out of ten he is doing the best that he can do under the circumstances. Do not try to educate him too much at once or you will end in educating him out of Congress. Help him change the circumstances.

"If he votes wisely and courageously on a matter of large importance, help see to it that he is not forced out of office for some trivial vote. The trouble is that if a Member votes to refuse or even reduce a doubtful appropriation, or declines to vote for the special benefit of some class, every person injuriously affected will never forgive him and will consider it a religious duty to vote against him to the end of the chapter. On the other hand, the great public, for whose benefit he has made the sacrifice, goes straightway and forgets all about him, even before election time. You say that the case of Gov. Coolidge proves the contrary. It is only the exception that proves the rule. Gov. Coolidge did his duty courageously. Fortunately the election came immediately and so soon that no one could possibly forget it. The people of Massachusetts rose to the occasion, and Gov. Coolidge became a national figure for a few weeks.

"Do not misunderstand me. I would not condone the servile acts or attitude of spineless Congressmen. No position within the gift of man is worth such a price. Only such men should be chosen as will stand when the rub comes, regardless of consequences to themselves, but meanwhile do not forget that the other kind will always be numerous in every body chosen by the people, and this will be so for the very reason of the demands and attitude of the people themselves."

Favoring the Retention of Commercial Attachés in Foreign Countries.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FREDERICK C. HICKS,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, March 2, 1920,

On the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

To the item appropriating for the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, an amendment was offered increasing the amount to be expended for commercial attachés abroad.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I am concerned less with the parliamentary situation of the amendment and more with the urgent necessity of the appropriation itself. Whether the attachés are appointed by the Secretary of State or the Secretary of Commerce is of little moment. It is not the method of selection, but the results of the selection which are vital. Last year we appropriated for this service $910,000, and the committee, in their desire to economize, has reduced the item to $487,000. No one is more anxious to curtail Federal expenditures than am I, and by my votes on appropriation bills I feel I have consistently demonstrated my determination to practice rigid economy. But to me saving should not produce waste or retrenchment create loss. I respectfully submit that unless this amendment, and those coupled with it as natural corollaries, are agreed to, both waste and loss will result. We will throw away that which we already possess and be deprived of obtaining that which we should have.

America stands forth to-day as the leading financial, industrial and agricultural nation of all the world. We are the richest in resources, the greatest in inventive genius, the foremost in production, and the freest from entangling political alliances, racial prejudices and economic jealousies. The markets of the world are open to our products. It is for us to accept the premier position we occupy and profit thereby.

The purpose of the proposed legislation is to provide commercial attachés who will stimulate our trade relations with foreign countries. They will be the agencies through which our American manufacturers and producers will be kept in touch with markets abroad. They will be investigators and observers of economic conditions, charged with the duty of supplying our business men with information.

The World War of arms has terminated; the world war of trade has begun. As we were unprepared for the former, let us not be unprepared for the latter. Every other nation is reaching out for these markets, endeavoring to possess them, and should we fail to meet the situation we will be derelict in our duty to our home producers and neglectful of the opportunities presented to increase still further the wealth of our country and the prosperity of our people.

Great Britain, I understand, has increased her appropriation for this service to $1,450,320, and France, with possibilities far less than ours, has appropriated $852,000. Japan is spending $500,000 to develop her trade and, I am informed, will shortly have an attaché established in New York City. Italy, Sweden, and, in fact, every country is reaching out for foreign markets. Now is the time to capture the overseas trade, to possess it, and by caring for it we will hold it. Expansion, not retrenchment, should be our policy in this field, for if this trade is lost now it will probably be lost forever.

We have built up a great merchant marine, a service which every patriotic American demands shall be retained under the flag. From less than 2,000,000 gross tons of overseas shipping in 1915 our ocean fleets have grown to 9,000,000 tons. We should encourage and assist, not discourage and retard, the American merchant marine, which again carries the commerce of the Nation to the seven seas.

For years our goods have been carried in vessels flying foreign flags, and now with American ships once more upon the deep, to keep the flag flying we must provide cargoes. By building up a great foreign trade through the medium of this Bureau of Commerce we will accomplish this purpose. I favor the amendment and urge its passage.

ADDENDUM.

[From testimony given by Mr. Philip B. Kennedy, Director Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Feb. 24, 1920.]

Mr. KENNEDY. The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce is the governmental agency which distributes commercial information to American business men. This information comes not only from our own foreign representatives but also from foreign representatives of the State Department.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Just what character of information do you distribute so as to develop foreign trade?

Mr. KENNEDY. The reports of a commercial character made by representatives of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce abroad, by the consuls and others, all of which come to our bureau. We are receiving at the present time at the rate of about 40,000 consular reports a year in addition to all of our own reports. That material we publish in the form of Daily Commerce Reports and in the form of special monographs on trade. We also publish the foreign-trade statistics. We are writing large numbers of commercial letters in answer to specific inquiries about commerce. I think we write about 3,000 letters of that kind every week from our Washington headquarters.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Can you state some of the features of that correspondence?

Mr. KENNEDY. We have our work in the bureau divided into divisions. We have one division on tariff information. That division receives tariff laws from all over the world. It has the finest collection of laws on foreign tariffs in the United States, if not in the world. That division receives inquiries as to the tariff on a certain article in a certain country and as to the procedure which has to be followed. Their correspondence is very large. For instance, they have specific and definite information on what is the tariff on lawn mowers in Brazil and what procedure has to be complied with. That division has also handled restrictions. There have recently been restrictions on the importation of American goods into European countries, including restrictions on exchange. All these laws have been compiled there and that information is made available to the American exporters.

The commercial information division receives all the letters which can be answered from our files without highly technical information. These letters come in from everywhere. A man wants to know about a market for certain goods in certain countries. Trade letters that come in from our own representatives and from the Consular Service have the essential information taken off and put on a sheet of paper in our file. In this commercial information division we have files containing this recent and essential information about markets for all kinds of American goods in different countries. When a letter comes in, that file is consulted. We have right there conveniently at hand the latest information. In this commercial information division we have correspondents who are answering those letters, every one of which is a specific inquiry.

Certain letters come in that are more technical in character. Some one wishes certain information about the Far East or Latin America or western Europe or Russia. We have geographical divisions with experts in charge, men who have been in those countries, who are continually assembling information particularly on those markets. All these geographical divisions reply to these specific inquiries of a technical character on their respective markets.

We also have a statistical division which publishes the import and export statistics of the United States. They are constantly receiving letters asking for the most recent statistics of imports and exports of a certain article to a certain country. They have a large correspondence.

* * * * * * *

What we need is a steady policy in our foreign trade. Bankers whom I have been conferring with realize this. Instead of closing up the book and giving up this question, they are studying it more carefully to-day than, I believe, they have ever done before in the history of this country. And just at this time, when the ablest and most experienced business men in this country want our information, it is very discouraging to feel that our Washington staff, which has to handle it, instead of being increased and more highly paid, as it ought to be, is to be severely cut.

I was in London myself during the war as commercial attaché. I feel very keenly the need of our following what is going on in Europe. We may not be able to do much trade there for the time being, while exchange is against us, but we should follow developments. Great Britain, for the year ending January 1, had a greater foreign trade than we did, considering both imports and exports. British ships are putting up the keenest kind of competition on the high seas. British factories are in far better shape than they were a year ago. The president of a large American company, who himself has run a plant in England, returned recently. He told me that manufacturing in Great Britain was much improved over what it was when I left there 10 months ago. He said labor is getting down to work; they have their raw materials; they are reaching out for foreign markets. He said that they are going to give us the keenest kind of competition. At a time when our foreign trade is in the balance we ought to follow what is going on in Great Britain.

As regards France, our commercial attaché, Mr. Snow, who has just come back to the United States, recently took a swing around the industrial cities of France. Every place he visited he went to the chamber of commerce or the labor bureau and asked: "How many unemployed have you?" He was struck with the fact that in the industrial cities of France there are now virtually no unemployed. The factories were working full time. He believes that the French manufacturing industry is going ahead very vigorously.

It is not all dark in the picture of Europe. It is possible the American foreign trade in the future may run up against the keenest kind of competition.

* * * * * * *

Taking Europe as a whole, I feel that it would be a very grave error for us to be forced to withdraw within two or three months these 15 trade commissioners that we now have reporting there. They are men who know those countries, who have had commercial training. Of course, the consuls are reporting, too. We receive the reports of the consuls through the State Department. We know the reports we are getting from our trade commissioners are not covered by the consuls. We know there would be a great loss of information to the American trade and to American shipping if our men were recalled. Just at the time when this readjustment is going on, when the future is being made, it impresses me as being a great mistake to think of withdrawing experienced men and saying that we have no interest in European trade because those nations can not pay for their goods at the present time. That seems to me a short-time rather than a long-time point of view. This appropriation for promoting commerce, which has been cut, is a small amount of money considering what is at stake.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Right there I want to ask this question, even if it breaks in on your statement, because this is the issue that is going to be before the House: You say, as a matter of fact, there is no duplication between the work of those trade commissioners and that of the consuls in furnishing information. You take that position?

Mr. KENNEDY. I say that there is very little. These trade commissioners are, as a rule, men of special training; they are devoting their entire time reporting on commercial subjects and advising with business men.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is one thing you have not explained yet to my satisfaction; you may have to the others. I want to know what trade functions your trade commissioners perform and report to your department that are not performed by the consuls of the State Department, that gives an advantage in their retention?

Mr. KENNEDY. This applies both to the trade commissioners and the commercial attachés. I think, however, it is generally recognized by the State Department that these trade commissioners are men who do not conflict with their consuls, because these trade commissioners are, as a rule, specialists. A man will go out with a knowledge of leather or shoes or some technical line. For example, in England we have a trade commissioner who was for three years the representative of the Grotton & Knight Leather Co., in London. He is a man who is technically trained in leather. He can go out and make reports on leather which no man could make who was not a technical man.

It is where the trade commissioners are technical men that they fill a special field. A trade commissioner, also, is a man who can pursue a line of investigation on one topic. A consul can not do that. A consul has to sit in his office. He has to attend to the passports, shipping, and notarial functions; all these various things come to the office of a consul. He can not travel from city to city; he can not take the topic of leather, for instance, and go around to different cities of Great Britain and confer with leather people and make a technical report on that subject. As a rule, I think, there has been no feeling that these trade commissioners duplicate the work of consuls. That charge has been leveled mainly against the commercial attachés who have been largely resident. Of course, we have a few trade commissioners who are resident, but that is only temporary.

* * * * * * *

Mr. KENNEDY. This will only take one paragraph. They have cut us down in our promotion of trade in the Far East, I believe, under a misconception. The chairman of the subcommittee stated on the floor of the House that there was not much trade to be obtained in the Far East and there was no use spending money on it. The exchange is running against us in the Far East. We are sending silver over there and the Treasury is anxious to increase our trade with the Far East so as to protect our bullion. There is, in fact, a great opportunity for trade in the Far East, and I can conceive no reason whatever for cutting that appropriation from $100,000 to $50,000. I think it must be because of misunderstanding of the facts.

About South America, I will not deal particularly with that, because they have given us the same sum we had this year. I think we ought to increase it, because the exchange is running against us in South America. They are sending us more goods than we are sending them. We have a very fine opportunity there, and we ought to extend our work rather than hold it as it is.

Now, as regards commercial attachés. This item has been dropped entirely from the appropriation bill. The service was established six years ago in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce after a referendum of the commercial organizations of this country by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States that was overwhelmingly in favor of the establishment of that service in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. To what extent do other countries have these commercial attachés?

Mr. KENNEDY. The practice of the civilized world is favorable to the position which I maintain that is controlled by the Commerce Department. Great Britain has, within the last two or three years, entirely revised her system. The business men felt that they were getting virtually nothing from the consuls. They have made the consul subservient to the commercial attaché, from the commercial point of view. For instance, in the United States the commercial secretary of the British Embassy receives copies of the commercial reports made by all the British consuls in this country, and he can ask them to look up particular things in different parts of the country, so that all that information is assembled here in the British Embassy in Washington to help the ambassador in his conduct of policy. The consuls are put under the direction of the commercial attaché, so far as the commercial work goes. Great Britain has extended that system all over the world. They are trying to relieve the consuls of their shipping work, so that they can do more commercial work, and they head it up through their commercial attaché.

France is establishing under the minister of commerce a commercial attaché system, and some of their representatives have been through our bureau and studied it very closely, and they are just now in process of appointing some 15 or 20 commercial attachés, who are to report to the minister of commerce. In every country these commercial attachés are reporting to the minister of commerce, because that is his business. They universally want to get away from the foreign offices, where there has been a lot of red tape and delay and a great deal of secrecy, and where men have been more interested in political and diplomatic questions. The business men want something that has a business character. That is the reason that in all these foreign countries, including Japan, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Holland—every country that I know of—they are making these commercial attachés directly responsible to the minister of commerce.

Mr. WHITE. How many of these commercial attachés have we outside the United States at the present time, and how much of a contraction of the service will be required if this appropriation bill stands as it is reported?

Mr. KENNEDY. The present fiscal year we had an appropriation of $165,000, which provides, at the maximum, for 11 or 12 commercial attachés and their offices. If these men are withdrawn, that will mean we will have to dismiss from the service 11 or 12 commercial attachés and such clerks as they have. Those commercial attachés are at present in London, Paris, Madrid, Rome, The Hague, Copenhagen, Rio de Janeiro, Buenos Aires, Santiago, Peking, and Tokyo.

Mr. WHITE. This bill carries nothing in its present form for those commercial attachés and their clerks?

Mr. KENNEDY. It wipes them out.

* * * * * * *

Mr. KENNEDY. I should say that the commercial attachés were the nervous system of the Department of Commerce. If you take them away, we will be inert. We will not be in a position to protect the business interests of the country. I feel that it is possible for the present system to avoid duplication, and I think that it has been very largely done in the past. We receive the reports of the consuls in our bureau to distribute to the business men. We can read those over, and we can see where they are reporting on the same things as our commercial attachés. As a matter of fact, it is very seldom that there is any overlapping, because the consuls report on something local to their district, whereas the commercial attachés are usually considering broad commercial policies of the country as a whole; and the trade commissioners' reports are so technical and so complete that the consuls do not make any such reports.

General Pershing's Address.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM D. UPSHAW,

OF GEORGIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, March 11, 1920.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include an address by Gen. John J. Pershing, commander in chief of the American Expeditionary Forces, delivered at the Eleventh Annual Convention of the Southern Commercial Congress, Savannah, Ga., December 8, 1919:

ADDRESS BY GEN. JOHN J. PERSHING, COMMANDER IN CHIEF AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES, DELIVERED AT THE ELEVENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE SOUTHERN COMMERCIAL CONGRESS, SAVANNAH, GA., DECEMBER 8, 1919.

Dr. Clarence J. Owens, director general of the Southern Commercial Congress, in introducing Gen. Pershing, said:

"The tide is at the flood in Dixie. All minds to-day are centered in honor to the name and imperishable fame of America's hero of the World War. A son of Missouri, but now with Washington and Grant and Robert Edward Lee, a citizen of the empire of humanity and the kingdom of man, a sturdy and sterling patriot, Gen. John J. Pershing, the commander in chief of the American Expeditionary Forces."

Gen. Pershing's address is as follows:

"Mr. Chairman, your excellencies, and gentlemen of the Southern Commercial Congress, it gives me very much pleasure to have the honor of meeting the governors and other distinguished representatives of the South assembled here under the auspices of the Southern Commercial Congress. It is a privilege to know the men to whose initiative and creative genius this organization owes its success. With the ultimate purpose of building 'a greater Nation through a greater South,' your achievements have been large and they will be far larger in the future.

"Through the energy of your people and the cooperation of your Congress, an unequaled development of the agricultural, industrial, and mineral resources of the South has taken place during the past few years. To meet this expansion extensive improvements of your waterways have been undertaken, your railroads have increased in mileage and in efficiency, and your ports have been enlarged and deepened. Education of the people has steadily advanced, living conditions have grown better, and important progress has been made toward the highest ideals of citizenship.

"The cordial welcome which you have given me and my staff to-day, and the hospitable greeting extended from Washington to Savannah, I take not for myself alone, but also for the men I had the honor to command. The credit for our success belongs to them, and with all my heart I join with you in paying tribute to them.

SOUTHERN MEN IN OUR ARMY.

"The southern men in our armies quickly reached the high standard of our finest troops. They carried the banners of the Republic to the battle fields of France and victoriously crossed swords with the best troops the German Empire could furnish. The glory of our arms goes to that determined stand at Chateau-Thierry that stopped the enemy's advance; to the counterattack on the Marne salient that turned he tide of war; to their brilliant success at St. Mihiel; to the assault at the Canal du Nord, where southern men lost their lives; and to the decisive drive from Verdun to Sedan that ended the war, where, as worthy sons, your men maintained the best traditions of a martial people.

"But our young men, both at home and abroad, won other victories. Their cheerful acceptance of the rigor of military discipline, their patience in training, their fortitude in combat, were all that you in your pride and love of America could desire. No body of troops taken to battle in a foreign land far from the guidance and the influence of their homes were ever inspired by more lofty ideals. Their abstinence and morality gained for them the unstinted praise of our allies and returned them home to you in health. Your sons carried into their service the chivalrous spirit of the South, which is your boast and that of your fathers before you.

WOMAN'S PART IN THE VICTORY.

"The women of your States bravely bore their share of the burden. At home they waited, watched, and prayed that their sons might bring back the victory. Over there in the hospitals, where there was need of woman's tender care, at the canteens and shelters, at the recreation and amusement centers, and wherever woman could best do her work, there they labored with an ardor worthy of their brothers. It is a privilege to tell you of the services of your sons and daughters and to claim full kinship as an American with them and with you.

"These men and women did us another service that some of them may not suspect. They renewed and confirmed for all time our faith in Americans. It had been said that we loved ease and luxury and that money was our only thought. We were told that the race of men who stood with Prescott at Bunker Hill, who endured Valley Forge, and who followed Pickett at Gettysburg had passed away, and that our generation was different. But in the test we found the same high courage, the same intelligence, and the same manly vigor that has marked the soldiers of the Nation since it first came into being.

"They have brought home those qualities to be ours for the good of our common country. With discipline and experience they have returned better men and better citizens. Their sacrifices have confirmed the sacred value of our institutions and the obligation to maintain them. These confident men and their people behind them may be counted upon to go forward into the future as they have come down out of the past—a solid, steady, fearless column.

"One of the great lessons that the World War has taught us is the value of cooperative endeavor. During the war we had the tremendous inspiration of a united people, forgetting class distinction and working with exalted purpose for the common end of victory and the freedom of the world.

"In the actual conduct of the war this same spirit animated our armies. It was evident in the intensive training of the divisions, the corps, and armies for combat; in the rapid organization of the staffs; in the construction of wharves, railroads, and storehouses; in the accumulation of supplies and munitions and plans for distribution, all successfully accomplished and made effective by the loyalty and the valor of the fighting man.

PATRIOTISM A CURE FOR UNREST.

"It is this devotion to the Nation's welfare that will enable us to meet the unrest in the world to-day. While the cataclysm of war has brought the downfall of autocratic government, many of its misguided victims have embraced dangerous doctrines and would fain destroy all organized government. But the triumph of democratic government is its guaranty of permanence.

"I am optimistic about the future of America. We have our problems, of course, and, intensified by the war, some of them are difficult and troublesome, but the people who stood behind our Government from patriotic motives are going to solve them in the interest of the greatest number of Americans. They are going to do so with the support of the gallant men who composed our armies. In their ranks you will not find men of anarchistic or revolutionary tendencies, nor among them the bearers of the red flag of destruction. I am confident that they will meet their new obligations as citizens with the same aggressiveness and the same heroism that carried our standards to victory.

"It is for all of us constantly to exercise in peace the patriotism that inspired us during the war. It is for us to make this country safe for real Americans. We shall neither permit revolutionary nor Bolshevist elements to spread terror and disorder. We shall teach them that ours is ever a Government of laws and not of individuals nor of cliques of lawless aliens.

"I hope that the last war has been fought, but it would be folly for the Nation to revert to a condition of unpreparedness. I am making this trip to study the material side of our necessities. The intelligent cooperation of the several branches of the Government and of all loyal people is needed to find an effective plan that will best suit our traditions, and at the same time bestow the highest benefits upon our youth, both native and foreign born. This is a matter of national importance, and I beg leave to urge its consideration upon every man in this congress.

THINKING OF THOSE WHO FELL.

"When I think of our Army in France my mind goes back to those who fell; to the men who gave their all that you and I might be free to work out our destiny without threat of foreign dictation. They deserve the love and veneration of all our people, and that they will receive in full measure for all time. Their example of fine courage and noble sacrifice has passed into our history, to be an inspiration to us always.

"I think, too, of the thousands who gave all but their lives and are now at home permanently disabled. We can not abandon those of our numbers who bravely met these misfortunes. If as a people we fail adequately and intelligently to care for these brave men and give them without delay the opportunities they deserve as self-respecting citizens, it will be to our everlasting shame.

"I am glad to have this opportunity to express to the governors and the people of the Southern States my own humble thanks for their unfaltering support, and to extend my congratulations upon the magnificent conduct of their stalwart soldiers in battle."

Opposition to Large Standing Army and Compulsory Military Training.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. OSCAR E. KELLER,

OF MINNESOTA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, March 8, 1920.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks on this bill, I desire to set forth my views thereon, and also on the question of universal compulsory military training, which I think is indirectly written into this measure.

An analysis of the speech of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY], in presenting this measure to the House, creates the suspicion in the minds of a great many people that the sole purpose of this enormous standing Army is preparedness for a possible disturbance within our country; that the question of a near future foreign war is only secondary.

It is universally known that our internal condition at the present time is not such as would necessitate an immense standing Army, nor is there danger of any internal condition developing in the near future, unless the rights and liberties of the people are imposed upon by the enactment of vicious and reactionary legislation, which would call for such a large standing Army. It is my contention that at no time will we need such a large standing Army to protect this country from internal strife. The vast majority of the American people can be relied upon to stand up for their rights and privileges, and to exercise their right of franchise to obtain the enactment of any laws or to amend the Constitution if they see fit to do so. The tremendous expense involved in the upkeep of such a military machine as is proposed in this bill is absolutely unnecessary and beyond reason at this time. If the committee, with all its wisdom and foresight, could show by figures and facts and precedent that such an organization was indeed necessary to protect our country against external aggression by a foreign power at some time in the near future, there, of course, would be no argument against such a large standing Army.

The able gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. OLNEY] stated in his remarks a few days ago that "You would be considered careless and neglectful, indeed, if you failed to insure your dwelling house against loss by fire," but he failed to state that the law holds you criminally liable for pouring gasoline on your house and setting it afire. Our country all these years has been protected by our standing Army of 100,000 soldiers against any internal disturbance that has arisen, and it can safely and reasonably be assumed that a like force will adequately cope with any disturbance that might arise in the future. But it can readily be seen that by shackling labor and by interfering with the rights and liberties of the people by the enactment of vicious and reactionary legislation it will be necessary to maintain an Army infinitely greater than that now planned to combat the wave of unrest that will sweep the country. To burden the people with this enormous expense at a time when economy in this respect should be practiced to the limit would be "pouring gasoline on your house and setting it afire." We have all been urged to economize and retrench wherever possible; our Government has even eliminated a great deal of experimental work necessary to stimulate production, yet here in one lump sum we will spend $500,000,000 and then say we are economizing. I believe that money should be spent in developing our Navy to protect our merchant marine; money should be appropriated to develop our aerial service; to establish a scientific department to experiment with explosives, new guns, and so forth, to keep up with the times. Adequate provision should be made to develop officers for our Military Establishment. But to adopt a plan whereby the youth of our land would be taken from productive fields and placed in nonproductive activities, especially at a time when every ounce of our energy, when every bit of our man power is necessary to aid in the stupendous program of reconstruction that faces us, would be the height of folly. Let us organize our Military Establishment on the same basis existing prior to the war, utilizing, of course, the experiences taught us by the war; make it the foundation of a vast war-time Army, and the vast civilian army can be relied upon, in an emergency, to do its share in protecting the country, as in the war just past.

I am absolutely opposed to universal compulsory military training; and yet, while the committee has stricken from this bill the direct provision for this plan, I am forced to conclude that this measure is nothing more nor less than a compulsory military training measure. Experience has taught us in the past that it was impossible to obtain enough recruits to maintain our Military Establishment at full peace-time strength; I doubt whether our Army has ever been 100 per cent enlisted, with all the inducements that have been held out to the young men of our land. If we could not maintain an Army of 100,000 soldiers by voluntary enlistment in the past, how are we ever going to obtain 300,000 voluntary enlistments, even though the inducements are greater than in the past? The draft must again, necessarily, be resorted to, as in the war just past, to raise a peace-time Army; and, pray tell me, how many of our citizens are going to submit to such a militaristic plot in peace time? I venture to say that the very foundation of our existence will be rocked by the storm of protest that will be raised throughout the length and breadth of our land should such a plan be instituted. And yet it looms, dark and foreboding, should this measure be enacted into law.

A further comparison of the House bill and the Senate bill, which includes the provision for compulsory military training, discloses the fact that both measures provide for approximately the same number of officers—17,000. If the House committee is sincere in its statement that the provision for compulsory military training has been divorced from this measure, why does it provide the same number of officers for an Army one-third the size of that which would result from the adoption of a universal military training plan? Why has not the commissioned personnel been reduced one-third? Failure of the committee to make this reduction more firmly convinces me that this is in reality a compulsory universal military training measure, and that the plan as outlined above is to be resorted to to bring the Army to the strength provided for in this measure. The foundation is laid for a future compulsory military training program.

What our Government needs to do at the present time more than anything else is to imbue the young American with the knowledge that the foundation of our Government, that our very existence as a free and liberty-loving people, is rooted in the home. The spirit that guided the fearless Pilgrim Fathers, the founders of our country, was the yearning for a place they could call home. Their deeds of valor in protecting what, to them, was home have been indelibly inscribed on the pages of history. It is our duty, as representatives of the people, to endeavor to perpetuate that spirit, to root it firmly in the minds of the younger generations; and the sooner the great mass of our young manhood become home owners and home lovers, the less will be the danger of physical unpreparedness in case of an emergency as developed during the recent war. Millions of young men will be physically fit and eager to defend their home, which means their country, against external aggression or internal strife. With a standing army of 150,000, properly officered, as a nucleus, a gigantic and all-powerful war-time army could shortly be whipped into shape to defend our country against any enemy that might raise its head.

The compulsory military training evil was clearly recognized by the representatives of the allied Governments in drafting the terms of the treaty of peace with Germany. It specifically provides that Germany's all-powerful system of compulsory military training, the perfection of which led the ex-Kaiser to believe that he could lick the world, must be abolished entirely; that her army must be raised by voluntary enlistments. Is this not sufficient proof that the system is menacing and destructive alike to the civilized world in general and to each individual nation in particular? If we deny the right to continue such a plan to a nation that has been forced to drink of the bitter cup of annihilation because of its misapplication of the tremendous power developed through the plan, should we, after spending thousands of lives and billions of dollars in successfully shattering this autocracy, adopt the very plan that caused the downfall of a mighty nation and brought suffering and sorrow and woe to every human heart? I repeat that I am most emphatically opposed to any plan of universal compulsory military training.

The Worm Turns—The State of Mississippi Rebels Against the Tyranny of the Federal Reserve Board.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDWARD J. KING,
OF ILLINOIS,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Friday, March 12, 1920.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, on the 28th day of February I introduced, pursuant to an insistent demand for relief, H. Res. 476, to investigate the administration of the Federal Reserve Act, which resolution is now pending before the Rules Committee.

To show the necessity of such investigation and the tyranny under which the banks of the States are subjected by the Federal Reserve Board, I herewith attach a copy of a law passed by the Legislature of Mississippi and approved by the governor on the 6th day of March, 1920, as follows, to wit:

HOUSE BILL NO. 651, AS APPROVED BY THE GOVERNOR MARCH 6, 1920.

An act to prevent the Federal Reserve System from forcing the banks of this State into what is known as the parring of checks, drafts, bills, etc. (commonly known as "cash items"); and for that purpose making it mandatory on the banks of this State to charge exchange on such "cash items"; and fixing the rates of such exchange.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, That for the purpose of providing for the solvency, protection, and safety of the banking institutions of Mississippi, the established custom on the part of the banks of this State to charge a service fee (commonly called "exchange") for collecting and remitting, by exchange or otherwise, the proceeds of checks, drafts, bills, etc. (commonly known among banks as "cash items") is hereby declared to be the law of this State; and the banks of this State, both State and National, shall continue to make such charge as fixed by custom when such "cash items" are presented to the payer bank for payment through or by any bank, banker, trust company, Federal reserve bank, post office, express company, or any collection agency, or by any other agency whatsoever; and the amount of such charge is hereby fixed at one-tenth of 1 per cent of the total amount of such "cash items" so presented and paid at any one time, and not less than 10 cents on any one such transaction; provided, however, no such charge shall be made on checks or drafts given or drawn in settlement of obligations due the State of Mississippi or any subdivision thereof, or of the United States. And that no such charge can be made by banks for the collection of checks deposited with said banks, where the check is drawn on any other bank in the same municipality, city, town, or village, this being the long-established custom of such banks. And provided that nothing in this act shall be deemed to be mandatory upon the banks to charge exchange on checks or drafts payable to a person in this State, and drawn on a bank, trust company, or person within or without this State, but it shall be optional with such banks whether they shall charge exchange on checks or drafts payable to a person within this State, and drawn on a bank, trust company, or person within or without this State.

SEC. 2. That no officer in this State shall protest for nonpayment any such "cash item," when such nonpayment is solely on account of the failure or refusal of any of said agencies to pay such exchange; and there shall be no right of action, either at law or in equity, against any bank in this State for a refusal to pay such cash item, when such refusal is based alone on the ground of the nonpayment of such exchange.

SEC. 3. That if for any reason the courts should hold that the national banks in this State are not required to charge and collect such exchange, still this act shall remain in full force and effect as to all other banks in this State; and in the event of such holding by the courts, or the refusal of any national bank in this State to comply with this act, then it shall be optional with State banks located in the same municipality with a national bank or State banks which are members of the Federal Reserve System as to whether such charge shall be made.

SEC. 4. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Is the Inflation of Money Responsible for Increased Cost of Living?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDWARD J. KING,
OF ILLINOIS,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Saturday, March 13, 1920.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, in support of House resolution 476, to investigate the administration of the Federal reserve act, I take pleasure in submitting to the honorable Members of the House of Representatives, for their information, a most intelligent and comprehensive explanation of the money conditions of the country in general by Mr. V. F. Newell, a widely known banking expert of Chicago, which is as follows, to wit:

CHICAGO March 10, 1920.

Hon. EDWARD J. KING, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Mention in the Chicago Tribune of your resolution on Federal reserve banks was a most agreeable surprise.

While the people are trying to reduce the cost of living, the banks seem to pull the other way. Published reports of the Chicago banks the 1st of this month shows they have added over $88,000,000 more to their lines of borrowed money in the last 60 days.

How can prices go down with loans and paper money going up?

Take the leading 12 banks of Chicago, combined; they showed in published reports on the 1st instant, $1,188,914,368 deposits and $1,124,214,370 money loaned. Having loaned out most of their deposits, they have borrowed $161,479,514. (The three banks called packer banks owe $101,337,000 of this amount.)

About $340,000,000 of their deposits are balances due to country and other banks, or about ten times the amount of actual cash on hand in their own vaults. Exchange and checks for the clearing house are not cash in case of need, any more than cashiers' checks were in the panic of 1907. Inflation has become a menace when 12 banks in a money center carry only 3 per cent of $1,200,000,000 deposits in cash on hand. Such banking is a scandalous condition, requiring drastic measures to avoid a great panic.

Banks not in the Reserve System should run exceptionally strong in cash at home. Big business wants to control all the money, to keep prices up and save being enveloped in their own folly and greed. Rival banks will not reform until the law compels them to act. If they are within the law, surely then the law is at fault.

Congress should prohibit any more issues of paper money at once. The reserve banks should not buy loans in the open market.

No member bank should be able to borrow more than half its own capital from the reserve bank. The largest banks have borrowed more than twice their capital. Any director of a reserve bank should not be allowed to borrow of it for any bank or company of which he is an officer.

If banks are not the cause of high prices, then why do they not help the people to lower them?

Banks should have been satisfied with their great increase in deposits the last three years without borrowing. It was very rare for banks in Chicago to borrow when they had to carry 25 per cent of their deposits in cash on hand.

I do not object to the high interest rates the reserve banks may charge on loans. I think the rate should be so high they never would make another loan, except to a bank which needs and can pay any price to save it in a storm.

Inclosed please find my article on present conditions. It has taken quite a little time to compile the figures and statements therein, which are correct.

I believe the information is not accessible as a rule to busy men in political activities.

Kindly read it carefully and then please have it read to the House and Senate Committees on Banking and Currency, for I hope it may be helpful in bringing about needed legislation.

I shall mail several copies, but wish it might be published by some concern, so bankers generally might read it.

I would mail 100 copies to the clearing houses of the country.

My article of last August to President Wilson was handed to the reserve board, and they honored me with a very kind and prompt reply at some length. But matters with the common people have been growing worse ever since from month to month, and a change must come, whether the banks like it or not.

Congress must help the reserve board to a new basis, that will make inflation impossible and start a return to normal prices.

Having served in banks for 20 years from messenger boy to cashier, I must confess it seems to me leading bankers have gone crazy and are incompetent to reform themselves or unnatural conditions.

Loans and prices must come down hand in hand.

I will gladly mail copies to any parties you may kindly suggest.

In giving a worker's viewpoint I hope I have not exceeded my privilege or taken too much of your time.

Yours, very truly,

V. F. NEWELL.

THE PUBLIC EXPLOITED BY BANKS.

(By V. F. Newell.)

After several years of advancing prices, with committees, commissions, investigations, and reports of incidents and conditions, we have become quite familiar with hoarding, profiteering, boycotting, and trade methods.

Those interested in maintaining high prices have cited many contributory causes for present unnatural conditions.

The naked facts have not been common information, nor has a real remedy been provided.

Population, property, prices, and money are four factors dependent on each other. Like four wheels, if any one of them is out of proportion, crooked, or out of track or larger than the rest, it disturbs the running of the other three wheels, and with any speed the vehicle is upset in the ditch.

To restore the normal relation of the four factors to each other it is necessary to secure a remedy from an investigation of the causes of inflation. The figures and facts which follow were compiled from regular published statements, and no competent person will deny them.

The big banks are responsible for present unnatural conditions and the high cost of most values. The high cost of living is the result of their reckless policies and profiteering in interest earnings.

A limit to the volume of money obtainable for use in trade is the only wall strong enough to halt human greed.

The Federal reserve banks tore this wall down.

Men did not profiteer without the funds to operate with.

Banks solicited their customers to use more money when they had all they needed on the old level of values. As a general rule securities and bonds have declined, throwing the burden of inflation onto the great staples of life.

Gold came from Europe, which was inflation enough of itself.

The 12 reserve banks were prostituted and run for profit. The reserve doors were opened for commercial business, and the reserve bank at Chicago had bought $92,650,000 bills in the open market on the first of the year. Their volume of expansion loans to member banks was the climax of inflation.

Banks borrowing money from each other from a common pot on which to expand was not the intention of the reserve bank act.

The 25 per cent reserve in cash on hand required of national banks in central reserve cities before reserve banks were organized was released, which added hundreds of millions more loanable funds.

Redundant money from these three sources must be absorbed and earn interest for the banks, no matter what the consequences might be.

It is hard to imagine the conditions of unrest that another billion of Europe's gold might have produced in the hands of the banker.

The volume of bank loans is now so great, based on high prices, banks will not cash an ordinary check in gold coin at their own counters, notwithstanding the stock of gold has doubled in the last five years.

The naked facts are, the men who should have protected society were the first to exploit and bleed it.

Everything sold to Europe during the war at exorbitant prices forced the home consumer to pay as much in a land of plenty.

When a man has been thrifty and saved a little money every year for many years, has he no rights that greed should respect, when the dollar is cut in halves?

War is the excuse offered by those who have benefited by unnatural prices. Suppose we had sent just a little gold to Europe instead of receiving it, does anyone think we would not have produced as much or more material wealth and moved it on the very satisfactory prices of 1913, giving most people better conditions than they have to-day?

Men produce when they need money, not when they have it. Too much paper money is the real cause of the lack of production.

How much less the national debt might have been, too, with sane policies and prices and avoided readjustment burdens.

With little increases in population, property, or real money, prices nearly doubled. The bankers were first on the field, and who but those with idle money could have started the ball to rolling?

Bankers may not have caused the storm of war, but did they keep the dikes in repair when the flood of inflation came?

An increase of money raises prices. A decrease in staples raises prices. Manipulation raises prices just as certainly.

With the three factors operating at the same time, the bankers added an avalanche of credit instruments. The banks did not exercise their power or duty to curb inflation. Men increased their debts, when increased funds should have enabled them to reduce or pay them.

Aside from the domination of banks in the high cost of living, perhaps the next cause for high prices was the management that permitted the Government to be defrauded out of several billion dollars on most of its war contracts. Children are now tax victims to pay culprits profits, who are still at liberty.

When the administration of departments at Washington gave early evidence of their lack of business experience, the bankers seemed to join the ranks of grabbers, instead of enforcing policies to keep the national debt at a minimum.

The nation-wide inflated condition of banking can not be maintained except by continued high prices. If bank excesses are within the law, the banks are still beyond the confines of prudence, and without regard to the lessons of history.

John Law's spirit must have joined many boards of directors.

It is up to the banks to rescue society from the turbulent whirlpool they set in motion.

The published reports of conditions of very many banks on the first of the year show that an astonishing number have borrowed money.

The majority of banks are still doing business on their own basis; the others should be compelled to do so.

Financing the staples of life for corporate gain was not as important as Government loans, which should have received first consideration.

The Federal reserve banks easily take first place among the causes of inflation in America. They have taught old established banks to borrow money for the interest scalp. They have taught banks to increase their loans faster than their deposits grew. Never before have banks in the central cities loaned out so recklessly hundreds of millions of the reserves of country banks deposited with them.

How delighted the Greenback Party of 40 years ago would have been with a machine that would print paper money as fast as do the new Federal reserve banks.

These times are not so mysterious in which we are living, when you consider the banks simply want the public to endure prices that will absorb the general stock of money of nearly $8,000,000,000.

For 20 years past gold and silver have increased fast enough for healthy growth without bank issues of paper money.

Coin, gold and silver certificates, legal-tender notes, national-bank bills, and the new stock of gold from Europe gave this Nation an ample supply of money of roundly $4,713,000,000.

Then the banks must try out the flexible currency fallacy, which has resulted in an issue of about $3,000,000,000 new paper money by the 12 Federal reserve banks. Prices had to advance to absorb this unwarranted increase of money. The result has been to undermine social conditions, rob the consumer, and add many billions of dollars to the national debt through unfair prices. The wonder of it all is that the public has been as patient as it has been.

A drastic reform must come, even if it is painful to the interest of profiteers and political banking.

Are the banks going to issue new paper money indefinitely and keep prices soaring still higher? What are their leaders dreaming of, anyway? To prevent still higher prices it is necessary for Congress to act at once and stop any further issue of paper money by the banks.

Competitive bankers will not voluntarily reduce their interest earnings by calling in loans or deflating the currency.

When banks are shown the limit of money obtainable, like an individual they will know on what basis they can safely operate.

Now is a good time to reduce the volume of paper money before gold goes out and goods increase the world over.

The Federal reserve banks have issued more paper money than all the 7,800 national banks combined four times over.

The Federal reserve bank at Chicago reported $541,088,475 of notes in circulation on the first of the year (1920).

While the people have been trying to reduce the cost of living, the reserve bank at Chicago issued $86,458,875 additional paper money in six months to January 1, 1920.

How is it possible to deflate prices and inflate the currency at the same time? This Chicago reserve bank reported the first of the year loans to member banks and bills bought $379,558,409.77 and deposits due to member banks $257,978,903.15.

To what extent are the reserves of country banks deposited with this reserve bank liquid and dependable when the reserve bank has loaned out $94,940,713.93 more than its own capital, surplus, and deposits? Suppose country or member banks wanted their reserves in cash, could the reserve bank meet the expectations of those who thought to make panics impossible by the Federal reserve bank act?

Let us consider the demoralizing effect the expensive reserve banks have had on old, established banks—banks, too, who would have scorned a few years ago to do what they are doing now.

Forty-five banks in Chicago alone reported in published statements of condition the first of the year the sum of $150,019,350 borrowed money.

Take the leading 12 banks of Chicago combined on the first of the year as an illustration of inflation most astonishing.

Ten of the banks showed $134,366,739.81 borrowed money. The 12 banks showed $346,711,748.87 due to country and other banks, or just about ten times the amount of actual cash on hand in their own vaults.

Their deposits were $1,218,833,391 against $716,968,490 June 30, 1914, a gain of 70 per cent or $501,864,901.

Their loans, stocks, and bonds were $1,090,473,807 against $583,004,668 June 30, 1914, a gain of 87 per cent or $507,469,139.

The 12 banks loaned $5,604,238 more than their gain in deposits, which accounts for 10 of them finding it necessary to borrow money.

Not one of them had any borrowed money five years ago.

Cash resources of the 12 banks, less borrowed money, are only $17,540,000 more than five and a half years ago, while their deposits are $501,864,901 greater.

Balances with other banks are little better than demand loans in case of need for cash, in a money center like Chicago.

Checks for the clearing house are balanced by checks received from the clearing house. The 12 banks had $371,000,000 of this kind of cash resources the first of the year.

Of actual cash in their own vaults they held around $35,000,000 or hardly 3 per cent of their deposits of $1,218,833,000.

June 30, 1914, they held 16 per cent in cash and no borrowed money.

When banks publish in reports of condition "Cash and due from banks" in one amount, the chances are their cash on hand is so low they are ashamed to print the amount separate from exchange on deposit with banks in other cities.

In the year 1907 banks had very much smaller deposits, and carried much stronger cash balances; still, to save themselves, they locked up their money and did business on cashiers' checks for several weeks.

Since June 30, 1914, in addition to paying regular dividends, the 12 banks increased their capital $9,300,000 and added to profits and surplus $20,067,065.

The gains of banks generally throughout the Nation demanded a very great increase in prices to place their loans on such a scale and gain such exceptional profits.

As securities declined the staples of life bore the burden.

This country never produced so much before, and foreign demand would have raised prices moderately with the former supply of money, and credit, and absence of manipulation.

So long as banks loan out their capital and most of their deposits, and then borrow money of the reserve banks with which to make more loans for the interest scalp, prices must remain on a high level to prevent a crash. So long as reserve banks are run for profit it appears inflation must continue.

The facts are banks made high prices possible, and now prices must remain high to keep the banks solvent.

Bankers can still climb down the ladder, and is it not better than to fall off? The fall might kill others.

How many banks are willing to call in one-fourth of their loans in order to restore more normal conditions?

Bank loans and earning power would still remain much greater than five years ago after such a reduction in most instances.

The claim that supply and demand caused the new level of prices can not be accepted, in view of the evidence of financial manipulation.

Every year experts report a grave shortage of cattle on the farm and range, when the reverse is the truth.

Receipts of cattle for the last three years at 53 live-stock markets were 64,717,400 head—enough hides to make shoes as low priced as before the war but for manipulation.

At the 14 principal markets for live stock, cattle receipts for three years (1913, 1914, 1915) were 30,522,000 head, and for the three years (1916, 1917, 1918) they were 43,900,000 head.

The last three years showed an increase of 50 per cent in supplies over the first three years.

This increase and reduced use of meats in the United States resulted in meats selling for about double the former price to the consumer.

The manipulation, of course, furnished the banks more good loans.

No other staple of daily life has compared to gasoline in its increased use the last three years. No other staple had as good an excuse for an inflation in price to a so-called war basis.

While the consumption of gasoline has increased sevenfold the last three years, the Chicago retail price has been very uniform for several years around 23 cents a gallon.

If manipulators in other staples had had control of it, how high would gas be selling for to-day?

Was not the price held uniform by the wisdom of the Standard Oil Co.? Does it not prove other staples with less demand were manipulated?

If the Standard Oil Co.'s policy had controlled staples generally there would have been much less demand for reserve bank paper money and little borrowing of money by banks.

Clearly prices were advanced without cause to absorb money and a new enormous volume of credit instruments. If the banks can now pay off their borrowed money before they have to pay their depositors they will be lucky indeed.

The claim that extravagance is the cause of the high-price level is absurd, when extravagance is only an incident of increased prices and wages. The great majority of the people are economizing to the limit and buy a pint of milk when they used to buy a quart.

With the advance in rents, milk and sugar will be as rare as gold coins in many homes.

How to bring the underfed school children in contact with the overfed pocketbook of inflation is a problem for the Nation to consider. How easy it is to raise money for gain incident to war, and how hard it is to properly adjust in times of peace.

The insane greed incident to war, the effect on the minds and time of men by the increase of sevenfold, or 4,209,000, automobiles in three years, speculation in land, price manipulation, selling the food from our own table, retailing goods for 100 per cent profit, ripening melons for big business, and the domination of labor unions who were simply trying to catch up, have all added to prices and the cost of living and thrown values out of their former relation to each other. Three billions of new paper money, issued by the Federal reserve banks, enabled the bankers to finance all these factors with great profit to themselves.

Gradually, but steadily, the reserve banks must retire their paper money. The system of banks borrowing each other's money from a Federal reserve bank pot is inflation enough of itself.

Prices and wages seek their relation to the volume of money as surely as water seeks its own level. Legal-tender notes and national-bank bills were just about $10 per capita for many years.

It would have been well for all if this amount of paper money had not been exceeded and the new stock of gold from Europe held as being inflation enough for all the increased demands of sane trade.

So long as the reserve banks are run for profit and enable thousands of banks to borrow and dangerously expand their own loans we will continue to inflate.

When gold goes out and goods increase something is going to give way.

The volume of money in actual circulation has increased 60 per cent within five years. Prices that have advanced more than 60 per cent are out of proportion to money. Bank loans have gone up more than the increase in the amount of money, and the leading banks have nearly doubled their loans and reduced their cash assets.

We have had an example of what the American banker will do with a flexible currency.

A higher power than banks or a reserve board must fix the volume of money in use. The amount must be continuous and uniform to insure stable conditions and prevent exploitation of the public.

A nimble working dollar is superior to bulky flexible currency for honorable trade.

Crops, the supply of goods, prices in general, and bank loans may fluctuate as the tides come and go, but the volume of money per capita should not vary except by act of Congress with a year's notice of change.

Why should a small class of men have the right to change the volume of money any more than a select few be granted the exclusive right to change the number of inches in a yardstick at their own will for profit?

Banks say prices will stay up for a long time to come. Of course, they wish to liquidate loans made on inflated values without loss to themselves. What a shameful comment on bank management that prices must remain unnatural to keep the banks solvent.

Let us compliment the banker who keeps the old-fashioned percentage of cash on hand without any borrowed money.

It is very good to organize, protest, and attack prices of food articles. A drive here and there may lower prices temporarily, but will fail to lower the price level as long as the reserve banks keep printing more money.

Land, raw materials, iron, cotton, wool, corn, wheat, live stock, and bank loans must go down to produce a lower price level.

World money will go where it will buy the most, which does not promise to continue the present price level here.

Another view: Readjustment and changed world conditions may stabilize the new level of prices.

The reserve banks may be reformed and continue without being a menace to finance. The present stock of gold in the United States may be maintained. The new order of things may be helpful in paying the Nation's debts and necessary to absorb the increasing supply of the precious metals, and better serve the needs of finance and trade.

Then let it be understood and proclaimed that there will be no reduction of money, prices, or credit, and stop looking for lower levels. In fact, low prices are not as desirable as that all prices have their proper relation to each other on a common level, high or low.

Then individuals and corporations can adjust to the new conditions and all participate in the prosperity that has come to others.

For 50 years preceding the war the average pay for an hour's labor, in many lines and sections, skilled and unskilled, was practically 1 per cent of the amount of money in circulation per capita.

Some were paid a little above, and some a little below at seasons.

Thus when the amount of money in circulation in 1879 was $16 for each person, 10 hours' labor received $1.60, or 16 cents an hour. When money rose to $23 per capita, 10 hours' labor received $2.30, or 23 cents an hour. When money reached $35 per capita, 10 hours' labor received $3.50, or 35 cents an hour.

To-day, with $55 per capita in circulation, 10 hours' labor should receive $5.50, or 55 cents an hour, as a minimum wage, if a person is to earn the same purchasing power as under former conditions, which have obtained for 60 years past.

Some unions have secured that rate; the rest of workers get much less, and therein lies the unrest and injustice of the times.

Fifty-five cents an hour as an average minimum wage would put a man only where he was when milk was 6 cents a quart, beef 12 cents a pound, flour $5 a barrel, and sugar 7 cents a pound, relatively.

Purchasing power must rise to the new level of prices, or prices must come down to a point where purchasing power is restored.

Big business demands melons and extravagant profits. Banks want greater interest earnings. Merchants want greater margins of profits on retail sales. Every tax is passed on to the consumer.

Labor wants the former purchasing power of wages on less hours. All must return to legitimate working margins of profit, forget the melons and speculative scoops, and follow the example of the Standard Oil Co. in a real service to society.

Women can organize and do much to crystallize public opinion into better laws. Not too low prices, but right prices, with the right proportion to each other, is the solution desired.

The reserve banks should begin at once to retire the greater part of their inflated paper money. Congress should compel this reform.

When a bank needs money let it collect part of its loans instead of hiking to the reserve bank to borrow for an extra interest scalp.

Reserve banks should not be run for profit any more than the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, or the United States Treasury at Washington.

Reform the banks and prices will reform themselves.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN G. COOPER,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, March 17, 1920.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing two editorials from the American Federationist, which is the official organ of the American Federation of Labor. These editorials deal with the question of bolshevism and the evil effect it has had on the people of Russia, and at the same time it is a patriotic appeal from Mr. Samuel Gompers to the American workingmen against this terrible menace which is trying to inject itself into the hearts and minds of the American people.

The editorials are as follows:

[From the American Federationist, February, 1920.]

THE TRUTH ABOUT SOVIET RUSSIA AND BOLSHEVISM.

No possible opportunity for the creation of sentiment favorable to the soviet idea is overlooked by the soviet propagandists in America. That the Russian Bolshevist government maintains in this country a continuous propaganda is no longer a secret. It is to be doubted, however, whether the propaganda which emanates directly from the Bolshevist organization itself is more effective than the propaganda which is conducted by those who claim to be entirely detached from Russian influence and Russian pay rolls. It is doubtful whether those publications issued more or less directly by Russian Bolshevist agents have as great an effect in America as those publications which style themselves "liberal" and which like to be known as "journals of opinion," such as the Nation, the Dial, and the New Republic. In the same class with these are a number of newspaper and magazine writers who have within the last two years become more or less well known as writers on the Bolshevist question.

In all of these avenues of publicity there is what passes as an air of tolerance under the guise of which, however, support of the Bolshevist experiment has been at least generous.

The most recent plea of these "liberal" publications and individuals is for withholding all judgment on Russia; as was said in a recent editorial in one of the leading publications of this class, "We know nothing about Russia." It is set forth that our information concerning Russian affairs and Russian events is so incomplete as to make the passing of judgment unwise.

The American people are told that since they do not know what is going on in Russia it is unfair and unwise to pass judgment. There is something about a plea of this character that to the superficial sounds plausible enough. Of course, it is intended that it should sound plausible. On the surface it has all the earmarks of a plea for caution and fair play in the interests of balanced judgment and justice. Not everyone, however, will be deceived by this surface appearance. It will be apparent at once to a great many that bolshevism is an issue by itself and the merits or demerits of bolshevism as a system of government may be judged by Americans without reference to the facts as they concern conditions existing in Russia at the present moment.

It was not necessary for Americans to know at all times just what were the exact conditions in Germany before passing judgment on the form of government existing in Germany. It was necessary only to know what was the form of government and under what rules it operated. We do not have to wait for information about the form of government existing in what is called Soviet Russia. All the information necessary to the passing of judgment on bolshevism as a system of government and as a state of society is at hand from sources that are authentic.

The plea of those misguided persons in America who say, "Wait for facts before passing judgment," is nothing more than an excuse which it is hoped will gain time for the Russian experiment and enable it to spread to other countries. It may be of interest to set down here some of the facts about Bolshevist Russia which have long been accessible to all America and which have long been known to all those who cared to have the information.

The constitution adopted by the Fifth Pan-Russian Congress abandons all claim to represent the people as a whole and declares for "a dictatorship of the proletariat and the poorest peasantry."

The largest bolshevist estimate of the numbers of the proletariat calculates them as being only one-fifth of the number of peasants. The manner in which a great portion of the peasantry is disfranchised will be seen in the following extract from the new constitution (see sec. 8, art. 1):

"The Pan-Russian Congress of Soviets consists of representatives of the urban soviets—1 delegate for each 25,000 voters—and representatives of the provincial congresses—1 delegate for each 125,000 voters."

By this method democracy is repudiated in the practice of soviet government. Lenin's own antipathy to democracy is found more clearly stated in his denunciation of the menshviki, which is the rival faction of the social democratic party:

"In its class composition this party is not socialist at all. It doesn't represent the laboring masses; it represents fairly prosperous peasants and workingmen, petty traders, and many small and some even fairly large capitalists, and a certain number of real but gullible proletarians who have been caught in the bourgeoisie net."

It will be seen here that even a "fairly prosperous" workingman is not a proletarian and as an individual is to be looked upon with more or less of scorn.

Karl Radek, high in the councils of bolshevism, stated in an interview given in Berlin to a correspondent of the New York Globe that "the claim made by some of our people that the majority of the Russian people favor the soviet government is not true. The peasants are against the soviet government."

It is fair to say that the peasants constitute some 85 per cent of the Russian people.

Bolshevist statistics show how small is the Bolshevist minority which governs the soviets under the rule of absolutism in the name of the proletariat while truly representing neither the rural nor urban masses. These statistics show that the Bolshevist minority does not even represent the masses of the factory workers in Moscow, the stronghold. The following figures are from the Bolshevist publication, Communar, of May 17, 1919:

"The Sytin Printing Works employs 1,600 persons. In the communist nucleus there are 10 communists and 60 sympathizers. After the meeting at which an anti-Kolchak resolution was defeated, a "vindication committee" was elected to explain in the press the true attitude of the shop: The workers of the shop are against Kolchak, but they would not adopt the resolution because it came from the Bolsheviki.

"'Postavschik' employs 2,660 workmen. The nucleus has 36 communists and 10 sympathizers. Of these there are only 8 persons in the place and no party work is therefore conducted. The shop committee consists of communists. Literature is well distributed—700 copies of newspapers and from 15 to 200 copies of magazines.

"Here we see that even the immense soviet subsidies for propaganda are futile, in spite of the fact that the workers are advanced socialists, shut off from the outside world and without an independent press. It will be noted that in most of these factories the economic dependence of the workers on the soviets for jobs, bread tickets, and factory subsidies—to say nothing of terrorism—has led to Bolshevist committees or shop officials.

"'Bromley': One thousand two hundred workers employed. The group consists of 10 communists and 15 sympathizers. The group meets every week. The factory committee is communist. The general state of mind is improving.

"'Einem': Employs 1,400 workers, 850 of whom are women. The nucleus has 40 communists and 8 sympathizers. Their influence in the factory is little. The presiding officers of the shop committee are communists. Lectures are arranged occasionally. Newspapers are well distributed.

"'Centrosoyuz': Nine hundred working women are employed. The nucleus has 25 communists and 4 sympathizers. The women are very backward and party work among them is very difficult.

"'The Electric Station of 1886': One thousand three hundred workmen are employed. The communist group has 27 members. Party work is not being conducted. The general state of mind is calm. The shop committee is communist."

This publication lists 16,000 workers in one part of Moscow and finds among these 687 Bolshevist party members and sympathizers. The one union mentioned in the district shows about one-half of its members in these two classes.

Concerning the "chaotic, topsy-turvy" activities of the soviets, Maxim Gorky, while editor of an independent Bolshevist paper in Russia and while himself a Bolshevist, declared:

"The decrees of the government of people's commissioners are no more than newspaper feuilletons; no more, no less. It is that sort of literature which is written on water, and even though a real idea is now and then given expression, to the present circumstances forbid the realization of any idea.

"Lenin possesses all the qualities of a 'chief,' including the absolute moral indifference which is often necessary to such a part. This people has already paid for Lenin's 'experience' with thousands and thousands of lives. It will still cost tens of thousands more. But this atrocious tragedy never makes Lenin hesitate, for he is the slave of dogma, and his partisans are his slaves. The working classes are to Lenin what minerals are to the metallurgist. Can a socialist-nationalist State be made of this mineral? Indeed, no; and Lenin doubts it. But why not try? What does Lenin risk if the attempt does not come off? Nothing much."

Concerning those things for which bolshevism stands and the Bolshevist methods of obtaining power and of furthering the cause of bolshevism throughout the world there is ample documentary evidence.

Bruce Lockhart, whose competency is testified to by Raymond Robins, and who was in Russia at the same time as an unofficial English representative persona grata to the Bolshevist ruling powers, had this to say:

"The avowed ambition of Lenin is to create civil warfare throughout Europe. Every speech of Lenin's is a denunciation of constitutional methods and a glorification of the doctrine of physical force. With that object in view he is destroying systematically, both by execution and by deliberate starvation, every form of opposition to bolshevism. This system of 'terror' is aimed chiefly at the liberals and non-Bolshevist socialists, whom Lenin regards as his most dangerous opponents."

Oscar Tokoi, first constitutionally elected prime minister of Finland, who spent several months in Russia as a pro-Bolshevist, set down this verdict:

"In comparison with the entire population only a small minority supports the government, and, what is worse, to the supporters of the government are rallying all the hooligans, robbers, and others to whom this period of confusion promises a good chance of individual action.

"Even a great part of those who from the beginning could stay with the government and who still are sincere social democrats, having seen all this chaos, begin to step aside or to ally themselves with those openly opposing the government. Naturally, as time goes by, there remains only the worst and the most demoralized element. Terror, arbitrary rule, and open brigandage become more and more usual and the government is not able to prevent it.

"Naturally, only a small part of the people will remain backing such an order."

The world-wide revolutionary aims of the Bolsheviki are clearly indicated in last year's May-day proclamation of the Communist International, in which appeared this phrase:

"Long live civil war, the only just war in which the oppressed class fights its oppressors."

A more recent proclamation contained the following declaration:

"Conquest of the political power means not merely a change in personnel, but annihilation of the enemies' apparatus of the government. The revolutionary era compels the proletariat to make use of the means of battle which will concentrate its entire energies, namely, mass action with its logical resultant direct conflict with the government machinery in open combat."

The "mass terror" tactics of the Bolshevist rulers is characterized in numerous Bolshevist orders which have been published and of which the following official order of the commandant of the fortified district of Petrograd quoted from Izevestia of August 16, 1919, is a fair example:

"I warn all that in the event of repeated cases of arson, I will not hesitate to adopt extreme measures, including the shooting of the bourgeoisie hostages, in view of the fact that all the White Guard's plots directed against the proletariat state must be regarded not as the crime of individuals but as the offense of the entire enemy class.

"Signed: Acting commandant of the fortified district of Petrograd.

"B. KOZLOVSKY."

The following official soviet telegram dated September 2, 1918, justifies mass terror as a reprisal, but also refers to the fact that it had been previously adopted:

"Notwithstanding frequent pronouncements urging mass terror against the socialist revolutionaries, White Guards, and bourgeoisie, no real terror exists. Such a situation should decidedly be stopped. End should be put to weakness and softness. All right Socialist revolutionaries known to local soviets should be arrested immediately. Numerous hostages should be taken from the bourgeoisie and other classes. At the slightest attempt to resist or the slightest movement among the White Guards mass shooting should be applied at once. Initiative in this matter rests especially with the local executive committees."

Terrorism is not denied by the Bolsheviki. Soviet Russia, published in New York City, as an organ of "Ambassador" Martens, makes the plain declaration that if the policy of the Entente is not changed there may follow "total extermination of the Russian bourgeoisie by the exasperated masses."

Concerning the reasons for adoption of terrorist methods, Radek has said:

"I am one who does not deny that there has been terror in Russia. The government had to adopt drastic measures to keep the hungry, disgruntled, war-weary millions in leash."

Lenin himself does not always excuse his civil war as a defensive proposition. In his address to American workingmen, the text of which is declared genuine by Martens, Lenin said:

"In reality the class struggle in revolutionary times has always inevitably taken on the form of a civil war, and civil war is unthinkable without the worst kind of destruction, without terror and limitations on the form of democracy in the interest of war. One must be a sickly sentimentalist not to be able to see, to understand, and appreciate this necessity.

"The class struggle is permanent. We are living in revolutionary times. In order to fight the class struggle effectively in such times, in order to get power and keep it, civil war, terrorism, etc., are necessary. Here is the whole doctrine."

Early in Lenin's civil war Gorky wrote:

"The revolutionary army garrison at Sebastopol has already undertaken the last final struggle with the bourgeoisie. Without much ado they decided simply to massacre all the bourgeoisie who lived within their reach. They decided and did it. At first they massacred the inhabitants of the two most bourgeoisie streets in Sebastopol, then the same operation, in spite of the resistance of the local soviet, was extended to Simferopol and then came the turn of Eupatoria.

"Apparently similar radical methods of class war will soon be applied to Greater Russia.

"In Russia conscience is dead. The Russian people, in fact, have lost all sense of right and wrong. 'Pillage whatever there is to pillage.' Such is the motto of the two groups of bolsheviki. The red guards, constituted to attack the counter revolutionaries, shoot without trial anyone whom they suspect. Pillage in all its forms is the only thing which is organized. In Petrograd every bolshevist citizen may share in the spoil."

This was written by Gorky early in 1918. This date should be borne in mind upon reading the remainder of Gorky's statement, which follows:

"For the period of revolution 10,000 lynchings have already been accounted for. This is how democracy is meting out judgment upon those who have in some way sinned against the new order.

"During the days of the progress of drunkenness human beings were shot down like dogs and the cold-blooded destruction of human lives came to be a commonplace daily occurrence. In the newspaper Pravda the programs of the drunken mobs are written up as the 'provocative acts of the bourgeoisie,' which is clearly a misrepresentation, the employment of a petty phrase which can only lead to the further shedding of blood."

The Moscow wireless New Year's message for 1920 was:

"In 1920 we shall attain a victorious end of civil war. Siberia, the Ukraine, the Don region, and the Caucasus desire soviets. There will also be soviets at Berlin, Washington, Paris, and London. Soviet authority will be supreme throughout the world."

Die Freiheit, the Berlin organ of the Independent Social Democrats, a revolutionary organ which has been most friendly to the Bolsheviki, says:

"Purity of principles is for Russia only an article for exportation. Always seeking to introduce anarchy and disorder in the world, Lenin to-day finds his road to Damascus, for he is making a fresh appeal to capitalist forms in order to reestablish the general economy of the country. The dictatorship of the proletariat is reducing itself to the dictatorship of a few communist leaders. The councils' system is broken up, for the workers have no longer any influence in the factories. The agrarian program of the communists is a complete fiasco."

An interesting point which it is well to recall is the total lack of moral sense on the part of the Bolsheviki, using the term "moral sense" as it is understood in the civilized world.

Zinoview, president of the Petrograd Soviet, discussing the Prinkopo Island proposal February 2, 1919, said:

"We are willing to sign unfavorable peace with the Allies. It would only mean that we should put no trust whatever in the bit of paper we would sign. We should use the breathing space so obtained in order to gather our strength in order that the mere continued existence of our government would keep up the world-wide propaganda which Soviet Russia has been carrying on for more than a year."

A wireless dispatch from Moscow dated December 11, 1919, quotes Lenin as follows:

"In a mass, they (the well-to-do peasants) are on the side of the capitalists and are not content with the revolution that has taken place. It will be necessary to wage a long struggle yet against this group. The mass of the middle peasantry stand among those who have exploited others. Here is our most difficult task.

"'For the present there is no choice,' Lenin concludes, 'we must assist the workers or the least hesitation will give victory into the hands of the landowners and capitalists.'"

The economic condition in internal Russia at the present time has absolutely nothing to do with the merits or demerits of the bolshevist philosophy of government.

The Russian economic situation should have not the slightest influence in determining the judgment of any person on the question of bolshevism as a philosophy of government and of social organization. If the Russian economic organization were perfect and were functioning regularly with Prussian efficiency it would not add one iota to the weight of proof in favor of bolshevism and should not be considered as having any bearing upon the question.

The facts concerning the economic organization of Russia, however, do not show such a state of perfection but show a state of affairs decidedly the contrary. It may be of interest to quote one or two Bolshevist authorities on this phase of the question merely by way of illumination.

The Severnaya Communar No. 78:

"There is an unprecedented decline of productivity in mills and factories. We must combat this resolutely."

The following statements, also highly illuminating, have been recently submitted by responsible Russian trade-unionists to Mr. W. A. Appleton as president of the International Federation of Trade Unions, forwarded by him to the American Federation of Labor, and form the most recent direct information:

DECEMBER 12, 1919.

To W. A. APPLETON,
President International Federation of Trade-Unions:

Statement by the Workers' Delegation—Ijevski and Vodkinska factories.

This delegation, which arrived at London on December 6, 1919, has by general consent of the workers of Ijevski and Vodkinska factories, and by the resolution passed at the sitting of the Ural's trade-union on June 15 the following mission to perform:

To inform the citizens of England concerning the present condition of Russia and the Russian working class.

We come forward as nonparty representatives of workingmen, and we do not wish to involve ourselves in English party politics. We turn to you in the first place as the representatives of a nonparty labor organization and ask you to give us your cooperation in the fulfillment of our mission.

We have up to now given no interview to the English press. We wish to declare hereby that we are ready to answer all direct questions, both in meetings and the press, and if necessary, to answer them before the Bureau of the International Federation of Trade Unions at Amsterdam.

In submitting this statement we appeal in the name of justice to international democracy.

(Signed) YPOVALOV,
President Vodkinska Union Metal Workers.
STRUMELOV,
Member of Directorate of Metal Workers' Union, Perm.
JANDERMOV,
Vice President Federated Trade Unions of Urals.
MENSHEKOV,
Member of Executive Committee, Ijevski Union of Organization.

The following supplementary statement is made by the delegate from the Vodkinska workers:

"The causes of the rising against the soviet rule by Ijevski and Vodkinska peasant and workmen it is my wish to explain:

"People reading and hearing the thunderous logic and blatant rhetoric of Lenin, Trotski, and their associates, but unfamiliar with the actual state of affairs in Russia, are not in a position to understand it. They may think that the party which is fighting against soviet rule, as established by Lenin and Trotski, consists of the bourgeoisie and the old reactionary group. To emerge from this illusion it is necessary to master the history of the situation. It is necesary to listen to the voice of the real Russia.

"We recognize that Russia economically lags behind other nations; that Russian manufacturers are in their early stages of development, and from economic laws it is certain that where there are not manufactures there can be no working classes, consequently there can be no bourgeoisie.

"In Russia, out of 180,000,000 inhabitants, 150,000,000 are peasants and about 20,000,000 are workers. Then we hear the Bolshevists talk about 'power for the peasants and workers.' But is that what they have brought about? No. The voice of real Russia proclaims to all the world the following story:

"The Bolshevists established their power by bayonets and broke the strength of peasants and workers, broke the elected assembly, which was on the principle of universal, direct-equal, and secret voting; broke all the societies of a democratic nature, such as the Zempstvos, that self-governing body elected by universal, direct, and secret voting. The Bolshevists ruthlessly, like autocratic gendarmes, killed all labor, political, and socialistic organizations, throttled the labor press, as, for instance, its organ of the social democrats and social republicans, and finally the Bolshevists established by degree the dawn of their own Tsarist socialism.

"Who split up the reserve funds of the trade unions? The Bolshevists. Who split up the trade unions as a class? By whose orders were all strikes put down by force of arms and amid plentiful executions? It was the Bolshevists who broke the workmen's cooperative societies and converted their shops into communal stores. The Bolshevists promised the Russian people bread, peace, and freedom.

"Actually, in place of peace they gave civil war, which destroyed all manufacture and stained every side with blood; in place of freedom—prison, exile, and the shooting party; in place of bread—famine and the grave. So it was that, having drunk to the full the cup of humiliation and tasted this red-bayonet socialism, Ijevski and Vodkinska recognized that further life of this sort was impossible, and though without arms, and armed only with the armor of right, with only their blistered hands to fight with, united in spirit, to a man they rose against the oppressors, and, by virtue of their strength of will, snatched the rifles from the hands of the red guard and began the battle for citizens' rights and the freedom of the Russian people.

"The reader asks why bolshevism holds out so long if the peasants and workers are fighting against it. This is the true answer: All the world knows that the Bolshevists concluded peace with Wilhelm, disarmed the Russian Army, and with the Germans began to shoot down the workers and peasants. All the time their chief power has rested in Magyars, Chinese, Letts, Czar's gendarmes, capital criminals, and Communists.

"All these dark forces, armed to the teeth, are driving, under threat of death, father against son, brother against brother, and the Russian people, which bore the first brunt of the mailed fist of Teutonic junkerdom and, in the first place, saved France and all Europe from destruction's bite, now bleeds in the struggle against it, and looks to allied democracy all over the world in its turn to save Russia.

"(Signed) YPOVALOV."

A supplementary statement by a member for the Ijevski factory follows:

"We, Ijevski and Vodkinska workers, who raised the standard and took arms against bolshevism, are anxious to give our story to English workers and to English newspapers. We wish to explain the reason which led to our revolt, for we can not at present understand why part of the English press regards the Bolshevists as the friends of trade-unionism. We Russian workers have found that the Bolshevists turned out enemies to trade-unionism as big as the capitalists of the Czar's time. We are ready to give you details of the horrors which we workers have lived through under the régime of their despotic sway. We will give you the story of the decline of Russian productivity, and with it the eclipse of the industrial classes.

"We took up arms against our oppressors in the name of the duty which we owe to labor's flag, for which hundreds and thousands of its loyal defenders have died in our part of the world.

"(Signed) MENSHEKOV."

The point which it is intended to convey is that there is available in America and there has been in free circulation for months ample information of an authentic and official character descriptive of bolshevism as applied to government in Russia. No American who cares to take the pains to read that which is almost thrust under his observation need have the slightest doubt about the philosophy of bolshevism or about the aims of the Bolshevist government set up by Lenin and Trotski in what is known as Soviet Russia.

It is not necessary to withhold judgment on the ground of insufficient information, nor is it all to the point that there are facts about the economic structure in Russia concerning which we are not informed. Judgment as to whether the political structure of bolshevism is good or bad, democratic or antidemocratic, desirable or undesirable, must be formed on the basis of facts about the character of that structure itself. An autocracy may be efficient in feeding and clothing its subjects, but the American mind will insist upon passing judgment on autocracy upon the facts relating to the autocracy itself and not upon the basis of whether it feeds the people or doesn't feed them. Industrial efficiency can never pass current in the United States as a reason for the existence of an autocracy.

In all concepts of freedom within the American Nation one fundamental principle is that any involuntary servitude—that is, compulsory labor—shall not be enforced upon the working people. Indeed, as a result of the American Civil War of 1861–1865, 4,000,000 colored slaves were freed and an amendment to the Constitution of the United States adopted, as follows:

"Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction."

And that concept and the spirit of that amendment have been entirely reversed by the constitution of Bolshevist Russia, which provides for and enforces compulsory labor.

The plea to withhold judgment on the ground that "we know nothing about Russia" is a plea based on a false assumption and a plea which should be denied a hearing for the simple reason that we do know about Russia in all those essentials which are necessary in passing judgment on bolshevism. The plea to withhold judgment is a last desperate attempt to win favor from the American people for a system of government which by the confession of its own advocates and defenders is foreign to every concept of the American Republic.

We know about Russia. We know about bolshevism. We know the piteous story of cruelty and intolerance, and we know the autocratic concept that underlies the minority dictatorship which is hailed to the world by its dupes and advocates as the most perfect state of society yet devised.

We know about it and we condemn it completely, finally, and for all time.

THE TRUTH ABOUT SOVIET RUSSIA AND BOLSHEVISM—NO. 2.

Fresh developments in France emphasize a truth about bolshevism which is too often overlooked by students of that manifestation of human fallibility. These new developments should serve to clarify the general understanding of the true character of bolshevism. The French Socialist Party has declared its adherence to what is known as the third international. In the course of a somewhat lengthy declaration there is this paragraph:

"The French Socialist Party indorses with all its power the suggestion of the German independents, and will work for the world unity of socialism by the fusion of all elements of the second international which have remained faithful to the class struggle with the groups that compose the third international."

The important and significant news is not alone that the French Socialist Party has indorsed the third or communist international, which was called into being by Lenin and is dominated wholly by him. The important and significant news is that the French socialists support bolshevism while the French trade-unionists do not.

That which the French socialists indorse and cling to has been repudiated by the trade-unionists by a vote of 4 to 1. This action was taken recently by the French Confederacion Generálé du Travail (the French Federation of Labor).

The truth that has been evident for a long time to those who understand the character of various movements which pretend to represent "the working class" is that the main support of bolshevism really is closely akin to a bourgeoisie support and that the main strength of Bolshevist sentiment throughout the world is in reality a middle-class support and not at all a working-class support, except to a decidedly minor degree.

Examination of the facts will make this clear. The French Socialist Party is a political organization in which politics is played with extreme vigor and finesse, and which is wholly dominated by persons who, by every mark that goes to classify individuals, are of the middle class. Certainly they have no organic connection with the ranks of labor. French socialist leadership is, superficially at least, "a scholarly affair." It is much such a profession as the law, medicine, or journalism. In fact, almost every French socialist politician of note also is a journalist, for the one profession makes the other necessary. The French socialist leader truly belongs to that section of bumptiously revolutionary society now generally known as the intelligentsia.

French labor unionism, on the other hand, is labor. Real labor needs no identifying tag. Its genuineness is apparent. Those who say they speak for labor are constantly proclaiming their authenticity. It is necessary that they should.

The prophets of bolshevism in France are the leaders of the Socialist Party, together with such men as Henri Barbusse and Anatole France—men who live and have their prosperity in the realm of wits and theories.

Bolshevism, according to Lenin's pronouncements, is a scheme for the enrichment of the producers of wealth and a device with which to confound all who do no labor. The adherents of bolshevism, beginning with Lenin himself, are not the producers, except in an entirely unimportant sense and to an almost insignificant degree. Emphasis is brought to this truth by the situation now existing in France.

But what has happened in France is only what has happened elsewhere. France freshly emphasizes the matter by the fact that the unions and the Socialist Party have taken official action almost simultaneously.

The Socialist Party in the United States has just decided to support the Lenin international. The Socialist Party here is no less doctrinaire, no less an organization of pretense, no less a forum for "professionals," than the Socialist Party in France. The American Federation of Labor, on the other hand, which alone speaks for labor in America, because it alone is labor, has repudiated bolshevism and pronounced it a menace to the civilization of the world.

In America, as in France, the socialist politicians and theorists are joined by other theorists in their advocacy of bolshevism. The purple fringe of intellectual freakishness in America is for bolshevism. It happens to be the mode; what the consequences might be to civilization were bolshevism to overthrow democracy causes them no apprehension.

In France the real producers will have none of bolshevism. In America the real producers will have none of bolshevism. In England the story is much the same, though the line is less clearly drawn, due to the manner in which the intelligentsia has seeped into trade-union leadership. But in the main bolshevism in England is a thing stamped with the approval of such men as George Lansbury and Ramsay MacDonald, theorists and politicians. The masses of the producers of England may have an affliction, but it is not bolshevism at all.

Even in Russia the real producers of Russian wealth have fled from bolshevism and accept its presence only because of compulsion. Russia's great wealth has been and is in the products of her land. Russian city industry has never bothered the world. But Russian wheat in normal times was an export commodity of vast proportions. Russian industry could not provide for the needs of Russia. Russian agriculture could provide for the needs of Russia and overflow through all Europe in a great golden stream of abundance. And the Russian peasant, the greatest productive agent in Russia, has not accepted bolshevism. Lenin himself complains bitterly of that fact.

In November, 1919—three months ago—Lenin spoke before the "First All-Russian Conference on the Work in the Villages." Izvestia on November 13 quoted Lenin's lament over the obstinacy of the peasant, a lament which Lenin has uttered a hundred times in his dictatorial career. Said he then:

"Here we have the most complicated and important problem of socialist reconstruction. The soviet and socialist power will be finally solidified only when the peasant is in unquestioning alliance with the workers."

Lenin always notes a difference between peasants and workers. His language seems to indicate that the peasant is a different kind of entity, more in the nature of a tool. He makes it clear, however, that without peasant support bolshevism is doomed to fail. He continued:

"The victory over Denikine, which is now not remote, will not be the final destruction of capitalism. This is understood by everybody. They will make more than one attempt yet to throw the noose about the throat of soviet Russia. The peasant, therefore, has no alternative; either he will help the worker—and then we shall conquer capitalism—or the least little wavering will bring again the shackles of capitalism."

Lenin, here and elsewhere, makes it clear that peasant support and cooperation are something which he has not been able to get, either by cajolery or to compel by force and atrocity. And without this "the least little wavering" will bring down his house.

In addition to all this, there is the recent utterance of Minister of Munitions Krasin in the Lenin autocracy. Krasin's remarks are quoted in the course of a character sketch published in Le Temps, of Paris, and republished in the New Europe. Krasin is quoted as having said to a friend of the writer: "Who still believes in socialism in Russia? Anyhow, neither I nor Lenin." Krasin has held four ministerial posts under Lenin, and the Temps writer describes his efforts in each as having been to restore "good bourgeoisie practices."

There is the situation. It is not blockades and outside opposition that bring soreness and apprehension to the heart of Lenin; it is the failure of the great producing masses within his own realm to rally to the support of his fantastic structure.

Throughout the world the actual producing forces of society have not been swerved by the exotic chords of Bolshevist propaganda. Their hands are too close to the machinery or society to be caught pulling the wrong lever. But that semidetached, though clearly differentiated, body of men and women whose time is spent in theorizing about the salvation of society and the future welfare of labor has been made dizzy by the madness of the Bolshevist whirl and has fallen in, about as was to have been expected. It is a fair measure of bolshevism—a scheme set forth as the salvation of labor, yet discredited the world over by the great producing masses of enlightened society.

There are some working people who believe bolshevism is good. This can not be denied, because they proclaim themselves. There have been some who believed in the I. W. W. There always is a small minority in any national population that will do the erratic thing, that will set itself against the overwhelming majority, but that can in no sense pretend to represent the will or the wish or the sentiment of the rank and file.

Bolshevism is a thing scorned by the producing masses. It is a child of abstraction—perhaps partly also a child of distraction—surely a freak and a scourge, the destruction of which is ardently desired by all those millions of people who are close to the roots and beginnings of things and who see clearly because they are close to fundamentals, where clouds can not form.

Thus it is becoming more and more difficult for the propagandists of bolshevism to make a case for it, more and more simple for others to record the exact facts against it, and more and more certain that this cancerous growth is not going to be a menace anywhere outside of Russia, where it was planted in an hour of great misfortune under such circumstances as men had never witnessed.

27. Voted for measure to require Government to educate and train soldiers disabled in the war with Germany.

32. I favor keeping faith with the people in the matter of good-roads construction in the United States and pledge myself to the policy of carrying on this work in each and every county in the State. I will see to it that every county shares in these appropriations and has a fair deal. I have the friendship and confidence of the various departments of the Federal Government that have to do in various ways with this question of road building, and it will be my desire and purpose to see that justice is done to all the counties in this matter.

33. Helped to pass the good roads act, which appropriated millions for building roads by cooperation between county, State, and Federal Government, these roads to lead from the farms to the towns and cities.

34. I favor the speedy completion of the Bankhead Highway. It will stand as a splendid tribute and testimonial to Alabama's beloved Senator's great service to the people of the whole country.

35. Since Senator BANKHEAD'S death I have determined, if elected to the Senate, to take up and carry on to completion the great good road work and river and harbor improvement that Senator BANKHEAD served so ably and well, and will help to complete the Muscle Shoal nitrate plant.

53. Helped to pass law taking tariff tax off of bagging and ties and agricultural implements.

54. Helped to pass law providing for the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people.

55. Have defended at all times the South's plan and policy of race separation in schools and churches and railroad trains, contending that this was the wisest and best way to handle the race problem. The failure to have separate street cars for whites and negroes in Washington caused me to have to inflict severe punishment upon a drunken negro who had insulted a white woman on the car.

56. In replying to an article in the Washington Post written by ex-President Taft a few months ago, I said:

Mr. Taft says that "each one of us has a responsibility to the community in dealing with colored citizens," and that is true. There is no better way of serving the community and no better way of serving the negro everywhere than being entirely frank with him and telling him the truth and the whole truth regarding an evil and a crime that lies at the bottom of nearly every race riot that has occurred in our country, and that is the crime of rape. That crime committed by negro men on white women in Washington recently started the riot in this city. It is unfortunate that Mr. Taft did not call attention to and condemn the crime responsible for the race riot here. The negro who commits that offense against the white woman deserves to die, and whether it be in the North or in the South, the white man will see to it that the death penalty is imposed. When that crime is committed in the South the negro who commits it dies, but we never harm or permit anyone to harm an innocent negro. It is wrong and indefensible to attack an innocent negro because another negro, his neighbor, has committed a crime. It is the duty of the white man to distinguish between the law-abiding negro and the criminal negro, and it is the duty of the law-abiding negro to aid the authorities in apprehending the lawless negro who has committed the crime that stirs up race prejudice and produces race riot. It is clear, then, I submit to Mr. Taft, that the way to prevent an outbreak between the races is to remove the cause or crime that produces the outbreak.

57. Advocated separate cars for negroes and whites in the District of Columbia, city of Washington.

58. Advocated and helped to bring about the separating of the races in the Government departments at Washington, placing whites in one room and the negroes in another.

59. Helped to establish the Bureau of Markets, giving needed and valuable assistance and information to both producer and consumer.

60. For investigation and reporting upon the utilization of water in farm irrigation.

61. For investigating and reporting upon farm drainage and upon the drainage of swamp and other wet lands which may be made available for agricultural purposes.

66. To make investigation relating to the production, transportation, storage, preparation, marketing, manufacture, and distribution of agricultural food products.

69. For investigating the food habits of North American birds in relation to agriculture.

70. To carry into effect the provisions of an act to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States.

73. To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with the several States in the employment of agents to acquire and diffuse useful information connected with the distribution and marketing of farm products.

74. First to bring before a committee of Congress the wisdom and necessity of establishing a nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals, Ala., and advocated and helped to bring that great industry to the State.

80. For farmers' cooperative demonstrations and for the study and demonstration of the best methods of meeting the ravages of the cotton boll weevil.

81. To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the United States cotton futures act.

82. To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the existence of the pink cotton bollworm in Mexico, and to prevent the establishment of such insect in the United States by the employment of all means necessary.

83. To prevent the movement of cotton and cottonseed from Mexico into the United States, to make surveys to determine the actual distribution of the pink bollworm in Mexico, and to exterminate local infestations in Mexico near the border of the United States in cooperation with the Mexican Government or local Mexican authorities.

84. To conduct surveys and inspections in Texas or in any other State to detect any infestation and to conduct such control measures, including the establishing of cotton free areas, in cooperation with the State of Texas or other States concerned, as may be necessary to stamp out such infestation.

85. On account of the menace to cotton culture in the United States arising from the existence of the pink bollworm in Mexico, the Secretary of Agriculture, in order to prevent the establishment and spread of such worm in Texas and other parts of the United States, is authorized to make surveys to determine its actual distribution in Mexico; to establish in cooperation with the States concerned a zone or zones free from cotton culture on or near the border of any State or States adjacent to Mexico; and to cooperate with the Mexican Government or local Mexican authorities in the extermination of the local infestations near the border of the United States.

86. Advocated and helped to take away from cotton exchanges final decision in the matter of settling disputes arising between buyer and seller regarding cotton grades named in contract, and aided in placing a provision in the law requiring the Secretary of Agriculture, through expert cotton men in the department, to determine the grade and classification of the cotton in dispute, thus requiring the seller to deliver spinable cotton and the grade named in the contract. This required the seller to call upon the producer for real cotton with which to fill his contract.

87. Was the pioneer in crying out against speculation in cotton futures where no delivery of cotton was contemplated.

88. Started the fight on the 28 grades of stuff called cotton tendered in settlement of future contracts on the exchanges and stated that the farmers of the South were robbed through this thieving system alone of millions of dollars every year.

89. Aided in passing a law which reduced the number of grades from 28 to 10, thus enabling the buyer to compel the seller to deliver real cotton—cotton that represented the real crop—and not the rat-nest stuff that used to be kept and tendered on exchanges in settlement of future contracts. Under this new plan when the delivery of cotton was demanded the seller had to go into the spot market and buy the cotton from the farmers and merchants with which to fill his contract, and the exchange was in this way, in a measure, made to help distribute the crop.

90. Led in the fight to secure cotton statistics which enabled the farmers, merchants, and bankers of the cotton-growing States to handle the cotton business intelligently and in a businesslike way. The Government was then publishing only the reports of cotton ginned, and the cotton spinner had all the information that he needed regarding cotton produced, but the farmer and merchant did not have any authentic information regarding the consumption and exportation of cotton.

91. Was first to advocate and insist upon the Government gathering and publishing statistics giving the amount of cotton consumed each month by the cotton mills of the United States, the amount of cotton on hand from time to time at the mills and warehouses of the country, the amount exported each month, and the amount of old cotton left over at the end of the year. I aided in securing the passage of this law. Before this much-needed information was obtained the speculators would give out false and misleading reports regarding the amount of cotton being consumed and exported. When certain speculators and spinning interests in the East and in New England demanded that a price be fixed on cotton, and two bills were introduced in the House—one to fix the price at 15 cents and other at 20 cents—I found that the purpose of certain Members of the House who did not live in the cotton-growing States was to fix the price at not more than 20 cents a pound, and I fought the proposition bitterly, and by helping to defeat it prevented distress and suffering in the South and saved millions of dollars to the farmers, merchants, and bankers of the cotton-growing States.

92. In the fall of 1918 and spring of 1919, when foreign interests and bear speculators in America united their forces in one mighty effort to break down the price of cotton in the United States and succeeded in breaking the exchange price from $40 to $75 a bale, I made 10 speeches in the House and 12 in the cotton belt declaring that there was no excuse for a decline in prices—that the supply was not sufficient to meet the demands—and urged cooperation between farmer, merchant, and banker, saying that they could and would win the fight, and they did. Cotton advanced more than $75 a bale. When the banks of the South had loaned large sums of money on cotton, and when these banks continued to carry the loans, even after the price of cotton had been beaten down below the amount on which the banks had made the loans, certain speculative and spinning interests tried to get the Government to arbitrarily withdraw from the local banks Federal reserve bank aid, so that the farmers and merchants would be forced to sell their cotton, although to do so meant financial loss and distress throughout the cotton-growing States. Then it was that I declared that the scarcity of cotton and the large world demand made cotton the finest collateral in the world and its speedy rise in price a certainty, and that the Government should not lend itself to the mean and unholy purpose of conscienceless speculators who were seeking to rob the cotton producers of the fruits of their toil.

93. Have advocated and helped to pass laws providing for the publication and distribution of bulletins and periodicals on diversified farming and scientific agriculture. They deal with every phase of modern life upon the farm, including the health of human beings and the health and care of farm animals.

94. Led the fight in the Democratic caucus to require Federal reserve banks to loan money on cotton warehouse receipts.

95. Helped to pass the farm-loan banking system. Under this system farmers have borrowed more than $300,000,000 with which to buy new farms and lift mortgages from old ones.

96. Helped to pass the Smith-Lever Agricultural Extension Act, which gathers, publishes, and distributes throughout America the best thought and methods touching the various phases of profitable, up-to-date farming and scientific agriculture, and it is the most valuable and comprehensive farm-demonstration plan ever devised.

97. Helped to pass a law establishing a Department of Labor, which helps to settle disputes between labor and capital and safeguards the rights of the laboring man.

98. Helped to pass the child labor act, which took thousands of children out of the sweatshops and factories of the country. This law freed these children from conditions that were depriving them of an education and sapping their vitality and dwarfing their young bodies.

99. Helped to pass the workmen's compensation act for accidents and death in industry.

100. Helped to pass the humane act declaring that human labor is not a commodity, thus taking the flesh and blood of human beings out of the class of cattle.

101. I am the first Member in either branch of Congress, so far as I know, to bring to the attention of Congress the advisability and the importance of turning over Army trucks and other machinery to the counties in the various States to be used in the construction and maintenance of public roads. I offered an amendment in the House to the Agricultural appropriation bill for this purpose, and while the Speaker ruled it out of order as new legislation on an appropriation bill, the very same principles were enacted into law in the Senate, where the rules of procedure are different. So I feel that I am entitled to some of the credit for placing in the hands of the States and counties this valuable road machinery.

102. When the fathers and mothers of our American boys who gave their lives in defense of our country and the civilization of the world asked that the bodies of their brave sons be brought back and buried in American soil, I was one of the first, if not the very first, to make a speech in Congress calling upon the Government to fulfill its obligation to these patriotic fathers and mothers of America and bring the precious bodies of their boys back home.

103. I voted for and helped to pass the Federal reserve banking act, which took away from Wall Street the power to produce a panic.

104. I have opposed in every way measures that seek to foist upon America any plan or system that smacks of military despotism.

105. Have opposed universal military training, saying that I would oppose it on account of the negro problem in the South, if there were no other reasons for doing so.

106. I was the first to advocate sending out of the country those who advocated the overthrow of our Government, and helped to secure legislation to carry out this desire and purpose. Under this law these deadly enemies of our country are being sent back to their own countries.

107. I helped to pass the law which provided for a fleet of merchant ships to carry the products of our farms and factories to the markets of the world.

108. I have always voted for restricted immigration laws which were intended to protect America from the unfit people and criminal refuse of foreign countries.

109. In the cotton-marketing season have secured ships for Mobile, New Orleans, and other southern ports.

110. In regard to the railroad question, I insist that the railroads must be put upon a paying basis, a money-making basis, and then required by law to serve the public efficiently, and that those who work for the roads must be paid such wages as will permit them to share in the prosperity enjoyed by the roads, to the end that they and their families may live decently and worthily. Am the friend of both labor and capital and favor as few restraints as possible upon the proper activities of both. Have favored laws that protect and safeguard both human and property rights.

111. In the matter of differences or disputes arising between railroad employers and employees, he favors absolute justice to both in the matter of protecting and safeguarding the rights of both, keeping in mind and safeguarding at all times the rights and interests of the public, which must be respected and safeguarded.

112. Advocated, and will continue to advocate, fair and just treatment of American soldiers who served our country in the great World War. Have voted for measures that promote and safeguard their interests in various ways, and can be counted on to do the very best that can be done for them in the final settlement for which they are now asking. Various plans have been suggested and various measures on this subject are now before the Ways and Means Committee. The soldiers themselves are divided in opinion as to just what they desire done, but I believe that Congress will pass a just and satisfactory measure, and I stand ready to vote for such a measure. I wish to obtain the opinion and desire of Alabama soldiers on the subject, as I would like to comply with their wishes as nearly as possible. I have requested Adjt. Gen. Moon, of Alabama, who was himself wounded in the war with Germany, to obtain an expression from the Alabama boys on the matter of desired legislation.

113. I have given special thought and study and rendered service to the great agricultural interests of my State and Nation.

114. Voted against Federal woman suffrage amendment, but wrote to the advocates of that measure in the State that while I was not willing to turn over to the Federal Government the matter of saying who shall or shall not vote in Alabama, that if a majority of the white women of the State wanted the ballot I was willing for them to have it, and that I would join in requesting Gov. Kilby to ask the legislature to submit to the people of the State an amendment to the State constitution granting suffrage to the white women of Alabama.

115. I fought centralization of government and never lost an opportunity to defend the doctrine of State rights.

116. Have supported every measure looking to the best interest and advancement of the cause of education.

117. Have supported measures necessary to carry out the purpose of the people in the constitutional amendments adopted.

118. Have opposed Government ownership of railroads and other enterprises and industries that properly belong to the people.

119. I favor readjustment of the income tax so that the single man shall have an exemption of $2,000 and the man with a family $5,000.

120. I favor speedy action on the peace treaty and urge the repeal of all special laws growing out of the war that restrain and harass the citizen in the free and honest management of his own private business.

121. Have advocated in the House and elsewhere the doctrine that America and the other civilized nations should set up an international tribunal for the settlement of disputes by arbitration, to the end that the peace of the world may be preserved and the cruel and useless slaughter of human beings prevented.

122. Was the author of the joint resolution which named and set aside a day which shall be known in all the hereafter as Mother's Day. The resolution requires that the flag shall be unfurled and displayed on the second Sunday in May on all public buildings in honor of the mothers of America.

I desire to print here a statement that I issued to the Democrats of Alabama on March 10:

To the Democrats of Alabama:

In asking you to nominate me as the successor of Senator BANKHEAD I feel that the experience and training that I have had for 16 years in the Lower House of Congress has in some measure prepared me for the duties and responsibilities of the office of United States Senator.

I am now the oldest member of the Alabama delegation in the House from the point of service.

Senator BANKHEAD, after years of experience and training in the House, was sent from that body to the Senate.

For 10 years Democrats from all sections of the State have been kind enough to express to me their desire to see me one of Alabama's United States Senators.

Since a vacancy has been created by the death of Senator BANKHEAD, I have been urged by Democrats from all over the State to become a candidate to succeed him.

I am greatly gratified at the promising prospects of my nomination in the May primary.

In order to make sure of that I want every Democrat in the State who believes me worthy and capable of filling the office of United States Senator to constitute himself a committee of one and go to work at once with the view of helping me to secure the nomination.

I have contributed as best I could to the preservation of democratic ideals and institutions.

I have done what I could to promote the interests of every legitimate enterprise and industry in our State.

For 16 years I have given special thought and attention to the great agricultural interests of Alabama.

As a Member of the House I have accomplished some things of value for our great farming interests, but as a Member of the Senate I would have a much broader field of action and far greater opportunities for service to the whole people of the State.

If I am elected to the Senate, as I confidently believe I will be, I promise to give to the duties of the office my entire time and attention and to give to the people of Alabama the very best service that I am capable of rendering.

Sincerely,

J. THOS. HEFLIN.

Here I wish to print the statement of a good friend who has a kind word to say about my service here:

[From the Huntsville Times.]

MONTGOMERY, ALA., March 10.

Roy Nolen, of Alexander City, Tallapoosa County, a prominent Democrat, farmer, and banker, was in Montgomery to-day. He returned to his home this afternoon. He is jubilant over what he regards as the certain nomination for the Senate of his friend, Congressman HEFLIN. In discussing the matter he said: "The agricultural interests of Alabama are going to be heard from in this campaign. Congressman HEFLIN, by reason of his earnest, loyal, and effective activities in behalf of agriculture and related industries, will receive a tremendous vote from the farmers, merchants, and bankers of the State in addition to the large vote which he so much merits and will receive from Democrats in every walk of life. This will, in my opinion, assure his nomination for United States Senator to succeed the late Senator BANKHEAD.

Mr. Speaker, I trust that I may be pardoned for including in this review of my service a few testimonials touching my career as a public servant:

CONGRESSMAN HEFLIN SPEAKS TO LEGISLATURE OF TEXAS—YEARY ASKS LEGISLATORS TO PREACH HEFLIN MESSAGE.

"Congressman HEFLIN has delivered a message to the Texas Legislature, which they should in turn deliver to the State of Texas," declared W. B. Yeary, cotton specialist in the State Department of Agriculture, this morning after listening to the Alabaman speak before the joint session of the house and senate. Mr. Yeary heartily indorsed the views of Congressman HEFLIN and believes that untold good can be done by spreading the gospel which the Alabama Congressman is preaching. (From the Statesman, Austin, Tex.)

In TOM HEFLIN we have the thinker, the diplomat, the peerless orator, and the matchless statesman combined. No district in Alabama, or perhaps in any State, has a Congressman that is more universally beloved and admired than is Mr. HEFLIN. (From Randolph Star.)

TOM HEFLIN is a southerner from crown to heel. It is his pleasure as well as his duty to study national legislation in its relations to the man who plows, who plants, who reaps. He does this conscientiously, diligently, enthusiastically. ("Savoyard," in Nashville Tennesseean.)

Mr. HEFLIN is one of the most faithful Members of the House and one of the most active and effective. He represents a purely agricultural constituency and has been faithful to their every interest. (Opelika News.)

Mr. HEFLIN'S special work is centered in the interest of the southern farmer. The giant force of his great intellect and the desire of his heart is to assist the southern farmer in getting a better price for the South's great staple. He has worked diligently for that great interest, both in and out of Congress. (Opelika News.)

HEFLIN WINS FIGHT ON COTTON LINTERS.

The Census Bureau has announced a change in the method of publishing the statistics of cotton, the annual reports on which heretofore have included quantity of linters obtained by oil mills. This is a victory for Congressman HEFLIN, who first voiced opposition to this method, declaring that it was misleading to such an extent as to seriously affect the cotton market, to the detriment of the farmers. (The Age-Herald.)

Mr. HEFLIN is a Democrat of Democrats, always loyal to his party and his people, gallant, able, and courageous, ready at all times to fight for and defend the farmers' interests as against the gamblers of Wall Street. The New York Sun, in a strong editorial, nicknamed Mr. HEFLIN "Cotton Tom," and we Democrats of the country lift our hat to the man who by the power of his eloquence has stirred Congress and the country on the subject of the evils of the gamblers of Wall Street and Chicago in gambling in the products of the American farmers, especially the cotton producers. His powerful presentation of the farmers' side of the cotton question fixes his place before Congress and the American Nation as the leading champion of the cotton producers. ("Savoyard," in the Tennesseean.)

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
STATE OF TEXAS,
Austin, June 30, 1919.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: First, on behalf of the cotton producers of the South; second, on behalf of every institution, religious and educational, in the South and every legitimate business or commercial pursuit in the South, and finally to the benefit of this Nation, because cotton is a national product, I desire to thank you for your address before the Legislature of Texas to-day. Your message was one of encouragement to our legislature. I hope that as soon as the session adjourns every member will take the message to his people. * * * Our people need education and encouragement in marketing their cotton worse than anything else. Thanking you for your splendid address, I am,

Sincerely, yours,

W. B. YEARY,
Cotton Specialist.

The following is a copy of joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of Texas inviting Mr. HEFLIN to address that body:

Be it resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That—

Whereas the interest of the cotton growers of our State has always been of paramount interest to our people; and

Whereas Congressman HEFLIN has ever been the faithful and loyal champion of the interests of the cotton growers of the South: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That the Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN be invited to address a joint session of the Senate and House at such time as may be convenient to him, and that the president of the senate and the speaker of the house be directed to telegraph this invitation to the said Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN.

(Signed) W. H. HOBBY,
President of the Senate.
F. O. FULLER,
Speaker of the House.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
STATE OF TEXAS,
Austin, November 15, 1919.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HEFLIN: * * * You are known to all of our cotton farmers as being one of the best friends they have in Congress.

(Signed) J. D. NEILL,
Director of Farm Institutes.

Representative HEFLIN, of Alabama, to-day requested the Alien Property Custodian to permit the sale of 1,000,000 bales of cotton to German spinners, to be stored and held in this country until the allied embargo against Germany is lifted. (From New York Commercial.)

No one has taken so pronounced an interest in the welfare of the cotton planters through efforts to boost the price of cotton as Congressman HEFLIN, of Alabama. He has sent telegrams to bankers and merchants in his home State saying that the reserve banks would continue to back local banks in aiding farmers to hold cotton for a profitable price. (From Newark (N. J.) Evening News.)

Cotton rise due to German needs. Market feels effect of report that 1,000,000 bales will be taken when embargo is lifted. Gain runs to $7.50 a bale.

Congressman HEFLIN'S efforts to permit Germany to purchase 1,000,000 bales of cotton to be held in the United States until a permit to ship it to Germany is granted by the United States "has been the cause of no little concern to the southern spot markets, and probably contributed as much as any other one factor to advancing prices on an average of $7.50 a bale." (From New York (N. Y.) Times.)

Hon. Fred W. Davis, Commissioner of Agriculture of Texas, had the following to say regarding Mr. HEFLIN: "Congressman HEFLIN, among the public men of the South, is one of the best posted on the cotton-market situation past and present. He is also one of the most able and eloquent defenders of the southern cotton grower in his struggle for a voice in pricing what he produces. Mr. HEFLIN is a wise counsellor and a powerful champion of the southern cotton trade as it relates to the interests of the cotton grower and his friends."

TOM HEFLIN made one of the best speeches ever delivered on the floor of the House of Representatives in defense of the cotton farmers of the South. No speech in Congress in recent years has made a better impression or attracted more attention throughout the country. (Savoyard, in Nashville Banner.)

No truer Democrat or friend of the masses ever sat in Congress than TOM HEFLIN, of Alabama. (National Democrat.)

Some men are destined for public life from their cradles. This boy is one of them. HEFLIN is a strong man mentally, morally, and physically. His apostrophe to the cotton plant is a classic. Every Alabama schoolboy ought to memorize it. The other day TOM HEFLIN, at Front Royal, Va., delivered the oration upon the one hundred and first anniversary of the birth of Jefferson Davis. It was a philosophical disquisition on the Constitution of the United States as the fathers made it, of which John T. Morgan would not have been ashamed, and there was a poetic vein in it worthy of Carmack or Vest. (Savoyard, in Nashville Banner.)

HEFLIN may never have written poems, but he has painted beautiful and far-reaching pictures with his tongue whenever and wherever he has allowed that member to obey the promptings of his brilliant brain. He is an orator, poet, humanist, and statesman. He loves his South, and when he loosens up, you love it, too, and all its people into the bargain. (From Truth, Buffalo, N. Y.)

Nobody in Alabama doubts Mr. HEFLIN'S loyalty to the administration. He has been an active supporter of the Government in its conduct of the war. (The Ledger, Birmingham, Ala.)

Of Mr. HEFLIN the President said: "From the outset Mr. HEFLIN has earned the friendship and esteem of the President by reason of his intense Americanism and unfaltering support of every American measure."

OF
HON. JOHN C. KLECZKA.
OF WISCONSIN.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, March 15, 1920.

On the bill (H. R. 12954) providing for the relief of populations in Europe and in countries contiguous thereto suffering for want of food.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, the pending measure, if passed, will authorize the sale of not to exceed 5,000,000 barrels of flour by the United States Grain Corporation for cash or credit for the relief of the starving populations in Europe.

The testimony adduced before the committee shows that the food situation in parts of Austria, Armenia, and Poland is most acute. Thousands of square miles in Poland have been completely devastated and the disastrous effects of war are distributed over a great part of that country. Four times have the armies of the enemy swept over the territory of Poland during the World War, and some portions of that country have been ravaged by seven invasions. Reliable and unprejudiced observers have declared that the destruction of property and civilian life in Poland was greater than all the destruction of property and life on the western front. Between three and four millions of Poles fell victims of starvation or disease during the war. To retard the advance of the German armies the Russians at one time ruthlessly laid waste thousands of square miles. The enemy forces also carried away whatever surpluses of food existed in the more prolific sections of the country and thus left other regions to starve. This thorough destruction of the agricultural area and the looting of all agricultural machinery left millions of Poles at the time of the armistice at the point of starvation.

At that time, approximately one-fourth of Poland was in the control of the Austrian Army, approximately one-half in the hands of the German forces, and the remaining portion under the dominion of the bolshevik army. Later on hordes of bolsheviks invaded a large part of Poland and perpetrated indescribable crimes in every village and city. Deprived of the means of communication except through enemy hands, surrounded on the east, north, and south by enemy territory, Poland's position after the armistice was most appalling and disheartening. Here was a country of over 30,000,000 people facing famine and desolation, a country with thousands dying daily from typhus and contagious diseases; a large part of the country in the terrible grip of the bolshevik army without the means of repelling the invasion. From the very beginning of her new existence Poland was compelled to meet the menace of militant bolshevism.

Mr. Speaker, there is some misapprehension as to the purpose for which Poland has maintained an army on the eastern front, and why she is engaging in war with the Bolsheviki. The war carried on by Poland against the red terror of Russia is strictly a defensive war. It began as a defensive war and has been carried on ever since as a defensive conflict. Poland possessed no standing army and it was only after the armistice was signed that she could undertake the first steps in the process of forming a stable and constitutional government.

During the entire period of the war after the collapse of the government of the Czar the Russian radical propagandists have flooded the territory of Poland with millions of Russian rubles in their efforts to spread their pernicious doctrines. They thought that an impoverished Poland offered a very fertile field for their operations. They thought that a hungry people would readily yield to their enticing promises and seductive program. But their hopes of success were quickly blasted. They had not counted with the spirit of that people; they had failed to reckon with Poland's ideals and sentiments. The Polish people quickly saw that the schemes of these destroyers of orderly procedure would plunge them into an abyss of horror and desolation from which they could never recover. They saw what the destructive program of Lenin and Trotski had wrought in unfortunate Russia and they refused to allow the war-scarred acres of their own native land to become the field for exploitation of those whose aim is to rule and ruin. With true patriotic ardor they quickly formed a volunteer army and the overwhelming Bolsheviki forces were repulsed and driven back. During the past 12 months Poland's Army has been performing a world guard duty. Suffering untold misery, feeling keenly the pangs of starvation, and with insufficient equipment, this army is holding a line of almost 1,600 miles and is successfully repelling all attempts of invasion by the Bolsheviki forces. Poland and her army is indeed the barrier holding back "the red wave of bolshevism."

Because of the threatening presence of the bolshevik forces and of their attempted invasions of Polish territory, Poland can not demobilize her army. She can not to-day with any degree of safety or security to herself, with the well-known dangerous hotbed of bolshevistic anarchy close to her borders, withdraw the army from the eastern front. To do so would mean to allow her factories to be destroyed and her property devastated. She can not allow the peaceful population living on this frontier, which is piteously crying for protection, to be left at the mercy of the Bolsheviki invaders. She can not abandon them to massacres and certain death. She can not leave the various populations which live in the eastern territory and whose allegiance is still undetermined to become a prey to bolshevik coercion and terrorism. The Polish Army to-day is the only protection which this population has against all forms of outlawry and tyranny. This army at no time has passed beyond the frontier which marked the eastern boundary of Poland before her partition. As a matter of fact, the bolshevik army to-day is about 100 miles in the interior of what was once a part of the Polish State.

But although all these eastern Provinces formed a part of the Polish State for centuries before the partition, Poland lays no claim to them on the ground of historical rights. She does not claim them at all. Poland has solemnly proclaimed, through her chief of state, Gen. Pilsudski, with the approval of the constitutional assembly and the entire Polish nation, the right of self-determination for these populations.

The Polish Republic will not incorporate within its boundaries any district whose population does not wish to belong to it. This attitude is in complete conformity with Poland's tradition. The former Polish State was the only one in ancient Europe which during the thousand years of its history was composed of people who had of their own accord asked for union with Poland. During the period of her independent existence Poland formed a bulwark which protected Europe from the Tartars and the Turks. And to-day, resurrected, she is repeating her historical mission. It was not solely in the interest of self-preservation that exhausted Poland undertook this struggle against the Bolsheviki, a struggle which is costing her enormous effort and sacrifice. If Poland is compelled to cease resisting these invaders, if she is compelled to declare an armistice with them, it will mean that these forces that are bent on destroying law and order and all that civilization holds dear will be released and allowed to proceed unchecked in their course of ruthless destruction and devastation.

The attitude of Poland to-day and the efforts of her army against the bolshevik forces is of historical moment. If anyone entertains any doubt as to the purposes at world domination of the bolshevist movement in Russia he need only to refer to Senate Document No. 172, which contains the memorandum on certain aspects of this movement. In his letter transmitting the information contained in the aforesaid document to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the Secretary of State, Mr. Lansing, declares that—

> The study which has been made of the bolshevist movement, some of the results of which are furnished herewith, shows conclusively that the purpose of the Bolsheviks is to subvert the existing principles of government and society the world over, including those countries in which democratic institutions are already established. They have built up a political machine which, by the concentration of power in the hands of a few and the ruthlessness of its methods, suggests the Asiatic despotism of the early Tsars. The result of their exercise of power, as shown by the documents presented in the accompanying memorandum, have been demoralization, civil war, and economic collapse.

If Poland is not enabled now to check the advance of the Bolsheviks, this menace will in a very short time travel westward, and the tremendous sacrifices undergone by America and the Allies to preserve democracy throughout the world may then be lost entirely.

The daily cables from Europe convey the news that the bolshevik armies are making extensive preparations to attack Poland this spring. Impoverished and destitute of the essentials of ordinary subsistence, Poland does not shrink from the heroic performance of her duty in the cause of civilization. She discounts her deplorable physical condition; she will not break faith with the Allies. She admits that it was due to the efforts of America and the Allies that her renewed national existence is to be attributed to. America and the Allies know the historical past of the Polish race; they knew that Poland was an uncompromising foe of disorder. They knew that she was steadfastly attached to the principles of law and order and the highest ideals of civilization. They recalled the services which Poland rendered to Europe in the thirteenth century when she broke the invasion of the Tartars; they knew that in the seventeenth century Poland prevented the Turkish hordes from overrunning western Europe and thereby saved European civilization. They had faith that a nation whose glorious past chronicled so many instances of humanitarian service could be depended upon to contribute her full measure in promoting the ideals of democracy and could be counted upon to resist any fiendish schemes of an unrelenting foe to destroy the priceless privileges of free men. Readmitted but recently into the sisterhood of free nations, Poland is already demonstrating that the confidence and faith which the world reposed in her has not been misplaced. Every unbiased observer and student of current events unites in the sentiment expressed before the committee in its hearings upon this measure by Mr. Herbert Hoover, Secretary of War Baker, Secretary of the Treasury Carter Glass, and Gen. Bliss that Poland to-day is the sole bulwark against bolshevism and its encroachments.

Eliminating entirely the perversion of the bolshevist philosophy, every man possessed of ordinary human instincts must shudder at the unspeakable violence to which these forces are resorting in order to impose their doctrines and beliefs upon the peoples of the world. They repudiate peaceful evolution and resort to physical force. The peril to democracy was not removed by the signing of the armistice. To-day in Europe it is not democracy alone which is threatened, but the entire fabric of civilization. We can not read the daily dispatches from the other side of the Atlantic with a proper understanding of their meaning without being impressed with the imminence of the new peril. We can not be so steeped in indifference, we can not be so overengrossed in our own affairs as not to take heed of the visible signs.

Bolshevism must be confined to Russia. If the "red army" breaks through Poland, Europe will blaze and bleed from revolution. Poland stands firmly embattled at the eastern gate guarding the pass. She is not fighting for territory or war spoils. She is fighting in defense of civilization. She refuses to compromise her position in the council of free and democratic nations. Her people are determined to resist to the utmost the new tyranny and oppression of bolshevism.

An indomitable spirit has enabled them to withstand hardships and suffering that might have subdued a race less inflamed with the passion to make secure their newly achieved freedom.

Because of the lack of seed a year ago, because of the lack of farm machinery and the unprecedented frosts last year, the total food shortage in Poland exceeds 530,000 tons. To solve the food problem the Government has inaugurated plans to conserve to the utmost all food supplies, avoiding all waste and reducing the rations to a minimum. The sale of a portion of the flour by the United States Grain Corporation will greatly relieve the hunger and distress pervading that country. It will alleviate the horrible suffering in unfortunate Armenia and portions of Austria. It will in a measure enable these unfortunate people to regain their strength and enable them to meet the tremendous problems of reconstruction upon the satisfactory solution of which depend their future welfare, security, and life.

The Proposed Columbia River Naval Establishment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. C. N. McARTHUR,
OF OREGON,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, March 20, 1920.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, the Commission on Navy Yards and Naval Stations, popularly known as the Helm Board, appointed under authority of the act approved August 29, 1916, was organized at Washington, D. C., September 20, 1916, and consisted of the following officers: J. M. Helm, rear admiral, United States Navy, senior member; W. L. Capps, chief constructor, United States Navy, member; H. H. Rousseau, civil engineer, United States Navy, member; G. W. McElroy, captain, United States Navy, member; C. L. Hussey, commander, United States Navy, member.

EXCERPTS FROM HELM BOARD REPORT.

Volume 4 of the report of this commission was submitted to the President on May 19, 1917, and included the following recommendations relative to a naval establishment at the mouth of the Columbia River:

At the time of its first visit to Portland and the Columbia River the commission was impressed with the importance of adequately defending this region from hostile attack, and establishing, if practicable, near the mouth of the Columbia River, a submarine and aviation base from which operations could be satisfactorily conducted in time of war. The general character of the mouth of the Columbia River is fully illustrated by Coast and Geodetic Survey chart, hereto attached, Appendix K. The commercial and industrial importance of the whole Columbia River region, and the territory tributary thereto, are fully set forth in documents prepared by the Portland and Astoria Chambers of Commerce, and by the Board of Harbor Commissioners of Portland, hereto attached, Appendixes L, M, and N, respectively. (Page 16.)

After consideration of all available sites in the vicinity of the mouth of the Columbia River, the Tongue Point site appears to the commission to possess greater advantages as a submarine and aviation base than any other site in that locality. In time of war, the necessity for the protection of the Columbia River region is imperative, and a well-equipped submarine base in the Columbia River from which submarines could operate for a distance of at least 150 miles to the northward and southward would meet the major requirements of defense at Willapa Bay, Grays Harbor, and the coast to the northward and southward of the entrances to the Columbia River. (Page 17.)

For the acquisition of the necessary site and the immediately necessary development of same on the Columbia River, as hereinbefore recommended in this report for a submarine and aviation base, this development to include the necessary wharves, storehouses, shop facilities, electric charging plant, temporary barracks for men, etc., with provision for meeting the necessities of at least 12 submarines at one time, and possibly of expansion to double that number, and for the necessary hangars, launching ways, etc., needed for aviation purposes, there is recommended the sum of $1,200,000. It is also recommended that the following legislation be enacted to carry into effect the above recommendation:

"That the establishment of a submarine and aviation base near the mouth of the Columbia River is hereby authorized on such site as may be recommended as most suitable by the commission appointed by the President to report thereon in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917; approved August 29, 1916: Provided, That such site is approved by the President, and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to acquire, by purchase or gift, if not already owned by the United States, the site approved by the President; and the sum of $1,200,000 is hereby appropriated toward the acquisition and development of such site as a submarine and aviation base." (Page 22.)

REPORT OF M'KEAN BOARD.

During the late summer of 1919 the Secretary of the Navy made a tour of the Pacific coast for the purpose of inspecting the establishments there and also for examining the sites recommended for new establishments by the Helm Commission. The Secretary was accompanied by a special board of inspection of naval bases, consisting of Rear Admiral C. W. Parks, Rear Admiral J. S. McKean, and Commander J. C. Hilton. This board submitted the following report on the proposed naval establishment at the mouth of the Columbia River:

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 8, 1919.

From: Special Board of Inspection of Naval Bases, etc., on the Pacific coast.

To: Secretary of the Navy.

Subject: Proposed submarine, destroyer, and aviation base—Columbia River.

1. The board is in full agreement with the report of the Helm Commission as to necessity for the location of a submarine, destroyer, and aviation base between Puget Sound and San Francisco, and is in further agreement with the commission in its selection of the Tongue Point site at Astoria, Oreg., as the best site both strategically and tactically. The board recommends the site in the locality chosen, but that a larger area, including all the shore front between the railroad and the pier-head line extending from the western point where Tongue Point peninsula joins the mainland around and including Tongue Point and along the shore line to the mouth of John Day River, is essential.

2. The board recommends that this area be secured at the earliest date practicable, either by gift or purchase; that its development to a capacity for the successful maintenance and operation of a minimum of 12 submarines, 6 destroyers, and the necessary aircraft for the patrol of the waters in the vicinity of the mouth of the Columbia River be proceeded with at once; that the project be planned to be completed within three years; and that the plans be so made as to permit of the operation of double the force recommended above in time of emergency.

3. It is further recommended that the Navy Department take up with the War Department the desirability of the dredging of the necessary channel and anchor ground in the vicinity of this proposed base to permit a safe entrance and anchorage of at least a division of dreadnoughts. This anchorage and channel development will not only be of great service to the fleet but will be of greater aid to commerce, and will permit and provide for the full use of the fine harbor facilities built and building at Astoria. It is the opinion of the board that the problem of the Columbia River bar has been satisfactorily solved, there now being a depth of 42 feet over the bar, and the board is also of the opinion that it will be only a short time until a minimum of 50 feet will be obtained, thus making this a practicable port in any weather.

4. It is recommended that an appropriation of a million and a half be obtained from the present Congress, with authorization of the completed project not to exceed seven and one-half millions, to be completed within three years.

5. Although not, strictly speaking, a part of this report, the board calls attention of the department to the desirability, primarily from a commercial point of view, but also from the Navy point of view, of the continued development of the Columbia River and the Willamette River as far as Portland, Oreg.

C. W. PARKS,
Rear Admiral (CEC), United States Navy.
J. S. McKEAN,
Rear, Admiral, United States Navy.
J. C. HILTON,
Commander (BC), United States Navy.

The report of the special board of inspection of naval bases, popularly known as the "McKean Board," was appended to the last annual report of the Secretary of the Navy.

COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS APPROPRIATION.

The Committee on Naval Affairs has included the Columbia River project in the pending bill and has authorized an initial appropriation of $250,000 to begin work on the project. The people of the city of Astoria have very generously agreed to donate 115 acres of hard land and 256 acres of partially submerged land free of cost to the Government of the United States for this project. This land is situate on what is known as Tongue Point and is bounded on the south by the tracks of the Spokane, Portland & Seattle Railway Co. It is only a short distance from the Columbia River Highway, a paved road extending from the Pacific Ocean to The Dalles, Oreg., a distance of about 200 miles.

THREE COMPELLING ARGUMENTS.

There are three compelling arguments in favor of establishing a submarine and destroyer base and aviation station at the mouth of the Columbia River:

1. There are at present no naval establishments of any character between the Puget Sound Navy Yard and the Mare Island Navy Yard, a distance of approximately 830 miles. This is the longest stretch of unprotected coast line in continental United States, and the proposed establishment at Tongue Point is regarded by naval authorities as highly important in the general scheme of defense. The Columbia River harbor is the largest between San Francisco Bay and Puget Sound and the depth of water on the bar at low tide is sufficient to admit the largest ships that float.

2. The mouth of the Columbia River is approximately 100 miles nearer the Orient than any other important harbor on the Pacific coast, and it is also nearer southwestern Alaska. In the event of war with an oriental power or any other power with a naval base in the Pacific, the mouth of the Columbia River would be a most strategic point, both offensively and defensively.

3. Tongue Point lies at the gateway of the great Columbia River Basin, one of the largest sections of the United States, and one in which the Government itself owns millions of acres of land, billions of feet of standing timber, innumerable water-power sites of great value, and untold mineral wealth. This great territory enjoys no naval protection whatever at present.

ADVANTAGES OF TONGUE POINT SITE.

Among the advantages which the Tongue Point site offers for naval establishments are the following:

1. It is adjacent to a large harbor, where the entire American Navy could be anchored safely.

2. The harbor is protected by three forts and the entrance of the lower channel could be quickly and safely mined.

3. Tongue Point has excellent railroad, wagon road, and water transportation facilities.

4. It is adjacent to a productive territory that can furnish foodstuffs and other materials needed by naval establishments.

5. It is adjacent to a thriving city that has all modern conveniences.

6. Its climatic and sanitary advantages are unsurpassed, and it is within easy access to a liberal supply of pure mountain water.

7. Last, but not least, Tongue Point itself is a high promontory, which gives ample protection from storms and winds, and forms a natural barrier between the proposed establishment and the guns of the enemy ships in the open sea.

OF
HON. TOM CONNALLY,
OF TEXAS,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, March 3, 1920.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12616) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a newspaper report regarding the posthumous award of a distinguished-service cross to a boy of Polish descent who was in our own Army, in the One hundred and seventh Infantry, Bernard Stegar, and who was a resident of my district.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The article is as follows:

LAUDS FALLS COUNTY HERO—BERNARD STEGAR PRAISED BY CAPTAIN AT BANQUET IN NEW YORK CITY.

"I don't think God ever made a greater hero than Barney Stegar. I know every man in the company will tell you that," said Capt. Nichols at a veteran dinner at the Seventh Regiment Armory of the National Guard in New York City recently. The speaker was referring to Bernard Stegar, son of Mr. and Mrs. Mike Stegar, who reside near Marlin, who was killed in action in France and received a posthumous award of the distinguished service cross. His gallantry is further described by the company commander, who tells of the incident as follows:

"On the 18th of October, at St. Souplet, a Seventh Regiment man by the name of Jarvie was in the advance line when they went over the top, and it just so happened that when they crawled along he got to a point where a sunken road came out on the crest of a hill, and was in an exposed position swept by machine-gun fire. He was in front of this road with a little bowlder, a little rock, in front of him, and took what cover he could until the line advanced again, and while lying there he received a burst from a machine gun in his left arm, which severed everything from his arm but a little piece of flesh that held it on. He was bleeding very badly. And next to him was a man, one of five that I told you about that joined us at Steenvoorde. He was a drafted man; his name was Bernard Stegar; he came from Marlin, Tex. When pay day came around he found great difficulty in signing the pay roll, as he wasn't used to a pen. But he had been in this crowd long enough to know what Big Six meant. He had been in this crowd just long enough to absorb what you gentlemen have given this regiment and which made it go.

"And when Stegar saw Jarvie lying down there in the middle of this road, although he himself was safe in the sunken road and had perfect cover about 30 yards away, he started to crawl to Jarvie. After Stegar had gone halfway, he himself was exposed and got a machine-gun bullet in the side. It knocked him over and he rolled over twice, but he picked himself up, and, instead of going back to his own position, he went on toward Jarvie. He reached Jarvie all right, and he had just taken him in his arms when another machine-gun bullet hit him in the temple, and they died there together.

"And four months before Stegar had no knowledge of what the One hundred and seventh Infantry and the Seventh Regiment before it meant, but he had absorbed it all at that time. And I think you gentlemen have done that. It could not have been done without tradition, the incentive to show the men that have upheld this regiment and carried it forward a hundred years, that there was in the world to-day the same stuff that there was a hundred years ago."

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, not only the Poles but great numbers of men of other foreign blood rendered very distinguished service, not only in our own Army but in the corps mentioned by the gentlemen who have already discussed this resolution. Men of Italian, Bohemian, German, and Polish ancestry served gallantly and faithfully in the American Army. It is appropriate that their service and patriotism to our one and united country be recognized.

Army Reorganization.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JULIUS KAHN,
OF CALIFORNIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, March 18, 1920.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, shortly after the separate vote had been taken on the construction corps amendments I received a letter from Gen. John J. Pershing, expressing his views upon the subject of a separate construction department. I believe the House should know the sentiment of Gen. Pershing upon the subject, and I therefore insert the letter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as a part of my remarks. It is as follows:

MARCH 18, 1920.

Hon. JULIUS KAHN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. KAHN: As you will doubtless recall, when I appeared before your committee some months ago, I stated my belief that the work of constructing barracks, quarters, hospitals, camps, and all other construction for the Army in the United States should be assigned to the Quartermaster Corps, by which such work was done before the World War.

I was then and am now strongly of the opinion that the creation of a separate construction department is wrong in principle and decidedly uneconomical. This is based upon my experience in France, which showed conclusively that such a separate agency is unnecessary, therefore poor organization and wasteful of money.

If, for any reason, Congress is indisposed to return this construction work to the Quartermaster, in accordance with my original recommendation, then it might be well to confide it to the Corps of Engineers, which in France has proved itself competent to perform such a task promptly and economically. It may be said that the training which officers of the Corps of Engineers would secure while doing this construction work in time of peace would be valuable in time of war.

Very sincerely, yours,

JOHN J. PERSHING.

I have also received the following letter from Gen. Peyton C. March, inclosing a copy of a memorandum from the Inspector General, Maj. Gen. J. L. Chamberlain, to the Chief of Staff. As the said memorandum also refers to several services which under the bill for the reorganization of the Army (H. R. 12775) are included in the Quartermaster Corps, I desire to insert the said letter from Gen. March and his inclosure in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

MARCH 18, 1920.

Hon. JULIUS KAHN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. KAHN: In the absence of Secretary Baker from the city I am forwarding to you a memorandum just received from the Inspector General of the Army, for your information and the information of your committee.

The statement of Gen. Chamberlain shows clearly that Mr. ANTHONY was misinformed concerning the attitude of the Inspector General's Department, and I believe that he would be glad to be able to correct the statements which he made upon the floor of the House.

Very cordially, yours,

P. C. MARCH,
General, Chief of Staff.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE INSPECTOR GENERAL,
Washington, March 18, 1920.

(Memorandum for the Chief of Staff.)

1. In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 12 Mr. ANTHONY made of record certain extracts from a report of inspection of Camp Benning made by Col. Humber. These extracts contain certain recommendations regarding the organization of the supply system in the Army. The report referred to was extracted and handled in the manner usually followed in similar cases. Certain recommendations contained therein did not meet the approval of this office, nor were they concurred in. The extracts were simply furnished for the information of those services immediately concerned. It is not known to this office how the report reached Mr. ANTHONY. It was never called for, nor was it ever furnished.

2. In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 16 Mr. ANTHONY submitted and made of record a memorandum upon this same subject. The record does not show by whom this memorandum was prepared, and I am informed that Col. Hammond disclaims any knowledge whatsoever regarding this memorandum. On page 4427 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 16 I find in this memorandum, referring to the several services, such as finance, construction, transportation, etc., that the Inspector General's office deems these separations of activities from the Quartermaster Corps as inadvisable, and that such separations will entail inefficiency and greatly increase cost. I desire to state that these are not the views of the Inspector General of the Army nor of the Inspector General's office. On the contrary, the Inspector General believes that there should be a separate finance service and a separate transportation service, both of which should be entirely independent of the Quartermaster Corps.

J. L. CHAMBERLAIN,
The Inspector General.

The Menace of Militarism.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ISAAC R. SHERWOOD,
OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, March 17, 1920.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13108) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the pending bill providing for a Regular Army in time of peace of 280,000 soldiers and 18,000 officers is beyond question the greatest outrage ever perpetrated upon the taxpayers of the United States. There is no use for such an Army and no demand for it by the people. It is a deliberate move to establish a military autocracy. The gauzy pretense that this Army may be needed owing to the chaos in Europe and the aggressive character of the radical agitators in the United States is a contemptible subterfuge unworthy of the Congress. Coming at the end of the most destructive and exhausting war in all history, when the country is burdened with an enormous debt, and when business and industry are taxed to the limit, the proposition to add $550,000,000 taxation to provide for an Army of 300,000 idlers is a crime against humanity. What will the plain people—the industrious workers who produce the wealth of the world—think of the fiscal and economic policy of a party, in full control of our highest legislative bodies, that proposes to take 300,000 of our stalwart young men from useful pursuits and productive industry and make them simply idlers and the consumers of the necessaries of life and pile on some $550,000,000 additional burden on the taxpayers, with no compensating benefit? This Army bill and the extravagant Navy bill—now said to be ready—reverse the whole policy of the Government from 1787 down to 1917. Not a single public man with enough brain fiber and experience to be classed as a statesman has ever advocated a big standing Army in time of peace.

NOTE THE VIEWS OF OUR GREATEST CONSTRUCTIVE STATESMAN.

The greatest statesman of the humanities of all civilizations is that world-famous Virginian, Thomas Jefferson. We need his prescient spirit now to save the Republic of Washington and Jackson and Lincoln from militarism, as now exploited with every waning moon in skyrocket oratory and sentences loaded with dynamite and disaster. In 1799 Jefferson wrote to Eldridge Gerry these words of supreme wisdom that every patriotic American should pause and ponder well. I quote:

I am for relying for internal defense on our militia solely till actual invasion, and for such a naval force only as will protect our coast harbors from depredations, and not for a standing Army in time of peace which may overcome the public sentiment, nor a navy which, by its own expenses and the external wars in which it may implicate us, will grind us with public burdens and sink us under them.

Let us not fail to note that all the great students and scholars and humanitarians on both sides of the Atlantic are to-day for peace and arbitration. No man of heart or capable thought believes that a big army and navy are messengers of peace. Even an ordinary dog fancier knows better. He knows that peace among the canine tribe would never be promoted if every man should breed and train a fighting bulldog. And the dogs of war, whether canine or human, are just the same.

If one-quarter of the money we are now worse than wasting on this big Army were spent for a scientific investigation on the cause of poverty and crime in a land of plenty, and to protect the children of the poor from the degeneracy caused by overwork in factories, or for old-age pensions for the worn-out men and women who do the world's work, or to help the dependent soldiers who fought the World's War, we would then have a valid claim to be classed as a Christian nation.

VIEWS OF A LAYMAN WHO THINKS.

James Kate, of Johnstown, Pa., a thinker and writer on advanced lines, furnishes the following terse statement on the trend of events:

JOHNSTOWN, March 14.

We hear people asking what is the cause of all of the unrest to-day. The history of the human race from its first to its last page is a record of a bitter conflict between those invested with authority on one side and those subject to it on the other, for two mighty forces have ever been at work in human society, the greed of one for power, the other for liberty. This conflict is raging in America at the present time. This conflict is between democracy and despotism, between the freedom of the individual and the supremacy of the State. Let us take warning from Europe. The European people allowed the State to clothe itself with an omnipotence which crushed the individuality of the subjects, making men slaves. The writers of the Constitution declared that the State exists for the individual, that the Government is the servant of the people, based upon their consent and answerable to them for its conduct, leaving to every citizen the widest possible sphere for the free exercise of his personal, civil, and political liberty, giving to every man this right to his children, his home, the right to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience. The forces which have produced Caesarism, kaizerism, and despots in other lands have made their appearance in America. Year by year we witness attempts to exalt unduly the State and degrade the citizen. The officials to-day appear to think civil power or authority is a personal right and not a public trust; they wrap themselves in Old Glory, then trample the Constitution under their feet. When a citizen asks for justice, freedom, and liberty he is branded as a red, anarchist, or a bolshevik. The Supreme Court has given the Steel Corporation a clean bill of health as a good trust through a technicality. Now, what is a technicality? My definition of a technicality is heads I win, tails you lose. Did they not some years ago reverse themselves overnight? Is it not this kind of administration of the law that puts a weapon in the hands of the reds and Bolsheviki? Our Federal courts to-day are something like a store. If you have a pocket full of money you can get everything you want.

NOTE THESE STAGGERING FIGURES.

The naval bill, already reported out, will probably call for an expenditure of $450,000,000. Hence we are liable to have an expenditure for military purposes alone of nearly $950,000,000, or $700,000,000 more than our total outlay for the Army and Navy in 1916. Evidently we have a dominating element in this Congress made up of wild-eyed imperialists. As stated by the majority leader on the floor of the House, this Congress is squandering more money on militarism than any of the imperial monarchies of the Old World. Lest we forget, I quote from the speech of Majority Leader MONDELL made on the floor of this historic Chamber March 18 last, as it appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

Mr. Chairman, I do not know what our Military Establishment is going to cost. I am afraid it is going to cost more than the American people want to pay. The naval appropriation bill has just been introduced, carrying, I believe, $425,000,000. That is approximately $225,000,000 below the estimates—$225,000,000 below what the department wants and insists upon—and yet it is nearly half of the total annual expenditure of the Government prior to the Great War. The Army bill will come in in a few days. I do not see how it is going to be possible to keep that bill much below $400,000,000, and I am afraid it will go above that before we get through. Eight hundred million dollars to $850,000,000 seems to be about the least sum we can bring our military expenditures within for the coming fiscal year. No nation ever expended such sums prior to the World War in time of peace for its military establishments. Imperial Germany in its palmiest days of preparation never spent that amount.

THE WORLD'S RECORD FOR EXTRAVAGANCE.

From the best information at hand Majority Leader MONDELL'S figures of $850,000,000 are too low by at least $75,000,000.

This Congress, elected under the promise to retrench and economize public expenditure, is now the most reckless in wasting the tax money of the people of any Congress that ever met in peace times since the birth of the Republic, and it is more deeply immersed in militarism. Militarism is the bastard child of fear. Faith and hope and love of humanity are not in her vocabulary. Her interests are all base. Militarism is a fundamental denial of the Christian religion. After militarism in Germany had driven one-third of the people into socialism and had taken the last mark out of the pockets of the common people, she went into the purses of the aristocracy and took out $300,000,000 in order to be prepared for war. In the meantime Great Britain in one year had expanded its budget for preparedness from $115,000,000 to $355,000,000. Russia had borrowed $100,000,000 from France, besides exhausting her own taxable resources. France had extended the period of military training from two years to three, and had expended hundreds of millions of dollars on forts and arsenals and military equipments. And in August, 1914, they all said: "We are ready." To-day the whole civilized world is appalled over the direst tragedy of brutality and blood ever known to either civilization or barbarism.

And have we no living statesmen to-day who are able to measure this most destructive of all human tragedies and learn the lesson for the salvation of our own war-racked, despoiled, and despondent people? Shall the pigmies of puerility and profligacy be allowed to fasten on the American people the same brutal system that brought swift ruin to the German Empire?

This is the most vital, the most momentous, the most all-absorbing question before the American people. All other questions pale into insignificance. A great new book by Dr. Charles E. Jefferson on "What War Teaches" is full of illuminating ideas. I quote:

Armed peace inevitably leads to war. This is the crowning lesson of the European tragedy. Men who are blear-eyed talk of the failure of Christianity. Why do they not talk of the failure of militarism. Militarism is the colossal booby and blunderbus of the world. What has this war shot to pieces? The delusion that "armaments are a guaranty of peace." Every moral teacher in America ought to do what he can to rub that lesson into the minds of men.

LEARN NO LESSON FROM HISTORICAL TRAGEDIES.

And yet we have plenty of bawling boobies in and out of Congress who have learned no lesson from this awful holocaust of blood and slaughter, who would scourge our people anew with a gigantic Military Establishment, which, according to Jefferson, will "grind us with public burdens and sink us under them."

Two years ago, with the great powers aligned against Germany, we were fighting over two and a half million men overseas to make the world safe for democracy. Now Congress is saying to the American people in deliberate official action—in preparing for another war—that the fight to make the world safe for democracy was a cruel and bloody farce, a useless sacrifice of over 300,000 killed and crippled soldiers and a colossal debt of over twenty-five thousand millions of dollars.

OUR GREATEST LIVING GENERAL SPEAKS.

On January 31, 1916, before Congress declared war, Gen. Nelson A. Miles, the ablest and foremost living soldier in the United States, appeared on call before the Military Committee of the Senate. Senator FLETCHER asked Gen. Miles whether it was possible for any nation across the ocean to successfully attack the United States. Here is Gen. Miles's reply:

Gen. MILES. I dislike to give my views on that, as I consider it an unreasonable and impossible proposition. The placing of an army on American soil is the last thing any European Government would attempt; it could never be reembarked. It would dissolve like snow beneath the midday sun. Whenever it has been attempted it has resulted in disaster.

Senator FLETCHER. It would be impossible for the enemy's ships to carry coal enough to bring them over here and take them back, would it not?

Gen. MILES. If the enemy could not be destroyed by the patriotism and valor of the American people before they could send their ships back and get another load, then I would want to live in some other country.

This happened when every European power was strong and fully armed. Now all of the great powers of Europe are literally exhausted in men and money and credit and deathly sick of war. Why prepare for another war now? Every American citizen of sanity and sense knows that another war at this time is a physical impossibility.

CALLING BACK AN ERA OF COURAGEOUS PATRIOTISM.

Let me refer to a period of more courageous patriotism, when we had statesmen of stalwart common sense and moral courage in high official life.

In December, 1823, President Monroe issued his memorable message embodying what is now known as the Monroe doctrine. This message was a bold defi and challenge to the three great powers of Europe known as the Holy Alliance. This Holy Alliance was a league formed in September, 1815, after the Battle of Waterloo had sent Napoleon into exile. It was formed by Alexandria the First of Russia, Emperor Francis of Austria, William the Third of Prussia, and indorsed by nearly all the second-class powers of Europe. This Holy Alliance was formed to preserve monarchical absolutism in Europe, and, secondarily, to see to it that no member of the Bonaparte family should ever occupy any throne in Europe. That President Monroe issued his famous message embodying the Monroe doctrine against any interference by this alliance is a well-established fact. Prof. Peck, in his new International Encyclopedia, says:

The most noteworthy attempt of this Holy Alliance was to extend its operation to the New World by the coercion of Spain's revolting colonies.

President Monroe's message was a challenge to the whole formidable array of Old World monarchies, far more defiant and sweeping than Jefferson's defi to Great Britain July 4, 1776. How about our preparedness then? We had only 10,000 soldiers in the Regular Army, including Infantry, Artillery, and riflemen. And how about our Navy? We had 7 wooden battleships, 9 small frigates, 2 corvettes—low sloops with one tier of guns—5 sloops, 2 brigs, and 5 small schooners—30 war craft all told. And how many sea dogs of war did we have then? Let us see. We had 30 captains, 30 master commandants, 9 chaplains, 356 midshipmen, 1 sailing master, 16 boatswains, and 18 gunners—all told only 512, besides the lieutenants, quartermasters, and Army surgeons. What was the entire population of the United States at that critical period—1823? By the census of 1820 we had, including Indians, 9,633,822 people, all told. How much did our Navy cost us in 1823? Nine hundred and twenty-nine thousand five hundred and three dollars, all told. Did the Monroe doctrine precipitate war? No. We had 3,000 miles of deep ocean between us and any possible enemy in the Old World. That same ocean still rolls between, and we have now 110,000,000 instead of less than 10,000,000 in 1820. Who is afraid? No one with self poise or ordinary horse sense or courage sufficient to be a citizen of America.

NO HYSTERICAL IMPERIALISTS AFTER THE CIVIL WAR.

Let me refer to a later period in our history, when hysterical imperialists did not appear anywhere in public life.

THE RAPID GROWTH OF ORNAMENTAL IDLERS.

We had over 2,000,000 volunteer soldiers in the Civil War, yet at the close of the war President Grant, the foremost soldier of his time, reduced the Regular Army to 25,000 men and 900 officers. We needed a big Army in 1870 as much as we need one now. In 1914, six years ago, the entire appropriation for our Army was $95,266,000. Now, in a time of peace, with no enemy nation in all the world, we are proposing to waste ten times as much.

Take the Coast Guard, for instance; we have wasted over $100,000,000 on the Coast Guard and have had two foreign wars since its establishment—the Spanish-American War and the World War—and not one gunner of this useless and expensive Coast Guard has ever been called upon to fire a shot. And yet we provide in the pending bill 30,000 soldiers for the Coast Guard alone. The bill provides for 291 officers for the Signal Corps, or over one officer for every two privates. This Army bill provides for 97 general officers, 36 major generals, and 60 brigadier generals; 21 major generals of the line and 11 of the ornamental staff; 46 brigadier generals of the line and 14 of the staff. The rank of major general during the tenure of the present officers is continued in the Signal Corps, Bureau of Insular Affairs, Inspector General's Department, and the Judge Advocate General's Department. The bill, therefore, carries a total of 36 major generals. A major general draws a straight salary of $8,000 a year, and with allowances it amounts to $10,000. Let us see: Thirty-six major generals at an aggregate cost of $360,000 per year, with no active service, does not look good to the average taxpayer. Adding the pay and allowances of the 60 brigadier generals, we have an aggregate cost for ornamental idlers in uniform alone approximating $840,000, not to mention the big army of colonels and lieutenant colonels and majors and captains, and so forth, making the exasperating total of 18,000 officers, not including Gen. Pershing, made General supreme by Congress.

WHY PREPARE FOR ANOTHER WAR?

Let us remember that no country around the world has ever initiated or first declared war against the United States since the adoption of our Federal Constitution of 1787, and never will. Hence it is a mild statement that this proposed enormous Military Establishment in time of peace is nothing short of criminal idiocy.

The Emperor Augustus, who dispatched ships to Egypt to bring back sand for his gladiators when the plebeian populace of Rome were gaunt and desperate with famine, was of the same type and kidney as this military aggregation responsible for this extortionate and excruciating bill.

This wicked waste of our hard-earned tax money, this terrible debauchery of the electors, this dangerous and degenerating military propaganda, coupled with the stolid indifference of the masses over their despoilment, fill all patriotic hearts with fearful forebodings. But we should not despair. Let us hope on and never cease our efforts to arouse the public conscience and rally the people from their comatose condition to embrace as of old that puissant spirit of democracy from whose womb this Republic was born.

APPENDIX.

ADMONITION FROM THE FOREMOST STATESMAN, PROPHET, AND GENERAL OF THE REVOLUTION.

Cultivate peace and harmony with all nations * * * Overgrown military establishments are, under any form of government, unauspicious to liberty and are to be regarded as particularly hostile to republican liberty. (George Washington.)

A VALUED PATRIOTIC SENTIMENT FROM AN EX-PRESIDENT AND STATESMAN AND GENERAL.

We need no large standing army in this country. We are a Republic, where every citizen is a beneficiary of the Government. In Europe government rests upon force, and every laboring man is carrying a soldier on his back. In the German Empire the spiked helmet is supreme, but the United States Government rests upon the love of home and country of all our people. (James A. Garfield, 1868.)

HUMANE VIEWS OF A GREAT AMERICAN PRELATE.

God grant that the day is not far off when the Prince of Peace will reign over the Cabinet of the Nation, over the kings and presidents, and settle disputes not with standing armies but by an international board of arbitration. (Cardinal Gibbons.)

VIEWS OF THE GREATEST OF ENGLAND'S ESSAYISTS AND PHILOSOPHERS OF HUMAN DESTINY.

A standing army means waste and moral decay. No nation can improve its morals or grow in strength when its bravest and best sons are year by year devoured in the army. (Thomas Carlyle.)

PROCLAMATION BY THE ABLEST AND MOST CONSERVATIVE LABOR LEADER AROUND THE WORLD.

More than a year has passed since silence settled over the battle fields, yet in all that time not one measure of really constructive character has been placed on the Nation's statute books. The national machinery of government seems to have been paralyzed into either inaction or reaction by the cessation of hostilities. And never was the world so starved for great fundamental progress. Money greed, political greed, greed for place and power—these have been among us undoing our will and striking at our liberties. (Samuel Gompers.)

VIEWS OF A GREAT EDITOR.

There were powerful men in the United States who have wanted a great standing army. They found that men hired from Pinkerton in great labor strikes were not satisfactory. The Czar had a great standing army. Trotski and Lenin have that army now. Be careful how you build up a dangerous weapon that somebody else may take from you. A man named William Hohenzollern also built with much military genius a gigantic standing army. Where is William now? (Arthur Brisbane.)

REV. JOHN MADDOCK HAS VIRILE VIEWS.

Among other rapid thoughts, I note that many preachers during the last three years have been galloping war horses, sworded and spurred, with blood in their eyes, instead of preaching the benign doctrine of the lowly Nazarene. (John Maddock.)

HOW THE BEAR FEELS THAT WALKS LIKE A MAN.

Bolshevism will never be overthrown in Russia if America and the rest of the world continue to maintain the present international frame of mind toward "the bear that walks like a man." Allied intervention is wrong. (Gregory Zilboorg.)

VIEWS OF THE UNITED LEATHER WORKERS OF THE WORLD.

Militarism is the doctrine of the savage. We are living in a day of industrial and scientific development, and it is high time that, in the closing of the first quarter of the twentieth century, we realize it necessary to think in terms of industrial development and more equal service in the line of production and not in terms of war and destruction. (Simon Knebel, chairman.)

STRONG BACKING FOR A MILITARY PRESIDENT.

Among others currently understood to be backing Gen. Wood financially are Percy Rockefeller and George W. Perkins, of Morgan & Co. The Du Ponts are also known to be friendly to Wood's candidacy and are supposed to be assisting in paying the bills. (Harry B. Hunt in Toledo News-Bee.)

REDEEMED RUSSIA SHOULD WARN THE AMERICAN PEOPLE.

Freed from centuries of oppression and through unparalleled sacrifice, Russia is now standing erect, seeking to cleanse and purify every chamber of past horror, looking only for the full expansion of national life and the happiness of every individual. This is an object lesson for the American people that should not pass unheeded. We spilled treasure and blood to establish democracy in the world. But now we are planning a great standing Army, a mighty Navy. What does this all mean but a preparation for future wars and the inculcation of militarism in the minds of coming generations? Are we sure we are sane to permit this growth to enlarge? If persisted in by every agency of entrenched privilege, we will become as Russia under the Czar. (James A. Warren.)

VIEWS OF OHIO'S MOST COURAGEOUS PROGRESSIVE.

For king, kaiser, and czar millions have given up their lives. Many millions more are suffering as no people ever suffered before. All have avoided the real reason, and that is militarism. The doctrine, that to be prepared for war insures peace has been shot to hell. We must not follow in the footsteps of Europe, though jingoes yell, munition makers clamor, and fake patriots proclaim otherwise. (Peter Witt, Cleveland.)

VITAL TRUTH BY THE GREAT VICTOR HUGO.

The chief cause of war is found in the armaments of nations. (Victor Hugo.)

THE REASON WHY MILITARY MEN WANT BIG ARMIES AND NAVIES.

When the lawyer asks for the abolition of litigation and the doctor prays for the disappearance of patients, then maybe the professional fighter yearns for peace. But the soldier ought to wish for war. It is his only business. (Ernest Crosby.)

Here is a couplet from The Illusion of War, by our greatest living poet, Richard Le Gallienne:

War I abhor,
And yet how sweet
The sound along the marching street
Of drum and fife, and I forget
Wet eyes of widows, and forget
Broken old mothers, and the whole
Dark butchery without a soul.

Here is a "Song of hate" by Joanna Bornsen:

I hate the makers of the tools of death,
Those loathsome harpies crouching in their den
Of greed, who scent the battle's gory breath
To fatten on the bones of slaughtered men.

I hate the war promoters, high and low,
Who lit the torch that set the world aflame,
For they are mankind's most pernicious foe.
I hate them all; accursed be their name!

THE OPEN DOOR OPENLY ARRIVED AT.

Mr. Lansing is winning friends by his dignified silence. He has had nothing to say since President Wilson showed him the open door openly arrived at. (Toledo Blade.)

Soldiers' Bonus Legislation.

I expect that I shall have the confidence of the great majority of the soldiers in my determination to support only a plan which can be borne by the general public and to support such a plan to the very limit of my ability.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM N. VAILE.

OF COLORADO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, March 18, 1920.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, the Denver Express recently telegraphed asking me to state my position on the soldiers' bonus plan, whereupon I wired as follows:

Replying to your telegram of this date, I favor any plan of increasing the soldier's compensation which will not increase the cost of living, but inasmuch as all pending bills on this subject, some 20 in number, have been referred to the Ways and Means Committee, which is holding daily sessions, I prefer to reserve judgment on any particular plan until the evidence of its benefits to the soldier and its effect on the general public has been submitted. Abundant opportunity is now being given to American Legion and all other soldier organizations to submit their views, and I believe that as a result of these hearings a plan will be worked out which can be borne by the general public and at the same time provide for soldiers a just compensation substantially equivalent to that received by those who did their work at home.

The Express in its issue of March 4 quotes the foregoing telegram under the following headline and with the following comment:

VAILE WON'T DECLARE FOR YANK RIGHTS—STRADDLES ON QUESTION OF COMPENSATING MEN WHO SERVED.

Replying to a telegram sent him to-day by the Denver Express asking for his stand on the question of justice to the soldiers of democracy and compensation for their losses caused by war service, WILLIAM N. VAILE comes back with a straddle telegram. VAILE says that he is for any plan to help the soldiers that will not increase the cost of living. Everybody else, the trusts, the European loafers, and the profiteers have been allowed or actively assisted by the Government to raise the cost of living by taking from the American people. The 5,000,000 soldiers and their wives and children, it seems, are to be made the goats.

In an editorial in the same issue the Express says, presumably referring to all Congressmen who do not fully meet with its approval:

Keep up your telegrams, boys. Shoot in your letters and you will have these white-livered machine politicians on the run.

Nominate a soldier for Congress in every district represented by a cheap politician who was willing to allow this Government to lend nearly four and a half billion dollars to bankrupt European Governments since the armistice and to ship food out of this country until 20 per cent of our people are not getting enough to eat.

Four and a half billions to help put over the schemes of international finance, to boost that fake league, but nothing for the men who risked their lives for a dollar a day, while corporations back here grafted as high as 18,000 per cent on their capital stock.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I admire the Denver Express for many things which it has done and is doing. It is a fearless and outspoken advocate of the people's rights. Sometimes I think it is a mistaken advocate, but it has as much right to its opinion as I have to mine, and it was speaking in behalf of a cause which makes a strong pull at any heart that is in the right place. The heart of the Express is in the right place. I sincerely believe that mine is in the right place, and to prove it I am going to take my case direct to the soldiers of the World War. I shall have to be judged by them, anyway, and I do not shrink from that judgment, though I am advised that 90 per cent of them are in favor of an immediate bonus in cash or bonds from the Government of the United States. Incidentally I may call attention to the fact that there are some 10,000 ex-soldiers in my district, and counting the adult members of their families, those who are identified with the soldiers in financial interest, constitute a much larger number of people than those who voted for any single candidate for Congress in either of the last two elections in my district. In view of this very obvious fact, I may perhaps be pardoned for saying that if my position is really adverse to the just demands of at least 30,000 voters of my district, it is not fitly described by the term "white livered," which imputes cowardice. Some folks may use another term to describe it, but I am willing to leave that question to the soldiers of the World War when they have fully considered the whole situation.

Let me say that by every tie of sympathy and association I am with the boys who fought and won the war. I was a soldier once, nearly 22 years ago. It was in a very insignificant war as we think of wars now, but there were more deaths in it in proportion to the number of men in the service than there were in our recent armies. I did not get to the front. In that respect my own experience reflects the disappointment of the majority of soldiers in this war. I did lie at the point of death from typhoid.

Many thousands of our brave ex-service men of the World War received wounds in battle or suffered more from disease than I did, but the majority of soldiers in this last war escaped injury or sickness. I was a private. In that respect my experience was identical with that of the vast majority of soldiers of this war. My military record is entirely unadorned with any distinction greater than that which comes to any soldier from the performance of his duty. But my experience was sufficient to make me believe that I know the heart of the man in the ranks, that it is my own heart. It would be a pleasure for me to say to the man in the ranks that I will vote for anything he wants. It would be far easier for me to say that to 30,000 voters who have been my friends and who could reelect me by a thumping majority than it is to say to them that I owe some duty to the Treasury of the United States and that I must and shall judge their wants according to the light of that duty. My only brother, who was considerably over the age at which any man was called by the draft, threw up an important and fairly well-paid job in Alaska and came to the United States at his own expense to volunteer as a private in the Regulars after war was declared. He served through the Argonne drive with a most hard-fighting artillery unit, which suffered heavy casualties. He was recommended for officers' training camp in France, but stayed in the ranks by his own choice. He was overseas altogether for about 18 months. He came out as a corporal and he is now starting in again to practice his profession as a civil engineer. He has not asked me to vote for the bonus, but he is dependent on his own earnings for his support, and I know he could use some money. I would like to help him get five hundred or a thousand dollars.

When I was last in Denver a kid came into my office who had been in my own company on the Mexican border. He was only 16 then. He was so young that I once had to send him back to his quarters to wash behind his ears, as I am now teaching my baby boy to do. He had been continuously in the military service of the United States from the 19th of June, 1916, until long after the armistice. He had been reported killed in action in France, but he stood before me that day with only a small scar in his cheek and a large scar on the other side of his neck to show where he had been neatly drilled through the face by a Boche bullet at the second Battle of the Marne. This seasoned veteran of 19, as fine an example of a soldier in every one of his 64 upstanding inches as has ever been produced in any time or any country, was much more than young enough to be my son, and I wish he were. He was going to start farming. A thousand dollars would be a godsend to him, and if the editor of the Express thinks I would not like to see him get it he is misjudging me most unfairly.

Why does he think so, anyway? Did I say so? My language was, "I favor any plan of increased soldier compensation which will not increase cost of living." I meant both parts of that sentence. I am not talking about compensation to the men who were injured or who lost their health. I am not talking about vocational training or about compensation to the families of soldiers who have died. We have already made a pretty fair start on liberalizing the laws of the last Congress for the benefit of those folks, but we have a long way left to go, and I shall never mention cost of living or any other cost in connection with those forms of relief. But my telegram was asked for and was written concerning bonuses of cash or bonds for men who are young and strong; whose health, on the average, is better than when they went into the Army; who are proud to say that, notwithstanding the priceless value of their service, it was only the performance of their duty; and who, with rare exceptions, do not now find any lack of remunerative employment. To these men I say that I have a right and it is my duty to consider the effect on the whole people of the United States of an immediate enormous payment of money to them. Yes, brother corporal, that includes you; and it includes you, the boys of my old Company A, who were more fortunate than I in having the larger service. And furthermore, boys, I am not enough of a "white-livered machine politician" to be put "on the run" even by my best friends. But this is one of the biggest and most far-reaching questions that will have to be decided for many years, and I do not believe you will think I am wrong when all I ask is to "reserve judgment on any particular plan until the evidence of its benefits to the soldier and its effect on the general public has been submitted."

I said in my telegram to the Express that there were some 20 different plans pending in Congress. There are about that number which have been the subject of some public discussion. Altogether, however, there are some 70 of these bills. Does somebody insist that I declare unequivocally in favor of some one of these plans when the soldiers' organizations themselves do not agree and when the committee in charge of this legislation is still considering the evidence? Well, the man who insists on that has a very different conception of a Congressman's duties than I have.

This is the problem in a nutshell: Before the war it cost us approximately one and one-quarter billion dollars to pay all the annual running expenses of the Government. We now pay nearly that amount in interest alone. Instead of a billion and a quarter it is necessary for us now to appropriate nine billions for the coming fiscal year, and, at that, every department, except the Post Office, is complaining bitterly that its estimates are greatly cut. The postal employees and many other Federal employees are justly complaining that their wages are much lower than formerly, in view of the greatly increased cost of living.

Our total revenues from all sources for the next fiscal year will be less than six billions. In other words, we are facing a sure deficit for the coming year in floating indebtedness of more than $3,000,000,000—that is, of more than twice the entire cost of running the Government prior to the war. A bonus of $500—about the minimum proposed—to each soldier would add two billions to that indebtedness. The different plans suggested range all the way from that amount up to twenty billions. Now, how does a nation pay its debts? There is only one possible way to pay either debts or running expenses, and that is by taxation, whether they are paid in cash or bonds. Bonds have to be paid by taxes, and no thoughtful man can doubt that a large bond issue would very greatly depress the bonds which were floated during the war, and which are now selling at around 90 cents on the dollar. If they should drop to 75 cents, it would mean loss to their holders, including many hundreds of thousands of poor people, in the aggregate of $2,500,000,000.

Taxation, whatever its form, is borne ultimately by the consumer, and while the rich man may actually pay more, both absolutely and in proportion to his wealth, the burden of increased taxation is always felt more heavily by the poor. If there is anyone who contends that taxation is not a very important factor in the cost of living, I have yet to meet that person. Of course, it is not the only factor. The profiteer needs attention, and I hope I am not so narrow a critic of the administration as to deny that he is getting it from the officers of the department charged with that duty. He ought to have more attention, and he will get that, too. Another factor in the cost of living is the great inflation of the currency, caused by our necessary bond issues and expansion of credits, in connection with greatly diminished production, during the war. The profiteer takes advantage of that condition, but, even if he were eliminated, it would still exist. The high cost of living will gradually diminish as production approaches prewar standards and the currency is gradually contracted. It will stay high and grow higher if we further expand the Nation's obligations.

Nevertheless, I do not propose or suggest that the soldiers be not granted relief, and liberal relief at that. I hope and believe that a plan can be worked out which, as I stated in my telegram, "can be borne by the general public and at the same time provide for soldiers a just compensation substantially equivalent to that received by those who did their work at home." But any such plan has got to take into consideration the manner of its payment. In order to get my vote, it has got to be so timed and adjusted that it will not increase the deficit to be raised by taxation.

I believe the plan which will be adopted will be along the lines of the Mondell "soldier settlement" bill, greatly liberalized and extended by some of the features of the Morgan bill, so that every soldier can obtain from the Government for the purpose of establishing a home, either in the city or in the country, a loan sufficient for that purpose at a low rate of interest and with amortizing payments spread over a long period of years. Such a plan may be reasonably expected to finance itself with a relatively small initial advance by the Government. It appeals to our Americanism and our patriotism by recognizing that the soldier and the home are our combined protection for all the future. And it provides an adjustment period during which our finances may be reestablished and in which it may be possible to further liberalize the plan itself. I hope and believe that if such a plan is adopted it may be possible in the not distant future to stimulate the acquisition of homes under it by waiving part of the amortizing payments which, clearly, will have to be required at the start. It will depend on how we succeed in working ourselves out of the situation we are in now.

In the near future the substantial economies already enforced by the present Congress in the administration of the departments can be very greatly increased. A great part of the expensive personnel now maintained at Washington will become unnecessary and that which experience is showing to be unnecessary now can be eliminated. The budget system which has passed the House and which will be passed by the Senate before the expiration of the present Congress will put the Nation in the way of an orderly and businesslike conduct of its finances. Greatest of all, the improvement in industry and in business conditions generally will make taxes somewhat more easily borne both by rich and poor.

If any man objects to a plan of compensation which "can be borne by the general public," the conclusion must be that he would favor a plan of compensation which could not be so borne.

I hope and I expect that I shall have the confidence and support of the great majority of the soldiers in my determination to support only a plan which can be borne by the general public, and to support such a plan to the very limit of my ability.

Fess Bill to Amend the Zone Postage Rates on Second-Class Mail Matter.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EUGENE BLACK,

OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, March 23, 1920.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, recently the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads held hearings on H. R. 10876, a bill introduced by the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. FESS, to amend the present zone postage law applying to second-class matter so as to provide that the rates which were fixed for the first year of the operation of the present law should be made permanent. It will be remembered that when Congress passed the zone postage law it so arranged the rates that they would be increased each year until the fourth year of the operation of the law, when they would reach their maximum and remain stationary thereafter. The reason for thus graduating the increase in rates, and not making the fourth-year rates immediately effective, was not because Congress thought they were in any respect too high, but was to enable the publishers of newspapers and magazines to adjust their business to the increased charges.

Now comes along the Fess bill and seeks to restore the first-year rates of the bill, which if adopted would leave the Government in a very little better shape for revenues on this class of mail matter than it was prior to the enactment of the zone law. I am against the bill because (1) the postal revenues will be pushed to the limit to pay the expenditures of the Post Office Department for this fiscal year, and in all probability there will be a deficit; (2) the zone system of payment of rates is fair and equitable and should not be changed in principle, and should only be adjusted when inequalities and injustices can be shown to exist as to any particular zone; (3) the rates in the present law, when they reach their maximum in 1922, will then be considerably lower than the actual cost of service to the Government.

Some time ago I received a letter from Mr. Frank S. Banford, president of the American Trade Publishing Co., New York City, in which he propounded to me a long list of questions concerning various phases of the zone law, and to all of which, after investigation, I made careful reply. In my reply I stated the questions asked in his letter and then gave my answers, and as these questions and answers discuss practically all sides and angles of the zone postage law, I herewith insert the letter under leave to extend my remarks for whatever it may be worth to those who are interested in the subject:

FEBRUARY 28, 1920.

Mr. FRANK S. BANFORD,
President American Trade Publishing Co.,
New York City, N. Y.

MY DEAR SIR: I have received your esteemed favor of February 19, and would have answered it sooner but for the fact that Congress has had before it the final enactment of the railroad bill, and I have been giving my time and attention to the study of that legislation. I will now endeavor to reply fully and frankly to the questions which you propounded in your letter, and in doing so I will quote facts as nearly as I have been able to ascertain them by careful investigation. I will state your questions and my answers in their regular order.

Question 1. Do you believe that a pound of second-class matter should be charged with the same percentage of post-office expense as a pound of first-class matter?

Answer. No; and it will not be under the present zone law. If it were, the rates provided in such law would be very much higher than they are.

Question 2. If not, why do you insinuate that because the second-class tonnage is 20 per cent of the whole it should be assessed with 20 per cent of the cost?

Answer. I have not so insinuated nor stated. If I favored a zone law which would yield 20 per cent of the expenditures of the Post Office Department because of the fact that second-class matter furnished 20 per cent of the volume of the mail, then I would favor rates which would yield $90,000,000 per annum. I do not favor such rates and have never so stated. What I have stated is this:

I favor the present law, which, when the rates reach the peak of maximum return in 1902, will yield only $32,000,000 annually, and which, assuming that there will be no increase in the present aggregate of postal expenditures, will be only 7½ per cent of the total. Of course, it is very probable that by 1922 the aggregate expenditures of the Post Office Department will be $500,000,000, in which event the $32,000,000 to be collected from second-class matter will be only 6⅜ per cent of the aggregate expenses.

Question 3. Do you not know that the post-office officials themselves claim that it costs six times as much for a pound of first-class mail as for a pound of second-class mail?

Answer. It is true that the department claims it costs six times as much to transport and handle a pound of first-class as it does for a pound of second-class mail. The transportation would be the same; the difference is due to the handling cost, as a pound of first-class mail averages about 45 pieces while a pound of second class only 4; but while it costs six times as much to handle the first-class mail, the average postage on a pound of such matter is 84 cents, so at the old flat rate of postage we received 84 times as much revenue from a pound of first-class mail as we did from a pound of second-class mail. Do you think that was just and equitable? Are you one of those publishers who are suggesting that we advance letters to 3 cents when first-class matter is already paying 84 cents a pound?

Question 4. Do you not know, too, that the Post Office Department's cost figures are based on the Hughes Commission report, now nearly 12 years old?

Answer. It is true that some figures of the Post Office Department are based on the Hughes Commission report, which commission conducted investigations during the year 1911; but these figures have been revised from time to time and brought down to date, until it is believed that they are as accurate as it is possible to secure them. The Hughes Commission, which was headed by Hon. Charles E. Hughes, found that the cost of handling and transporting second-class matter in the case of mailing at the cent a pound rate was approximately 5½ cents a pound, exclusive of certain expenses, principally for service in post offices which, because of the limited information regarding them, the commission did not assign.

Question 5. Do you not know that the audited revenues of the Post Office Department in 1907 were $183,000,000, and that for the year ending last June they were $364,000,000, or just about double what they were at the time of the Hughes Commission investigation?

Answer. Yes; and the amount collected for handling second-class matter in 1907 was $7,129,451.76, or only about 4 per cent of the cost of operating the Postal Service. The Fess bill, which you advocate, would raise about $16,000,000. This would be 3½ per cent of postal expenditures, as against 4 per cent for 1907, and would thus maintain the same low ratio, which is entirely unjustified.

Question 6. What reliance can be placed on cost estimates which state that parcel-post mail costs a fraction under 3 cents a pound and that second class costs nearly 9 cents a pound?

Answer. It is true that the average cost of handling and transporting a pound of parcel post is approximately 3 cents, but it is not true that second class costs 9 cents, because the department in all its statements before the Ways and Means Committee estimated the cost of handling and transportation of second-class matter at 7 cents a pound—a reduction since the Hughes Commission report—due to economies which had been effected. I am very much disposed to believe that these figures are correct, because the average transportation of a pound of parcel post is less than 400 miles, while on a pound of second-class matter the average distance is approximately 800 miles. The transportation cost would therefore be twice as much for second class as for parcel post. The average weight of a parcel at this time is 3 pounds 8 ounces, while the average weight for second-class matter is 4 ounces, so it would be necessary to handle and distribute 12 pieces of second-class mail to obtain the same weight as one piece of parcel post. It can readily be seen why the cost of transportation and handling second-class matter is more than twice as much as that for parcel post.

Question 7. You know, do you not, that the tonnage of parcel-post mail is over half the total? According to your letter, would it not be fair to expect the parcel-post mail to return in revenue over half the estimated operating cost of four hundred and fifty millions?

Answer. It is true that the tonnage of parcel post is more than half of the total of all mail transported, and it should bear this proportionate cost of transportation; but, while this fact is true, the number of pieces of parcel post handled annually does not represent more than about 8 per cent of the entire number of pieces of mail handled. Parcel post should bear only its relative proportion of the handling cost. The revenue from parcel post will represent about 30 per cent of the entire revenue of the Postal Service. Therefore you will see the proportion of volume of parcel-post matter to volume of whole and proportion of revenue derived therefrom to whole of revenue of department would be represented by the following figures: 50 : 100 : : 30 : 100, whereas as to second-class matter under the Fess bill it would be 20 : 100 : : 3½ : 100. Do you think that would be giving parcel-post matter a square deal? Remember, all books and educational matter of that kind go at parcel-post rates if they weigh more than 8 ounces.

Question 8. The trade and technical papers do not use the rural free delivery routes at all. In view of this fact, what percentage of the $65,000,000 rural free delivery cost is chargeable against our papers?

Answer. In estimating the cost of transportation and handling, the various papers have never been separated into the different classes. It would be impossible to tell what portion of the trade or technical journals are delivered on rural free delivery routes. In the statistics of the department the second-class matter bears only its proportion of cost. While the trade and technical journals may not be delivered on rural routes, yet, because they are nationally circulated, the average haul is no doubt greater than the average publication, and they should bear more than the average cost of transportation.

Question 9. The cost of free, franked, and penalty mail for the last post office fiscal year is estimated at $30,000,000. Do you know how much of this enormous item is charged against second-class mail?

Answer. As stated in my answer to question 4, the Hughes Commission found that 5½ cents per pound was a fair appraisement of the cost of transportation and handling second-class mail matter, excluding certain expense cost of the Post Office Department which it did not include. In this appraisement second-class matter was not charged with any of the cost of transporting and handling free, franked, and penalty mail.

Question 10. Is there any reason why the free mail handled for the various departments of the Government should not be charged against the departments using the post office instead of being charged against the various classes of paid mail?

Answer. No. No class of mail matter should be compelled to pay more than its proportion of costs, all elements of cost to be considered in the computation. The cost of handling free, franked, and penalty mail is one of the costs which should not be allocated to the respective classes of mail matter.

Question 11. Do you approve of carrying country weeklies and dailies "free in county"?

Answer. No; I do not. I think they should be charged with the zone rate of postage contained in existing law.

Question 12. Do you believe that low carrying charges on freight, mail, or anything else benefit only the producers and shippers? If the rates on coal, wheat, and lumber should be cut in two, who would benefit most, the shippers or the consumers?

Answer. My answer to this question can be stated in very few words. I believe that the rates on mail matter, as well as commodities transported by freight, such as coal, wheat, and lumber, mentioned by you, should be as low as is consistent with fair payment for the services performed. I do not believe, however, in subsidizing one class of mail matter or freight traffic at the expense of another, even though it might be conceded that to do so would benefit a very considerable number of people. That is why I object to the Fess bill, as I have very fully stated in my answer to other questions.

Question 13. Why do you say, then, that low postage rates are a "subsidy" to the publishers?

Answer. In my judgment, my answer to question 12 covers above question, and therefore I will not repeat it, but respectfully refer you thereto.

Question 14. Is the money the Government spends on highways and navigable streams a "subsidy" to vehicle and boat owners? Why not compel the actual users of these facilities to pay the entire cost of their maintenance?

Answer. You certainly are too intelligent a man to compare improvement of public highways and navigable streams with that of a distinct and particular service rendered for hire by the Post Office Department to the American Trade Publishing Co., of which you are president. The difference is so patent that I do not deem further discussion of it necessary.

Question 15. Why not assess the entire cost of high schools and universities against the students attending them?

Answer. You surely do not place the advertising matter carried in the American Trade Publishing Co. at so much per (however meritorious it may be), and the zone law only applies to your advertising matter and not to your reading matter, on the same plane as the education endeavored to be taught our students at high schools and universities. If you do, then I fancy that none of the argument I have endeavored to make will meet with your approval.

Question 16. Why should the Government not run its entire machinery on a sordid profit-making basis rather than as a service to the whole people?

Answer. I have never contended that the Post Office Department should be run on a profit-making basis. All that I have ever contended is that it should be approximately self-sustaining. It renders a service very similar in its nature to that rendered by telegraph and telephone companies, express and transportation companies. The difference is that these latter concerns are entitled to collect a rate which will not only be self-sustaining, but will, in addition, yield a fair margin of profit, whereas the Government is not put to the necessity of making a profit, and should therefore only fix a rate high enough to make the Post Office Department, taken as a whole, self-sustaining.

Question 17. Why do you want the people of Texas to be specially taxed on all of their reading matter in proportion to their remoteness from the point of mailing?

Answer. My answer to this question is very flat denial that they are thus taxed. The reading matter in a newspaper or magazine is charged the same flat rate to any zone, and it is only the advertising matter which is charged at the zone rate, and if you attempt to pass this increased cost of carriage of advertising matter on to the reader instead of the advertiser, as you should, then the Texas readers will find it out, and I have no doubt will know how to take care of themselves.

Question 18. Have you any conception of the financial penalty which will be imposed upon the people of Texas when the present postage-zone law is in full force and effect? We have made a calculation based on the circulation of only 18 general magazines in Texas, such papers as the Literary Digest, Good Housekeeping, Popular Science Monthly, Collier's, Metropolitan, etc., and find that the excess postage which will be charged the citizens of Texas will be $328,928.04 for these 18 papers only. Add to this, if you will, the extra cost of farm papers, Texas newspapers, outside newspapers, and all the rest of the periodicals, religious papers, trade journals, etc.

Answer. The zone postage law does not impose any financial penalty on anyone, unless it can be established that it imposes a rate which will be higher than the cost of the service rendered by the Government. That fact you can not establish, because it does not exist. If, using the law as a pretext, any of the publishers should advance their subscription price to a greater amount than the increased rates would justify, then the fault would be chargeable to the publishers and not to the law. The people will be wise enough to ascertain this fact and take care of themselves.

Question 19. Why do you want to make periodicals and newspapers entering or leaving Texas hurdle higher and higher zone fences in both directions? What will you gain for Texas by making it difficult and expensive for information to get in or out of the State?

Answer. The periodicals and newspapers entering or leaving Texas do not hurdle higher and higher zone fences in both directions any more than the parcels-post matter, books, and a hundred other articles of mail matter that I might enumerate, and, in fact, which includes practically all mail matter except letters and very light packages, which, because of their very light weight, it would be impracticable to charge on the zone basis.

Question 20. Is there any reason why the citizens of Texas should not have access to current information of all kinds on the same basis as the citizens of New Jersey?

Answer. No. They do have. The zone postage law has the very same application to citizens of Texas as it does to citizens of New Jersey. If a point in Texas and a point in New Jersey are, for instance, the same zone distance from the city of Chicago, then the transportation of a pound of second-class matter from Chicago to either point would be identically the same, and it should be. If you mean, however, to ask me if I think that a pound of magazine or newspaper matter containing a large part of advertising should be transported from New York City to a point in New Jersey 100 miles distant for the same flat rate as is charged to a point in Texas 2,000 miles away, I say no. I have already stated my reasons on this point very fully in reply to other questions and will not repeat them here.

Question 21. Can you not subscribe to the idea that it is the function of the post office to draw the people of this country together and hold them together through the operation of low flat rates of postage rather than widen the vast distances which separate us physically by erecting high zone fences every few hundred miles to impede or stop the flow of life-giving information?

Answer. Oh, yes; I subscribe to the idea that one of the functions of the Post Office Department is to draw the people of the country together by means of communication and exchange of ideas, but I do not believe that in order to do this it is necessary to continue the almost noncompensatory rate of 1 cent per pound on second-class matter which existed prior to the adoption of the present zone law. You also probably forget the fact that publications maintained by and in the interest of religious, educational, scientific, philanthropic, agricultural, labor, or fraternal organizations, not conducted for private profit, enjoy the special rate of 1½ cents per pound at the peak of cost, this rate applying to both the reading and advertising portions of such publications. Your own paper, however useful and worthy it may be, is a private enterprise, and if there are any profits they will go to the owners of the paper. Therefore there can be no just complaint of the zone rates as applied to it, unless they are in excess of the cost of the service, which, in my opinion, you can not establish.

I have tried to answer your questions fairly as the answers occur to me. You may not agree to any part of the answers, which are argumentative, but if I have made any inaccurate statement of fact I would like to have it pointed out and will be glad to stand corrected.

Yours, very truly,

EUGENE BLACK.

Army Reorganization Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM E. ANDREWS, OF NEBRASKA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, March 18, 1920,

On the bill (H. R. 12775) providing for the reorganization of the Army.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, the pending bill proposes the reorganization of our Regular Army. It fixes the maximum of enlisted men at 299,000 and the number of officers at 17,832. Under this bill the War Department could enlist 150,000, 200,000, or 299,000 men, as necessities may require.

Prior to the recent war our Regular Army consisted of about 125,000 enlisted men. The maximum enlistment within the period of the war exceeded 4,000,000.

The committee states that the Secretary of War, on behalf of the administration, urged that our Regular Army should have 576,000 enlisted men and 28,000 officers. From these figures it will be observed that this bill has reduced the administration estimate nearly one-half. It is reported that the increased number demanded by the Secretary of War was to be used as a foreign army.

In addition to the Army of 576,000 enlisted men the administration urged in its recommendation that universal compulsory military training should be adopted immediately.

I congratulate the committee and the country upon the elimination of that provision from the bill.

COMPULSORY MILITARY TRAINING.

The various bills that have been proposed for the establishment of compulsory military training would require a very large increase of Federal expenditures each year.

Our military and naval resources are fully adequate to existing needs. The armies and navies of the Central Powers were overthrown and destroyed in the recent war. The nations of Europe have been pressed to the verge of bankruptcy.

Nation building must be the occupation of the European countries for a long time to come. In view of such conditions there is no necessity for compulsory military training in this country at present. Instead of increasing our annual expenditures we should reduce them as rapidly as possible. A retrenchment in our expenditures is absolutely necessary to the reduction of taxation, which ought to be brought about without undue delay.

It will be necessary to expend vast amounts of money in caring for the disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines of the recent war. That duty is first and imperative. Some wise provision should be made soon to restore in part the losses sustained by those who were called to the colors during the recent World War. Before beginning to spend billions more to prepare for an imaginary war we should do something for the boys who won the last war. If a bill should be brought before the House to establish compulsory military training I will vote against it. I will do all I can to reduce expenditures and thus prepare for the reduction of taxation.

CONSTRUCTION CORPS OF THE ARMY.

This bill proposes to distribute the officers and men of the construction corps among the various bureaus or divisions of the Quartermaster's Bureau. Under such an arrangement the construction work would have to be done by people who are distributed promiscuously, with a consequent loss in efficiency and economy of time and labor. If an exigency should arise requiring the concentration of all the officers and men assigned to that work, it would be necessary to mobilize them and concentrate their thoughts, energies, and activities before any considerable efficiency could be developed. The number of officers and men assigned to construction work should be restricted to the actual necessity of the service. This could not be done unless they were grouped together. Such work requires knowledge and skill in lines of engineering which is not required in the performance of the general duties of the Quartermaster's Division or Bureau. The chief purpose of the Quartermaster's Bureau is to purchase and distribute supplies for the Army, and it should be restricted to that business.

If the construction corps should be made a part of the Quartermaster's Office, the construction officers would be under the command of the Quartermaster General, who may not possess any training or skill as an engineer. Thus you would have an untrained officer in command with duties relating chiefly to the purchase and distribution of Army supplies. Why should the construction officers be required to serve under an officer who may know nothing about engineering and at the same time have the legal authority to rescind any plan that the construction engineer might deem essential? As a choice between an independent construction corps and the distribution of the construction officers and men among the Quartermaster's Bureau, I am decidedly in favor of an independent construction corps.

We are told that the creation of an independent construction corps will be $30,000,000 additional expense to the Army. Surely those who used those figures do not expect us to accept them as true. Note the fact that the amendment providing for an independent construction corps proposes to take the officers and men already included in the Quartermaster's Bureau and assign them to duty by themselves without any increase in number or grades of pay. Up to this point the expenses will be the same whether they remain in the Quartermaster's Bureau or whether they become an independent corps. Where, then, do the gentlemen find the additional cost of $30,000,000? Oh, some one says, the overhead charges of the independent bureau. If they should become a part of the Quartermaster's Bureau, stenographers and civilian clerks will be needed to perform the work belonging strictly to the work of construction. That same work can be done with a smaller number of stenographers, typists, and civilian clerks in an independent corps than would be required if the officers and men were distributed among the divisions of the Quartermaster's Bureau.

The argument has not yet disclosed any valid reason for including the construction officers and men in the Quartermaster's Bureau. If they had been included originally in the Engineer Corps, there would have been less reason for their segregation into an independent corps for construction purposes.

Those who have furnished the figures of the additional charge of thirty to forty millions by creating an independent construction corps should do some more figuring to correct their own mistakes.

FINANCIAL DEPARTMENT.

Section 9a provides for what is termed a financial department.

The creation of such a bureau will make it possible to develop rules of uniformity in the payment of Army bills and the adjustment of accounts. A personal knowledge of those two lines of business will emphasize at once the wisdom of this provision. With an efficient, industrious, honest official at the head, public business can be expedited in a very gratifying manner. The multiplicity of methods and agencies employed in the conduct of such business will also produce confusion, error, and delay. I know the special value of this plan of segregating the authority to pay bills from the authority to create them.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] has asserted that these two agencies should be united in one and the same person. I regard a policy of that kind as very dangerous to the public service.

Some years ago the Treasury Department recommended to Congress that the chief executive officer in the Public Health Service—then Marine Hospital Service—should be made a disbursing officer also. The law was passed and the designation was made. In a comparatively short period of time frauds were disclosed to the extent of about $65,000. When the details were all revealed it was clearly shown that those who opposed that policy in the beginning were right and those who favored it were wrong. That plan made it possible for the chief executive officer of that bureau to pass upon all of the purchases, prepare all vouchers for approval by the head of the bureau, and draw all checks for the payment of those bills.

I need not consume time to rehearse details by means of which these frauds were carried into effect. As soon as they were disclosed and the Secretary of the Treasury was informed as to the results of this plan he immediately recommended the repeal of that law, and it was repealed as speedily as Congress could reach it. If Congress should act with like wisdom in the future it will refuse to sanction any methods that will unite in one and the same person the authority to purchase supplies and also the authority to pay the bills.

RECONSTRUCTION.

All the energies of our people should be directed as urgently as possible to the tremendous task of reconstruction. We have done our part during the period of the war and now our domestic affairs should be restored as speedily as possible to healthy, normal conditions. The millions of young men who served our country so valiantly during the period of the war are passing back into the avenues of business life and should receive every possible encouragement and assistance.

If we should direct our thoughts toward the condition of our people and country prior to the war, we will find a fascinating field of observation. Behold the Nation at peace, happy, prosperous, and contented. The men and the women, the boys and the girls were passing to and fro in their daily vocations in pursuit of knowledge, wealth, pleasure, and happiness. Suddenly the call to arms transformed that picture into the busy, turbulent scenes of war. When the young men heard that call they thought about their plans for a lifetime; they thought about the homes they were preparing to build. How marvelous the transformation! What tremendous risks were involved! What loss of life and property! Speedily the Nation was transformed from that peaceful scene into the turbulent scene of war. Hearts were throbbing and tears were flowing as final good-byes were uttered and the boys turned their faces toward the camps and fields of battle. When once in the lines and they realized that their training was even moderately adequate they longed for the front lines, where the battle was raging. They left the shores of their native land, wended their way amidst the Leviathans of the sea, landed on foreign soil, and carried our flag, the Stars and Stripes, to victory, and emancipated the allied nations that were struggling for life. No sooner had that task been completed than they called for the privilege of returning to their homes and their daily vocations. We are still in the midst of that period of transformation, and the Congress of the United States should extend to those boys every possible assistance and encouragement for their reestablishment in profitable lines of employment and the restoration of the losses they sustained during the period of the war. Of course, we will draw from our National Treasury the contributions of the American people to compensate in part those who suffered the loss of limb and health. We will also draw from the National Treasury the funds needed to care for the widows and orphans.

These reflections are forced upon our minds as we contemplate the abandonment of the war organization of our Army and its reestablishment on a peace basis to hold aloft the principles of American liberty and show to the world that we are ready now and will ever be in the future to do our full duty to the nations of the world in times of peace as we were in times of war.

The National Prohibition Act and the Eighteenth Amendment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ANDREW J. VOLSTEAD,

OF MINNESOTA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, March 23, 1920.

THE NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, as the national prohibition act, familiarly known as the Volstead Act, is being constantly attacked as an extremely drastic and unreasonable measure, I may be permitted to offer a few observations. During the consideration of this measure, I made no special effort to defend its general character, but as the various provisions were reached for consideration I sought to explain and justify their retention in the bill. Having introduced the bill and having had charge of its passage in the House, I have naturally enough been subject to all sorts of threats and taunts. The act has had very bitter opponents as well as strong and earnest supporters, both inside and outside of Congress. In justice to the Members of the House, I am glad to say that they have all treated me with the utmost kindness and courtesy, for which I am sincerely grateful. The bill has met opposition from two classes: First, from those who are opposed to all legislation on the subject and, second, from those who believe that a prohibition law should be passed but who are opposed to any effective measure. Until recently few have openly advocated repudiation of our duty to pass a law to make effective the prohibition amendment. Nearly all opponents have posed as in favor of what they are pleased to call a reasonable enforcement act. To discredit this legislation these forces have joined in the cry that this law is so drastic and cruelly severe that none but the most extreme crank could support it. To this campaign, carried on in and out of Congress, many newspapers have given energetic and persistent support, and no doubt many good people who have had no opportunity to examine the measure have felt apprehensive of the sanity of those who stood sponsors for it. Everyone knows how difficult it is to refute a general charge of this kind; a charge accompanied with no bill of particulars. Perhaps the most effective answer is the overwhelming vote cast in both branches of Congress; the House passed it by almost three to every one that the opposition could muster, and the Senate gave it approval without even a roll call.

Had the measure contained any such unreasonable features as its opponents charge we should have known all about them. The House has some very able and energetic Representatives of districts bitterly hostile to all prohibition legislation, Representatives eager to delight their constituents by pointing out and holding up to public ridicule and condemnation any specially drastic or unnecessary provision. After weeks and months of campaigning against this bill, in which the dictionaries must have been diligently searched for abusive epithets, can anyone recall any particular provision that these gentlemen have pointed out as specially objectionable or as unnecessary in an effective law? I grant they can point to a number that they would like to eliminate. From their standpoint any law that prohibits the manufacture and traffic in intoxicants is not only unreasonable and drastic but utterly destructive of personal liberty. The attacks that have been made upon this act within the last few months clearly reveal the real purpose of those who have raised this hue and cry. The claim that the act is drastic is but camouflage. Their plea is not for the repeal of any so-called drastic feature; their plea is for open repudiation of the amendment and restoration of the saloon. What is it they ask for? Why, for beer and wine; to sugar coat their demand they call it light beer and wine, but they are careful to specify the percentage of alcohol that this liquor must contain. Under the law as it now reads the manufacture and sale of light wines and beer are permitted; what they ask for is the ordinary beer and wine. The smallest demand made is for beer that contains as much alcohol in seven beer glassfuls as is contained in half a beer glassful of whisky. Many of them demand a much stronger liquor, stronger than anything that was usually sold under the license system. It is not necessary to argue whether that beer is intoxicating. It was always intoxicating before this law went into effect. Each State that has had to enforce a prohibition law has found it absolutely necessary to prohibit not only liquor that is recognized as intoxicating but all the milder forms of such beverages that can be used as a subterfuge for stronger drinks, unless the alcoholic content is so low that it can be readily distinguished from the ordinary intoxicating liquor.

With practical unanimity the prohibition States prohibit all beer and wine that contain more than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol. There is no exception to this among the 33 prohibition States, unless it is Wyoming. That State has a statute that may possibly be construed to permit 1 per cent of alcohol. When the prohibition amendment was adopted it became the duty of Congress to pass a prohibition statute. No one had a right to expect that it would shirk its duty by passing a statute that would be ineffective; nor can anyone reasonably contend that, because this law prohibits what its enemies call light beer and wine, that makes the law extreme or radical. In that respect it simply follows along the beaten track of experience, the ordinary prohibition laws. I repeat, this attack is only an attempt to restore the saloon. It is an appeal to have Congress nullify the Constitution.

IS THE LAW DRASTIC OR EXTREME?

This act is just an ordinary prohibition law. It contains no features that can not be found in any number of prohibition statutes. The language of those statutes have been rewritten and modified to make them applicable to Federal conditions. The reason why this act is perhaps more effective than it was possible to make State statutes is the reason why national prohibition was sought. Under it the Government is able to reach the supply of liquor at its source and control its distribution and use, a thing impossible under State laws. The aim of this law is not to punish, but to make it impossible for a person to obtain liquor for illegal uses. If he can not obtain it, he can not sell it. It is this feature that worries the enemies of prohibition, and it is this thing that has made it possible to eliminate many of the drastic features found in such laws. In many States it is illegal to sell beer or wine, no matter how small a quantity of alcohol they contain; but under this law both may legally be sold if they contain less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol, and large quantities are being sold and consumed.

Under this law nonintoxicating cider and fruit juices may be made and consumed in the home. This permits the production for that purpose of cider and such juices, though containing more than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol. If the manufacture and use are confined to the home it is necessary to show that they are actually intoxicating before such manufacture and use become illegal. Under several statutes no liquor can be obtained for any nonbeverage purpose, not even for medical use, and some States forbid the sale of flavoring extracts and sirups used in foods and soft drinks if they contain any alcohol. This law expressly authorizes the manufacture and sale of all kinds of liquor for nonbeverage purposes.

LIQUOR FOR MEDICAL AND OTHER NONBEVERAGE USES.

Instead of a doctor being forbidden to prescribe such liquor, every physician in active practice may for the asking obtain an annual permit to prescribe. He is only asked to confine his prescriptions to persons actually in need of liquor for medical purposes, and to keep a record and make a report thereof. The difficulty in securing liquor on prescriptions is not due to any provision in the law; long before the law was adopted various associations of druggists passed resolutions pledging their members not to handle any liquor for any purpose. Many of those who were especially active in securing these pledges are, as I am informed, strongly opposed to all prohibition legislation. There is nothing in this law governing the sale of liquor by druggists that differs materially from like laws in operation in prohibition States. It does not impose any tax or other burden. The druggist must get a permit to sell, and the commissioner may ask him to furnish a bond; I understand a bond of $1,000 is asked. No charge is made for the permit. To purchase liquor he makes an application showing the liquor on hand and the kind and quantity he desires to purchase. This application, when approved by the prohibition director of the State, gives him a right to purchase at any time within three months. In addition to this, he must keep a record of what becomes of the liquor. There is no limit on the quantity of wine that may be prescribed. The high price of whisky is not due to the law, but to the action of the druggists. Liberal provisions are made for the manufacture and sale of sacramental wines. The views of the churches and synagogues were accepted on that subject and written into the law. All sorts of medical preparations, flavoring extracts, and sirups are permitted to be manufactured and sold in the same way, containing practically the same amount of alcohol as they did in years past. This law gives permission to all persons who had in their homes when it went into effect any liquor to retain and use it for beverage purposes, regardless of the quantity so held. Many States prohibit the possession of any intoxicating liquor or limit the amount to a very small quantity. This law removes a great many restrictions that hamper the manufacture and uses of alcohol and makes it possible to greatly increase its production. It is hoped that this may make alcohol a competitor of gasoline. Alcogas, the chief ingredient of which is alcohol, is sold in large quantities at this time and is in a measure such a competitor. The development of the alcohol industry is of great importance in many industries, and this bill aims to foster it in every way possible.

The remedial provisions in this bill are none of them more stringent those those contained in like laws. In some jurisdictions liquor may be searched for and seized without a search warrant, no matter where found. This law does not authorize any search, either of the person, his baggage, his home, or any other place, without a search warrant, and the act specifically forbids the search, even with a search warrant, of a person's home unless that home is used as a place for selling liquor. Few State statutes, if any, place as many restrictions upon the power to search for liquor as does this law. The only power in it to search without a warrant is in cases of persons caught in the act of violating the law. The law to enjoin the persistent violator has been found necessary everywhere, and is written on the statute books of the States, both East and West. That provision is no new invention. The penalties in this law are not any more severe than experience has proven to be necessary. They do not range above the ordinary penalties in such statutes.

FAKE STORIES AS BASIS FOR ATTACK ON PROHIBITION.

In concluding this branch of my subject I desire to call attention to a matter somewhat personal to myself. A fake story has been going the rounds in some of the newspapers to the effect that I do not believe in prohibition of the liquor traffic, and that under some sort of compulsion I wrote the prohibition act because I happened to be chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary. This story misrepresents my attitude and everything I have said on the subject. I should treat this as I have other stories had it not been made use of as a text for editorials abusing the prohibition cause generally.

These editorials, among other things, charge that I am hedging, getting scared, and am lacking in convictions. Let me assure my friends among the enemies of prohibition that they are off the scent and are barking up the wrong tree. I am not only convinced that prohibition is a good thing, but also that the law passed to enforce it is a good law. I am gratified to know that the distillers, the brewers, and the friends of the saloon are against this law. Prohibition is not intended to provide a bar over which a person can order hard and soft drinks at will. If the gentlemen who have published this story imagine that their campaign of misrepresentation and abuse has had any effect on my attitude, they are very much mistaken. Every report that has come to me indicates that the law has worked wonders for the public good. Their frantic appeals for personal liberty has not disturbed me any more than their complaint that the prohibition law is sufficiently drastic to actually prohibit. I have no sympathy for the kind of liberty they want, liberty to restore the saloon and nurse the brothel; liberty to fill the jails and crowd the almshouses; liberty to wreck manhood and blast hope; liberty to profit on suffering and insanity; liberty to gratify their alcoholic drink habit at the expense of ruined homes and wasted lives—none of these are inalienable rights.

THE EFFECT OF PROHIBITION.

The frantic effort made by the saloon interest to discredit prohibition and the confident claim that a reaction has set in against the law does not square with the facts. We have been assured and reassured that labor was bitterly hostile to the law. The Literary Digest, to ascertain the actual facts, sent to labor leaders in every section of the country an inquiry on the subject, which was printed on March 13 in that magazine. Five hundred and twenty-six replies were received, and approximately 30 per cent of those replies are, as this magazine states, based on actions taken at regular meetings of various labor organizations. Out of these 526 replies only 143 opposed prohibition, 345 answered that prohibition was a benefit to the workingman, 38 expressed either doubt of its value or that it had not been given a fair trial. When it is remembered that prominent labor leaders made a strenuous campaign against this law the result is remarkable.

The Sun and New York Herald, heretofore hostile to prohibition, published a two-page article in its March 14 issue headed:

Bowery is rolling in wealth. Day of the down and outer gone. Bread lines abandoned. Missions get fewer appeals for help and saloons pass into other business. Prohibitionists report decreases in disease and crime, quoting official figures.

The facts quoted eloquently demonstrate the value of this policy.

The New York World of March 20, giving an account of a speech delivered by Bird Coler, commissioner of public charities of New York City, prints the following:

Commissioner Coler said that, since the dry era, the municipal lodging house has been practically vacant, only about 40 of its 900 beds being occupied. The alcoholic ward at Bellevue Hospital has practically ceased to exist as such, he said, only 15 or 20 patients having been received within the last month. Besides, he said, commitments of children, because of poverty, have shown a marked decrease.

"I can only say this to my friends in the Democratic organization in the city, State, and Nation," said Commissioner Coler, "that if any of them were sitting in my place, with a chance to observe the betterment of civilization prohibition has brought, he would take no other stand than to present these facts to the American people.

"The results of the disuse of alcohol have been more astounding than even the claims of the most ardent prohibition advocates."

The Brooklyn Daily Eagle adds its testimony, under date of March 26, by publishing from a speech by Frank Vanderlip, one of the great financiers of this country, the following:

With a true combination of moral insight and plain common sense we have amended our Constitution and have provided the greatest single economic factor looking toward material prosperity ever created by legislative enactment. I believe that the economic value of prohibition will eventually be an influence for the prosperity of society the like of which will amaze ourselves and the world.

CONCURRENT POWER.

As the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD contains very little, if any, of the story or purpose of the provision contained in the prohibition amendment giving Congress and the several States concurrent power to enforce it, I may be permitted to submit a few observations, as it is a subject on which I have been frequently asked for information. The resolution proposing this amendment originated in the Senate; when it reached the House it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, of which I was then a member. It was there discussed among the members, especially among those who favored its adoption. It was, among other things, pointed out that if the amendment should be adopted in the form in which it had passed the Senate its effect might be to repeal or enable Congress to suspend every prohibition statute in the country, and that it ought to be made the duty of the State as well as the National Government to enforce it, as the States have courts and police forces equipped to do that work. Attention was also called to the fact that States and the Federal Government exercised the power to punish the same act, each in its own courts and under its own laws. As this power has usually been spoken of by courts and law writers as concurrent jurisdiction, and as it was sought to confer the like power on Congress and the several States, the phrase "concurrent power" was adopted as expressing that idea. I do not know who wrote the provision, but I know that was the idea sought to be written into the amendment. Because of this provision many difficulties are predicted, conflicts of all kinds are anticipated. If construed as intended by those who proposed it, there is no occasion for concern. There is very little chance for any conflict.

The amendment can not be enforced by granting the right to do certain things; it must be enforced by forbidding the things forbidden by the amendment. Any act left unpunished by a State may, nevertheless, be punished by the National Government if such punishment tends to enforce the amendment, and likewise, to accomplish the same purpose, an act left unpunished by the National Government may be punished by the States. If a State should illegally authorize a person to sell beer containing, say, 2¾ per cent of alcohol, it would not occasion any conflict with the national law prohibiting the sale of beer containing more than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol. The person so authorized would simply be in the position of one who has to get authority from two masters. It is possible that a conflict might arise if you can imagine that a State could make it the duty of a citizen to sell liquor in violation of the national law, but in that event the law of Congress would be supreme, unless that law was itself in violation of this amendment. There is no reason why the provision of the Constitution making the law of Congress supreme does not apply to legislation under this amendment. The fact that the power of Congress and the States is concurrent does not mean that the power of Congress is not supreme in cases of conflict. The very purpose of the provision making the laws of Congress supreme is to deal with cases of concurrent power, power existing at the same time over the same subject. If the eighteenth amendment had been a part of the Constitution when that instrument was adopted, I venture the opinion that no one would ever have suggested that the rule making the law of Congress supreme would not apply to laws passed under it. The exercise of concurrent power by Congress and the several States is neither new nor unusual; it has been constantly exercised ever since the Government was founded. It is expressly authorized by section 5328 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. This section in some form has been in force since 1825, and has been repeatedly recognized by our courts as valid.

As to many offenses subject to Federal punishment, the States would have no power to punish if this statute was repealed. This makes the power dependent upon the will of Congress. To avoid such dependence, the provision giving the States power to enforce the amendment was written into it. The object of making the power concurrent was to obviate the rule that where Congress acts under a granted power it has the effect of suspending or annulling State laws on the same subject. It was the intention that the power to enforce should concur in the sense that at the same time and to accomplish the same purpose Congress and the several States might make and enforce laws. The strange contention is sometimes urged that those that proposed and ratified the amendment intended that the law of Congress should not be valid unless the State affected by it concurred in it by agreeing to it. If that is true, it follows as a necessary corollary that the law of a State is not valid unless Congress so concurs in it, and that, as there are no such laws, liquor is no longer subject to any control. Such a construction would defeat the very purpose of this provision and make the adoption of the amendment not a prohibition, but a free-whisky law. The States would not only be helpless as against a hostile Congress, but Congress would likewise be without power. Why not contend that Congress, in creating the municipal court for this District, intended by the grant of concurrent jurisdiction to the municipal and Supreme Court of all actions in which the amount in controversy does not exceed $500 that the municipal court must concur in all judgments rendered by the Supreme Court in suits involving less than that sum to make such judgments valid?

Not only was the amendment with this provision for concurrent power written by the friends of prohibition, but they proposed it by a vote of more than two-thirds of both branches of Congress; and it was also the friends of prohibition who ratified it in the legislatures of the various States. No one can seriously argue that these men meant to perpetrate such a stupendous fraud upon the people of the country as they have done if that is what they meant. I am sure the people nowhere so understood it. These men have clearly demonstrated by their action that they did not so understand it and had no such intention. Those who proposed the amendment in Congress stood staunchly behind the national prohibition act, though that act makes no provision for any such agreement, and the States that ratified the amendment are proceeding upon the theory that no such agreement is required. Utterly unconscious of any such requirement, many of the legislatures that ratified the amendment passed laws for its enforcement that contained no suggestion of the necessity for such an agreement. As these are the men who were authorized to and did act for the people in adopting this amendment, they must be presumed to have known what was intended, and we have a right to assume that their intention and the language they used to express it square with their actions.

Pensions for Soldiers of the War with Spain, Philippine Insurrection, and Chinese Relief Expedition.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. OSCAR E. BLAND,

OF INDIANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, March 25, 1920.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House of Representatives, ever since I have been in Congress I have been continually advocating the necessity for liberalizing the pension laws as applicable to the soldiers who served after the Civil War closed. The class of soldiers ordinarily referred to as Spanish-American veterans, in my judgment, have received shabby treatment from this Government up to this hour, and when I say this I, of course, mean in comparison with what the Government has done for other soldiers. It is true that the Government has tried to help every soldier if he received disability in the service, but the amount of help has in comparison to that given the Civil War soldier and the soldier of the late war been small and stingy.

I know of men who served honorably in the Spanish-American War who have been for many years confined to their beds and who draw the pitiful sum of $24. I have in mind a man in my district who had his leg cut off at the knee on account of diseases which if not contracted in was greatly augmented in the service, and who now hobbles around at a boy's job and receives $24 per month from the Government. We are not paying the Civil War soldiers in this beggarly manner, and there are plenty of boys in my district who have come out of the late war drawing $80 and $100.

Many of the Spanish-American veterans have arrived at that age in life where their capacity to earn a livelihood for themselves and family has ceased. The opponent of pensions, the man who does not believe in Government aid to soldiers, has always wanted to apply the hard-and-fast rule with all its technicalities and difficulty of proof that all of the disabilities from which the soldier suffers must be traceable directly to the service. I have been criticized here and elsewhere for my liberal view on pensions to soldiers, but I have had no occasion to repent my attitude toward liberalizing pension laws in behalf of men who offered their lives for their country. It is true that there is a limit beyond which we can not go. We must not bankrupt the Nation that they offered their lives to save, but I have always adhered to the doctrine that this Nation is unworthy of its defenders if it lets one of them, who bared his breast to the enemies' bullets, suffer in the hour of his adversity.

This bill before the House to-day, which will be known as the Sells bill, in its main features meets the requirement of a similar bill I introduced when I first came to Congress. It recognizes the obligation of the Government to help a needy and deserving soldier who served in the War with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, and the Chinese relief expedition, regardless of whether his disabilities were incurred in the service or not. It provides that, regardless of how his disabilities originated, he may receive as high as $30, depending upon the degree of inability to earn his support. If he shall have reached the age of 62 years he is entitled to $12 per month, regardless of his disabilities. This is on the theory, gentlemen, that a soldier who has reached that age is probably in no physical condition to earn his support. If he has reached the age of 68 he gets $18 per month. If he has reached the age of 72 he gets $24 per month, and if he has reached the age of 75 he receives $30 per month. No pension less than $12 is granted to any soldier. It may be said that there will be men taking money from the Federal Treasury in this way who are both financially and physically able to support themselves. This has always been one of the problems in writing pension laws. It is difficult to help the needy and at the same time avoid the necessity of paying those who do not require assistance, but for my part, Mr. Speaker, I would rather a dozen undeserving men be paid pensions than that one deserving, needy, helpless soldier be permitted to suffer by reason of the failure of a grateful Government to come to his rescue in his hour of need.

I know it is argued that the financial condition of the country at present is in bad shape, but the few million dollars that are to be spent by virtue of this bill are a bagatelle compared to the tremendous sums lavishly poured out by this generous Nation in less worthy investments. I hope that we will never have another war, and yet I am not idealist enough to believe that we will not have, and when the dark clouds of war are hovering over us it is a fine thing for our happy, prosperous citizens to be able to say, "Every man who goes to war knows that Uncle Sam takes care of his defenders, and the boys are not going to be afraid of making themselves and their loved ones charges upon charity if they go to the front to fight for Old Glory." Taking care of the defenders of this Nation is a good investment, Mr. Speaker, if we look at it from no other angle, but I know that the House of Representatives to-day in passing this bill is looking upon the question with a much broader vision and viewpoint. We are to-day, after undue delay, discharging one of the most solemn duties that a Government owes to the protectors of its flag.

In a speech a few weeks ago on the floor of this House I called attention to the need of this character of legislation. This bill does not entirely meet my hopes in regard to the needed legislation for soldiers, but it is such a splendid and generous step in advance that I shall most heartily support it.

Automatic Insurance for All Service Men from April 6, 1917, to November 11, 1918.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. C. WILLIAM RAMSEYER, OF IOWA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, March 26, 1920.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, this morning, by unanimous consent, I was given leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD on H. R. 11551, a bill which I introduced on January 7, 1920. This is a bill to amend the war-risk insurance act to extend the benefits of automatic insurance to all service men from April 6, 1917, to November 11, 1918. March 1, 1920, I made a statement before a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in support of my bill. The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT OF HON. C. WILLIAM RAMSEYER, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF IOWA.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this bill that I introduced on the 7th of January, this year, involves the same proposition as the amendment which I offered in the Committee of the Whole on September 12 last, when the war-risk insurance bill was up before the House of Representatives for amendment. The bill, H. R. 11551, is section 401 of the war-risk insurance act as amended and as it is now the law, with the elimination of the following language: "* * * and before the expiration of 120 days after October 15, 1917, or 120 days after the entrance into or employment in active service." What I have sought to bring about in the law is this—to state it very briefly—is to give automatic insurance to every enlisted man who did not have contract insurance. Now, when this bill was before the House it contained another provision; down a little farther is this language, "unless he refuses or has refused to apply for insurance." As I explained to the Committee of the Whole at the time I did not seek to eliminate that language, but what I undertook to accomplish at that time was to give every man automatic insurance unless the record showed, or it could be shown, that he had refused to apply for insurance. After I offered my amendment to strike out this 120-day limitation, and it was defeated in the Committee of the Whole by a very close vote, as you gentlemen will remember, an amendment was offered to strike from the bill, "unless he refuses or has refused to apply for insurance," and that amendment carried.

There was no attempt made to reinstate this last language of the bill in the Senate and I do not know what the conferees undertook to do with that. At any rate that language is not now a part of the law, so that the effect of the present law is that we give to every man by retroactive action, every enlisted man, 120 days' insurance, even though it can be shown that he absolutely refused to take out insurance; or even though it can be shown that insurance was offered to him and he said, "No; I do not want to take out any insurance."

After my amendment was offered in the Committee of the Whole, not only was this amendment I refer to giving insurance to men who had absolutely refused to take out insurance, but other amendments were adopted, such as the Williams amendment and the amendment by Mr. IGOE, of St. Louis, which gave automatic insurance to every man who was on the Cyclops that went down. I am not criticizing any of the amendments offered and adopted in the Committee of the Whole, except that I mention them for the purpose of showing that in my opinion, at least, the amendment that I offered was as worthy, if not more worthy, than some of the amendments that were offered and adopted, passed the Senate, passed the House, passed the conferees, and were afterwards adopted by the Senate and the House, and are now the law. At the time I offered this amendment I knew or had heard of a number of cases of men who had died of disease or were killed over in France and no insurance was found, and consequently their dependents or near relatives did not get and are not entitled under the existing law to insurance.

One case that I wish to call to your attention right now—and there are undoubtedly other cases along the same line—of a young man who enlisted early in the war. This war-risk insurance act did not go into effect until October 6, 1917. There was automatic insurance provided for in this act for 120 days after October 15, 1917, and I believe it was afterwards extended for 30 days more; but after that no automatic insurance was in force until after this bill came into effect, and it was made retroactive. As a result of the bill, which became law on the 24th of December, 1919, quite a number of cases that had been rejected by the bureau because the persons had not taken out insurance—their enlistment dated after the time that automatic insurance was no longer in force—but under this act of December 24 last, by this retroactive provision of 120 days, have come in and will now get the automatic insurance. I know in my district of three cases like this—one a young man who went into the S. A. T. C., who was not in there over three or four weeks, but, fortunately for him, he took out $10,000 insurance, payable to his mother; he took the "flu" and died; his mother, of course, gets $57.50 per month. That was toward the close of the war. Another case is where a young man was taken to camp, and for some reason or another he did not apply for insurance. He took the "flu" and died. Under the retroactive provisions of the law passed December 24, 1919—the bill we are discussing—his mother gets the automatic insurance, or $25 per month. Then this case that I have referred to before of the young fellow who went into the Army at the beginning of the war and was taken to France the latter part of the year 1917. He was in the principal engagements with our forces during the summer of 1918, and in September or October, 1918, was killed in action.

We have been unable to find any policy of his. His mother does not get a cent, yet her son was in the fight and fell on the field of honor in France, but under the provisions of the law there can be no payment made to her. Now, this young fellow—the only evidence that we can find that he had insurance or intended to take out insurance is a letter that he wrote home November 16, 1917. He starts out "Dear Mamma, Papa, and Sister"—most of it is characteristically a soldier letter to the folks at home. He ends up the letter like this: "Mamma, I am going to be insured for $10,000, which you will receive if I am killed. Your son and brother." Signed by the soldier boy.

Now, this letter was written November 16, 1917, a little over a month after this war-risk insurance act went into effect. Whether he thought he was insured by the act I do not know, but the folks never wrote him about it, and he never mentioned the subject again. Of course, naturally the parents were not concerned about what insurance they would get if he would die; what they were concerned about was that he would be spared and safely return to them when the war was over and successfully won. In investigating this case in the bureau I accidentally ran across a case like this, of a young man who enlisted March 26, 1918, and died April 9, 1918. He never got out of New York City. Before this act of December 24 last became effective all applications and pleas for insurance to his dependents were turned down, but after this law came into effect the dependents of this young man, by the retroactive provisions of this act, are getting his automatic insurance. I do not complain that the mother of the young man, who was only in the service 11 days and died, gets automatic insurance; but surely this subcommittee must concede that the case I now present is much more meritorious.

I know the policy of the War Risk Insurance Bureau in recommending amendments to the war-risk insurance act has been to anticipate as far as possible all worthy claims of soldiers and their dependents and bind the Government to take care of them by general legislation so that in the future special bills might be avoided. The bureau wants to avoid this system of special pension legislation, which is taken care of by two committees of the House, the Pension Committee and the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I do not know how many cases there are like the one I now present. I thought I had three cases like it and did think so at the time I presented this amendment on the floor of the House, but upon further investigation and in view of this law that was last passed, we found in one case we could get him in under the then existing law, and in the other case the retroactive provision for 120 days took in the second case, but the law as it now stands excludes the case of a man like the one I have just presented to you, who wrote to his parents that he was going to be insured for $10,000, and who soon thereafter went to France and was in the thick of the fight, was killed over there, and was without insurance.

Mr. RAYBURN. How long after?

Mr. RAMSEYER. He went over in December, 1917, or January, 1918.

Mr. RAYBURN. When was he killed?

Mr. RAMSEYER. September or October, 1918.

Mr. RAYBURN. He had six months, the full extension?

Mr. RAMSEYER. I know, if he had died within the time; he had 120 days following the middle of October, I think it is. Then there is one extension. He had all that, certainly, but the fellows who entered the Army and died after automatic insurance was done away with by Congress, some time in March, 1918, and who were without insurance—you took care of them by this retroactive provision of 120 days, even if it can be shown absolutely and positively that he refused to take the insurance. Now, when I argued this amendment to the House in my speech I especially stated that it was only to take care of such fellows or such of the enlisted men who for some reason or other, no fault of their own, did not take out insurance; and I also argued before the Committee of the Whole that if the records showed that they refused insurance they would not be covered by it, but after I made my argument this other amendment was offered, striking out "unless he refuses or has refused to apply for insurance."

So that the men who went in in April or May, 1918—of course, everybody knew about the insurance then—but the man who was in the Army and the man on the outside when the law first passed were not so sure about their rights; but the fellows who went in in April and May, 1918, and died within the 120 days, even though you can show positively that they refused over their signatures, you go back and say here, "We will force insurance on you"; but the man who was in longer and rendered longer service—I will not say more distinguished or greater service, because the man who dies for his country, whether in camp or on the battle field, I know of no way of distinguishing between their services—so far as the record shows did not refuse insurance, but after his death it is shown that he died after the 120 days and had no insurance; that fellow—or, rather, his mother, or wife, if he had one—when it comes to automatic insurance, has received no recognition at all, while the enlisted man, if he dies within the 120 days, he comes in on the insurance, but if it is after the 120 days he gets no recognition. It is a wholly arbitrary time fixed in the act. You know how things go through or fail to go through in the Committee of the Whole; then the Senate did not give it very thorough consideration. You know how they were forced to get this bill through. I hoped to get my amendment thoroughly considered in the Senate also, but had no opportunity. I think that this is a feature of the law that ought to be amended. I do not know how many persons would come in under my proposed amendment. I have no way of ascertaining just how many there are, but the chairman of your committee has promised me that he would ask the director of the bureau to give him the figures, such as he had, as to the number of persons that this amendment would affect.

Mr. SWEET. The record now shows, under the provisions of your bill, that it would cost the Government about $40,000,000. That is the statement made by the director in his evidence before us upon the Wason bill.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes. Do I understand that it is the director's opinion that there are that many persons who died in the service of their country after the 120 days and without insurance?

Mr. SWEET. Yes. As I understand it, the scope of your amendment simply covers all cases of men who died in the service or were totally disabled between the dates of April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918; that is to say, all such persons would be entitled to automatic insurance?

Mr. RAYBURN. In other words, the amendment is this: That every man who entered the Army service from the beginning to the end of the war who did not take insurance and who was killed, his dependents are given $25 per month for 20 years?

Mr. SWEET. Yes; or if he is totally disabled he gets it.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The automatic insurance ended in March, some time in 1918, so that every man from April 6, 1917, to March, 1918, was insured; that is, he had automatic insurance.

Mr. RAYBURN. For 120 days.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes; he had 120 days after October 15, 1917, during which he could take out contract insurance; but in fact he was covered by automatic insurance under the law from April 6, 1917, to March, 1918.

Mr. RAYBURN. He had no opportunity to take it out and we gave him four months?

Mr. RAMSEYER. By this retroactive provision every man that entered the service after March, 1918, had 120 days.

Mr. RAYBURN. In which to take out insurance?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Well, he had 120 days whether he had opportunity or not. Whether he refused or not, if something happened to him within the 120 days he had automatic insurance under the law.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Now, then, this law or this amendment would simply extend the time for automatic insurance as to those who entered the service prior to March, 1918, from the time when automatic insurance stopped, which I think was in March, about the middle of March, 1918, up to the signing of the armistice on November 11, 1918. Now, that is all it does. Let me ask the chairman this question: Did he state how many men would be affected by this?

Mr. SWEET. The director did not state how many men; he simply made an estimate as to what this amendment would cost the Government, stating that according to their estimates it would cost the Government about $40,000,000.

Mr. RAMSEYER. We would have to have the number of men, and I hope the chairman will get, if possible, the number of men who will be thus affected; but if this is a just amendment, I do not care if it costs $100,000,000.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is no consideration.

Mr. RAMSEYER. That is no consideration, if it is proper.

Mr. RAYBURN. If it is fair to the fellows who had insurance for 120 days, then the only reason why automatic insurance was ever spoken of was to give it time to be advertised and show that it was worth something to them besides the added compensation, which was bigger than it had ever been in this or any other country, and to put all men that were killed or totally disabled on a footing with those who had taken out insurance. That is the question.

Mr. RAMSEYER. That is exactly the idea I had when I presented this amendment. As I stated on the floor of the House when I presented my amendment, this language had not been stricken out, "unless he refuses or has refused to apply for insurance"; that it would only cover the men who for various reasons may not have had this matter called to their attention. I know the people had to be educated, but there is not much good reason to extend the 120 days' automatic insurance to the fellows who entered the service in April or May, 1918, because at that time the country was thoroughly educated; but here is a fellow—and there are others, evidently, from what the director says that it will cost the Government—who were in the service at the time this law became effective and who soon thereafter went over to France and who had nothing on their minds except to go over there and to make a good record. As to the efforts to present the insurance to these particular fellows we do not have any information. We do not know and can not find out, except by the general statements of Army officers, as to their general practice in presenting this matter to their men. It seems to me that I am presenting an amendment here that is just. It appeals to me as being much stronger than many of the provisions which were permitted to go in the bill when the matter was under discussion in the House and which were permitted to go through the Senate in the manner in which they did and which the conferees afterwards, in haste, permitted to remain in the bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. If they were in the House bill and the Senate did not change them, the conferees had no authority to change them.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I understand that. The Senate, however, it is my understanding, gave the bill very little consideration, at least on the floor of the Senate, and it was passed in almost no time. We all know it dragged along over there in the Senate and was finally pushed through just before Christmas, because the boys came down here and demanded action on this matter.

I have taken up considerable time of the committee. You understand my attitude in the matter and what I am seeking to accomplish and I am sure you will give this amendment careful consideration. I thank you for giving me this opportunity to present this matter to the subcommittee. It is the first time I have presented it to this subcommittee.

Revenue, Taxation, and the High Cost of Living.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES E. FULLER,

OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, March 30, 1920.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am not a financier. Possibly there will be no dispute as to that proposition after I give expression to what is now on my mind. I have given some thought to conditions as they exist in this country at this time, and have wondered if there was not some remedy whereby relief might be granted by Congress. The old saying so often reiterated by Theodore Roosevelt that "We all go up together or we all go down together" may once have been true. I do not think it is true to-day. I have noticed the reports of some of the great corporations, of many of the manufacturing companies, and of the banks, and it would seem to me from such reports that never in the history of the world has there been such a period of prosperity. Substantially all of them report greatly increased profits and a greatly increased volume of business. I also note from the income-tax returns that in this country many thousands of men have become millionaires within the period since the commencement of the World War. Other thousands upon thousands have very largely increased their wealth within the period of the past few years. All this in face of the fact that the Government's expenditures have been greater than ever before dreamed of, and taxation, especially of great corporations and of men of great wealth, has been on a scale never before thought of. They have been required to pay an income tax, a surtax, an excess-profits tax, and various other presumably burdensome taxes. Many people, and perhaps Congress, seem to have been imbued with the idea that taxes should be, and under the present system are, paid by the wealthy and by those who can best afford to pay.

It occurs to me, and it is my opinion, that this idea is not borne out by the facts. It is my candid opinion that under our present system of taxation the burden is not borne by those who could best afford to pay, but by those who have no possible way of recouping; that is, the ultimate consumer. While all these millionaires, made so by the war and the opportunities created by the war, were accumulating their fortunes the people all over the land were contributing of their means to aid in the successful prosecution of the war. They loaned of their means to the Government, they gave to the Red Cross and to all war-time activities without a thought of profit, while the soulless profiteer was accumulating his great wealth; and now it is the people, the common people, those least able to pay, who, in my opinion, are compelled to pay the taxes of the plutocrats. Let me illustrate: For instance, up in New England there is a great corporation engaged in the manufacture of shoes. I do not name any particular corporation; the illustration will apply to any of them. That corporation knows it will be required to pay an income tax, an excess-profits tax, and so forth. It does not know precisely how much it will be required to pay. What does it do? Just this: It puts a price on its product that will certainly cover that expense, and to make sure it puts on a considerable percentage more than enough to cover it, and thus insure larger profits than ever before. Its product then goes to the jobber or the wholesaler. He, too, is fully advised that he will be required to pay a very large Federal tax. What does he do? Precisely the same as the manufacturer. He puts a price on the shoes that will surely net him enough to pay the tax and liberal dividends besides. He takes no chances; the price is made high enough to cover contingencies. This jobber or wholesaler sells the shoes to the retailer. He, too, knows he is going to be taxed. What does he do? Just the same as the others. He must get a profit large enough to pay the tax, and while he is about it he makes sure of a good profit besides. Now, what is the result? Just this: The ultimate consumer, the man at the foot, he who can not recoup on anyone, pays $10 for a $5 pair of shoes. He pays his own tax, the tax of the retailer, the tax of the wholesaler, and the tax of the manufacturer, and, more than this, he pays the excess profits all along the line. The retailer makes the least of any; but let us see just how it pans out with him. Suppose he formerly did business on a basis of 25 per cent gross profit. On the $5 pair of shoes he made $1.25. When he sells the same pair of shoes for $10 his profits are just doubled and he gets a profit of $2.50 on the same percentage basis. This without profiteering. But the ultimate consumer pays. And, worst of all, the Government gets only the actual tax levied, which would be a very small portion of the extra $5 which the consumer pays for the pair of shoes. What wonder that under such a system of taxation there are those who think there is something wrong with the Government. I wish it were possible to hope that we might again some day get back to the good old times when we used to tell the people in our campaign speeches that "no tax-gatherer of the United States ever comes around to you or to me and asks for money to help run the Government." Until very recent years there was no direct Federal tax. All the expenses of the Government were paid by a tariff duty on imports and an internal-revenue tax.

During that time this country witnessed a period of universal prosperity such as was never before witnessed in all the history of the world. Our system of Federal taxation was, to my mind, ideal. But times have changed. The expenses of the Government have so enormously increased that it would now be impossible to raise all the necessary revenues by the old system. I still think, however, that much more than at present should be raised by a higher tariff. Revenues so raised not only materially reduce the amount necessary to be raised by direct taxation, but they also benefit all of our own people by encouraging production of everything possible at home, and by thus giving employment to our own people. The income tax for the raising of Federal revenues is an innovation of recent years, and it has grown and expanded beyond anything dreamed of when it was first inaugurated. I never did like it. I do not much believe in penalizing thrift and I do not fancy a system that encourages deceit and tax dodging, which I think this system does. As a result of the war and the orgy of reckless and extravagant expenses which accompanied it Federal taxes must be in fabulous figures for at least several years to come. The country is the richest on earth, and can pay all that, with reasonable economy, can be required by the Government in the way of taxes, if they are properly and fairly distributed, so that every person may be required to pay only his or her just share and no more and that no person or corporation shall be permitted to avoid payment of his, her, or its just proportion or to pass the buck to some one else and thus recoup from those who are powerless to prevent. It is my candid opinion that the greatest contributing cause of the present high cost of living is our present system of taxation. And this is so for the reason that the man at the foot, the ultimate consumer, has to pay it all, so that while thousands are made millionaires millions are impoverished and find it very difficult to procure even the ordinary comforts and necessities of life. Notwithstanding the enormous expenses of the Government, yet if such expenses were fairly and evenly distributed it would not be difficult to raise the necessary amount, nor any very great hardship on anyone to pay his proper share. I will tell you what I would do if I had the power and the precise remedy I would suggest. Financial experts may not agree with me, but I feel that the remedy is very simple and easy, and that if applied we might soon get back to something like normal conditions and that the prevalent unrest among the people would soon disappear. If this contention is true, the remedy is worth at least very careful consideration and a fair trial. I would wipe the slate clean. Except as to tariff and internal revenue, I would repeal all the existing revenue laws, all the present unequal, unjust, and burdensome income tax, surtax, and excess-profits taxes, and I would substitute a flat tax on all sales of every name and kind. I have no way of estimating what such a tax at any given percentage would produce, but I have seen an estimate of $500,000,000,000 as the amount of one year's sales. If that is correct, a tax of only 1 per cent would produce

$5,000,000,000 annually, which would be ample to pay all the Government's expenses and very soon reduce and wipe out the national debt. Let us see how such a tax would operate. Every man would pay his just share and no more. On the $5 pair of shoes he would pay a tax of only 5 cents, instead of $5 as at present. Under such a system of taxation there would be no excuse for the profiteer to materially add to the cost of the product. Every person would pay only the tax on the amount of what he or she purchased and every other person would be required to do the same, and the Government would get the full amount so paid. It would be absolutely fair and I believe the fairest and best system for direct taxation that could possibly be devised.

There is no gainsaying the fact that under our present system the tax which wealth is supposed to pay is passed along to those who can least afford to pay; that much more than the actual amount of the tax is thus passed along in order to swell the profits of those whose excess profits are intended to be taxed; that this is a very great contributing cause of the present abnormally high cost of living; and that this very real injustice is the direct cause of the regrettable unrest prevailing throughout the country. We, as the people's representatives, can not act too soon to remedy the evils mentioned.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN W. SUMMERS,

OF WASHINGTON,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, March 31, 1920.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, under permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert a letter to a constituent on the work of this Congress and my observations, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., March 30, 1920.

Sergt. JOHN H. NEWMAN,
Colfax, Wash.

MY DEAR CONSTITUENT: While professional speech makers and "grand standers" have afflicted, hindered, and delayed both Houses of Congress, we have remained on the job, early and late, and old Members of Congress, who have served continuously for 20, 30, or even 40 years, say no American Congress has ever before accomplished so much in the same length of time as has this present Congress. I think a brief review of this work may be of interest to you.

The lavish expenditure of public funds by the present administration and the joy riding with the people's money is a humiliating and astounding revelation, which I am sorry to have to record, but I shall quote only from the printed records. The half will never be told. It surpasses all understanding and staggers the imagination.

The records show that, with the exception of two years at the close of the Civil War, this country never spent a billion dollars in any one year. But immediately upon the incoming of the present administration appropriations rapidly mounted to more than a billion a year in 1914, 1915, and 1916, before we were in the war, and during which time no preparation for the war was being made. In 1918 they went up to the staggering total of $22,000,000,000, and to eighteen billions for the year ending July 1, 1919. (This includes the printing of more than 30,000,000 speeches by the President's official family, at a cost of $442,000. The cost of the million copies of one speech printed for W. G. McAdoo is also included.) These figures are almost beyond comprehension.

In so far as this vast expenditure was necessary in winning the war, no true American for one moment regrets the spending of one cent of it. But to the reckless waste, extravagance, favoritism, and profiteering we do object.

"The worst orgy of profiteering from which the country has thus far suffered" (Literary Digest, Jan. 10) came about in this way: The United States Sugar Equalization Board repeatedly asked consent of the President to purchase for the United States the last Cuban sugar crop at 6½ cents a pound. His consent was not given, but 60 days later Attorney General Palmer agreed on a price with the Louisiana sugar growers of 17 cents and 18 cents per pound. (If your family eats sugar, this may interest them.)

The records show $1,191,182,850 was expended during the war for heavy artillery, but Gen. Pershing testifies that only "133 heavy American guns were in use at the front when the armistice was signed."

Meanwhile $1,031,000,000 was spent on aircraft, but again Gen. Pershing says: "In aviation we were entirely dependent upon our allies."

We had in the Army 391,000 horses and mules, but a lavish spender purchased 945,000 saddles, a million sets of double harness, and 2,850,853 halters. In other words, he would put two saddles, five sets of harness, and seven halters on every animal. In fact, the leather goods ordered by the War Department for all purposes would have required 300,000 more hides than were produced in the United States. This is interesting when we consider the present price of shoes.

But what has this Republican Congress been able to do so far along the lines of economy?

We found awaiting us last May when we met in special session numerous estimates and appropriation bills for the operation of the various departments of the Government. These were not war estimates. They were submitted five months after the war ended. We cut those estimates more than a billion six hundred million dollars. We lopped off $40,000,000 daily during the first 40 days we were in session. In other words, we saved on an average almost $15 for every man, woman, and child in the United States.

The present session is cutting to the bone and hopes to make an additional saving of more than a billion dollars before it adjourns. This session undoubtedly will save on an average $10 for every man, woman, and child in the country. Let me illustrate how this is done:

One department insisted on an appropriation of $45,000,000 for a certain work. Under pressure that same department cut its own estimate to thirty-seven millions and later to thirty-three millions, and later to twenty-five millions. When the congressional committee had fully considered the necessity of the case, they brought before Congress a bill for seventeen millions and this bill was passed.

The rivers and harbors bill was cut from forty-two millions to twelve millions. The Army bill was cut four hundred and sixty-eight millions. The sundry civil bill was cut two hundred and forty-six millions, and so on down the line.

To sum up our economy program during the past 10 months we have cut the estimates submitted during that time by President Wilson's Cabinet officers enough to make 30 chains of silver dollars extending from New York to Seattle. (This may also interest your neighbor.)

To put this sort of an economy program into effect over the protest of the present administration and the opposition party is no easy task, but in standing steadfastly for this economy program against any and all pressure in Congress and out of Congress, I believe that a Congressman rightly represents his constituents, and I am sure he acts in the interest of his country. Without a sane, sound, business administration of the affairs of Government, national disaster threatens.

Now let me refer briefly to a few—and space permits me to mention only a few—of the reconstruction measures passed by this Congress.

The coal, oil, and gas leasing law is of prime importance to the West. It opens our great natural resources under conditions entirely safeguarding State and Federal rights and at the same time adding to our State road and school funds and placing $5,000,000 or more annually into the reclamation fund.

The water-power bill, which has passed both Houses and is now in conference, will ultimately mean for the State of Washington "water power for factories and cheap electricity in every home and on every farm for light, power, and fuel."

Among the scores of other bills I might mention the following:

Legislation to facilitate the marketing of agricultural products, including live stock, by increasing the amount which banks may loan on paper secured by such commodities.

Amendment to the Federal reserve act to enable national banks to assist in the facilitation of export trade.

Legislation making more stringent the restrictions and prohibitions surrounding the entry of undesirable aliens.

Extension of law providing for stock-raising homesteads.

Repeal of the daylight-saving law.

A prohibition enforcement act.

Railroad bill: A complete and comprehensive measure for the return of the railroads to their owners and for effective and extended public control over the same, with no money guaranty from the Government after August 31, 1920.

The enactment of liberal provisions for vocational training and rehabilitation of wounded soldiers and sailors and generous appropriations for the same.

A war-risk insurance act vastly increasing the allowance to seriously injured soldiers and sailors.

The woman's suffrage amendment.

Forty thousand Government employees in Washington, D. C., are being removed from the pay rolls.

Personally, my ambition has been to stand at all times for the best type of legislation, and it is gratifying to observe that of the eight planks of my reconstruction platform, which was published in every paper in east Washington during the summer of 1918, seven of these planks have been covered by laws enacted by this Congress.

While it has required from 10 to 14 hours' time daily, it has been a pleasure to impartially serve all the people of the district which I have the honor to represent, without any consideration of party, class, or station in life. The door to this office is always open, and getting results by cutting red tape is my speciality.

I want you to accept this as a very personal letter, and shall be pleased to hear from you.

With kindest personal regards and best wishes always, I am,

Very cordially,

McFadden Bill Will Aid Agriculture and Prevent Panics.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HOMER P. SNYDER,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, March 31, 1920.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, the McFadden rural credit bill, H. R. 12678, will aid agriculture by reducing farm-production costs and tend greatly to prevent panics by creating liquid paper for our insurance companies and thereby relieve them from throwing their permanent investments on the market during a crisis to meet their banking obligations.

A quarter of a century ago obligations of our life insurance companies were deferred for years in the future and payable upon a contingency—the death of their members—which operated with a uniformity approaching the fixed law of gravity. Massachusetts was the first State to enact a so-called "cash-surrender value policy law," a law requiring the companies created by that State and others operating therein to issue policies giving an option to the insured to surrender their policies for cash. That law was enacted in 1880, and Maine soon thereafter enacted the same law, but such important insurance States as New York, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, and New Jersey declined to follow those two States in that matter, and the big companies, while forced to obey that law in those two jurisdictions, refused to apply it in other States in which they did business.

It was not until the year 1896 that the "yearly guaranteed cash surrender value policy" became universal throughout the United States. In the summer of 1895 the Equitable of New York announced its intention to adopt such policy throughout the world in which it operated at that time, and it put its actuaries to work compiling data and making calculations for the issuance of such policy. The insurance press, from time to time, made mention of the Equitable's progress on the proposed new policy, until in the spring of 1896, when the New York Life announced it had actually placed in the hands of its agents sample policies and rate books containing all information as to the new policy. The Equitable then publicly charged the New York Life with having surreptitiously gotten possession of the data and calculations its actuaries had been laboring on for more than six months. It was but a few days until the Equitable placed sample policies and rate books in the hands of its agents, and when we consider that those rate books contained some 50,000 different calculations and were identical, one must conclude the two companies had access to the same data.

The New York Life ignored the charge of bad faith made against it by the Equitable and directed its energies to the sale of the new policy, which took like wildfire. Some of the more conservative men in control of the other companies condemned the new policy in unmeasured terms and made dire predictions as to the injurious effect it would have on the business, and refused to issue the policy. It may be of interest to observe that at that time there was in control of those two companies two most forceful characters, men possessed of great driving power and organizing ability, whose activities had been directed solely to the production of new business, and they produced it in such volume as to astound the insurance world of that day. One of those men was Henry B. Hyde, the founder of the Equitable, and the other was George W. Perkins, a young westerner who had so demonstrated his ability as a producer of new business for the New York Life that he was called to the home office and placed at the head of its agency department, a position he occupied but a short while until he became the dominant factor in control of the company. Neither was an economist; in fact, both were too busy at the production end to give any thought to the economic principles underlying that business, yet they are the men who are responsible for placing our life insurance companies in the banking business. The more conservative men had to swallow their pride and fall into line or else lose out in the mad race for new business. During the commercial and industrial inactivities of 1913 the demands for cash under the "cash surrender value policies" became so great that the Association of Life Insurance Presidents, an association composed of the presidents of all the large companies, issued an appeal to their policyholders through the press of January 18, 1914, urging them to desist in their applications for cash values.

So much for the history of the so-called "cash-surrender value policy" which put life insurance in the banking business. As Members of Congress we have no authority to legislate as to what this or that corporation created by the States shall do or refrain from doing. But we know that any corporation which assumes a banking obligation must cover its borrowed capital with liquid assets, assets representing production, and unless it does so it will be forced to throw its permanent investments on the market during a crisis and thus precipitate a panic. While we have no power to prohibit those companies from writing such policy, we do possess the power to create fiscal agents for the Federal Government which in turn can create a form of liquid assets which will meet the banking obligations of those State institutions, and public sentiment, the best of all laws, will force those companies to carry such paper as will maintain their solvency. I therefore heartily approve the McFadden rural credit bill, which will not only aid in the production of agriculture but will become an important factor in improving our whole credit system.

I am in receipt of a letter from Mr. R. M. Gow, secretary of the American Jersey Cattle Club, inclosing a copy of his letter to the Hon. Edwin T. Meredith, Secretary of Agriculture, indorsing the McFadden bill. Mr. Gow came to this country from Scotland when a lad, and soon after his arrival became associated with that cattle club, and by patient industry and devotion to its interests he was rewarded with its secretaryship, a position he has filled for 31 years. He possesses the trait of mastering the details of an intricate financial problem so characteristic of his countrymen that I ask to have his letter read. It follows:

THE AMERICAN JERSEY CATTLE CLUB,
R. M. GOW, SECRETARY,
324 West Twenty-third Street, New York City, March 10, 1920.

Hon. EDWIN T. MEREDITH,
Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Congressman LOUIS T. MCFADDEN has requested my attention to his bill to establish a system of rural credits, known as H. R. 12678. I have read the bill and also Mr. MCFADDEN'S speech in the House of Representatives.

It seems to me that this bill is designed to meet a real want of the rural industries in the United States, and as I believe that the welfare, contentment, and general prosperity of our rural population is of vital importance to the country I think the bill should receive very careful and favorable consideration, with a view to its ultimate passage. As a similar system of personal credits has been found very useful and very successful in various European countries, I see no reason why it should not be put in operation in this country with equally beneficial results.

I hope that upon examination of this bill, if, indeed, you have not already considered it, you will share these views, and that you will use the influence of your high office in bringing the bill up for early consideration by Congress and enlisting cooperation in this by all the means at your disposal through the Department of Agriculture.

Very truly, yours,

R. M. GOW.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN Q. TILSON,

OF CONNECTICUT,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 1, 1920.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, when the Nolan bill for the relief of the present intolerable condition at the Patent Office was heard before the Committee on Patents, I appeared in favor of it. Again, when a special rule was requested in order to secure early consideration in the House, I appeared and urged it. On account of a previous engagement, I was necessarily absent when the bill was finally considered in the House, and therefore was deprived of the privilege of expressing myself on the subject matter of this bill. For this reason I have asked permission on this occasion to make a brief statement on the subject.

The State of Connecticut, which I have the honor to represent in part, has always had a very deep interest in the United States Patent Office. Connecticut has many and varied interests, but none more important or more diversified than her manufacturing industries. Patented processes and inventions are used very extensively in all of these industries. Probably no other State of the Union, in proportion to its population, has to its credit so many useful inventions. It is therefore quite natural that the people of Connecticut should feel a special interest in the Patent Office and a deep concern over anything calculated to reduce or destroy its efficiency.

For a long time I have been receiving numerous appeals for assistance in the efforts of my people to get action by the Patent Office upon urgent matters. During the last two or three years these appeals have been increasing in number and in earnestness. I have always found the officials of the Patent Office willing to cooperate, but increasingly less able apparently to do so effectively. Looking about for the cause of this somewhat rapidly diminishing efficiency, even a casual investigation was sufficient to reveal the principal difficulty. During normal times prior to the outbreak of the war in Europe a sufficient number of efficient employees remained in the Patent Office force, either on account of love of the work or to gain a thorough knowledge of it, to enable the organization to function properly. With our entry into the war the outside demand for such men became too great and the inducements offered too attractive to be easily resisted. Consequently many of the best men have been enticed away, while the inducements, if such they may be called, to enter the service are not such as to strongly attract the best type of young men to take their places. In the effort to fill the gap, the bars are inevitably let down to some extent, and the efficiency of the force is necessarily impaired. As a result the work of the Patent Office has suffered in a twofold way, by a falling off in the quality as well as in number of the personnel.

Conditions have long since reached the stage where not only the inventor and the manufacturer who develop and use the invention are being denied the service to which they are properly entitled, but legitimate industry generally is being delayed and seriously hampered at a time when of all times every needless restriction should be removed and every proper encouragement given.

The Nolan bill seeks in a very moderate and conservative way to relieve an unfortunate situation which has been developing gradually for more than 50 years, but which the last 5 years have rapidly brought to a head. The basic cause of this somewhat abnormal development has been the failure to recognize the character of the work done by the Patent Office. It requires in large measure the services of experts and not mere clerks, whereas the important employees of this service have been regarded and paid as ordinary clerks. They were not so regarded or so paid in the earlier history of the Patent Office. Exclusive of the $240 bonus, the salaries of examiners are now about 10 per cent above what they were in 1848.

To show the importance formerly attached to the work these men do, it can be said that at the time their salaries were fixed the principal examiner's salary was equal to the salary of a Member of Congress, and the salary of an examiner in chief was equal to that of a Federal district judge. It is not difficult to understand why these important positions, requiring training of a highly expert character, are not much sought after when the highest salary that can be reasonably hoped for by a competent man at the zenith of his efficiency is $2,700 per year.

This bill will help the situation somewhat and therefore should become law just as soon as possible. I doubt if it fully meets the situation and there may be necessity for further increases in grades and salaries. If so, we should not hesitate to authorize the increases. Inventors and users of patented inventions have always paid the entire expense of running the Patent Office and are willing to continue doing so, provided that they can have quick and efficient service. They are entitled to such service, but during the last few years they have not had it.

The importance of the United States patent system and its place in the industrial development of the country are not generally understood or appreciated. It is not accidental that the people of the United States lead the world in making and developing useful inventions and discoveries. It may be gratifying to our national pride to account for this by crediting ourselves as a people with a certain degree of mental superiority along practical business lines. It would probably be nearer the correct explanation to give credit for most of it to the excellence of our patent system.

As direct descendants of the peoples of Europe, it would probably be difficult to establish the thesis that we have natural inventiveness superior to theirs. We have natural resources, and so have they, but we have excelled in inventions by which to develop and utilize these resources. We did not excel until after we had established our patent system. It supplied the incentive that has called forth the ability to invent. In my judgment no other single factor has been so potent in the phenomenal industrial development of this country. If we allow this system to become inefficient in its application, to that extent we take away or weaken the incentive to invention, which would in its turn affect injuriously our entire industrial life.

I have received many letters and statements from inventors, from manufacturers using patented inventions, and from patent attorneys which make plain the present situation at the Patent Office and the sentiments concerning it of those who come most frequently in direct contact with that office. I should be glad to insert a number of these here, but shall refrain owing to their considerable numbers, except as to one letter received from a personal friend and neighbor of mine who for a great number of years has stood in the very front rank of patent attorneys. His summing up of the case is so strong and comprehensive that I am glad to have it serve as a conclusion for my remarks.

The letter is as follows:

NEW HAVEN, CONN., February 18, 1920.

Hon. JOHN Q. TILSON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. TILSON: For something over 40 years I have constantly done business with the United States Patent Office. During this long period, as a practitioner, I have known the officials of the Patent Office, from the commissioner down, and have been familiar with the work of the office in all of its departments; and, having represented before the Patent Office inventors in a great variety of fields, I have been able to see the stimulating and stabilizing effects of patents upon all manufacturing business dependent in any way upon patent protection.

I therefore feel that I am in a position to speak with some authority on the importance to the country at large of the patent legislation now pending before Congress, and in particular the importance of the passage of the bill presented in the House by Mr. Nolan, the chairman of the Committee on Patents, and providing for substantial increases in the Patent Office budget.

Congress is already tired of this subject, no doubt; but tired or not, the despotism of the fact can not be escaped. The efficiency of the Patent Office as an instrument for the encouragement and the protection of American inventors and manufacturers has already been seriously impaired, and the quality of the work which the Patent Office has been doing has begun to deteriorate.

It has long been a matter of gratification among friends of the Patent Office that its standards of work have, under adverse conditions, been maintained at such a high pitch, especially considering the salaries paid the examiners, for it is to be remembered, and particularly emphasized, that the work of the Patent Office is not clerical in its character, but scientific, and requires a personnel of carefully educated men in the fields of the applied sciences and the useful arts. It has always been a mystery to me that the commissioner has been able with the meager salaries at his disposal to attract and to hold as examiners men of the education, ability, and character that have characterized the examining corps in years past.

But the time has passed when the commissioner can maintain an effective examining corps at the present salaries fixed by Congress. The examiners have been resigning within the last four years at a disastrous rate and the commissioner has been unable to fill their places by new men of anything like their educational qualifications. To meet the exigency the Civil Service Board has somewhat let down the bars in the matter of examinations and in one way or another male and female clerks wanting the educational qualifications have been allowed to take the places of those that have retired.

I do not wish to deny to women a participation in business and professional life, but it seems to be the consensus of opinion that women are not qualified to pass upon the particular set of questions which arise in connection with the work of a Patent Office examiner. As examiners their duties are comparative and judicial, and as mechanicians, physicists, and chemists they have so far failed to meet the requirements.

Though overburdened, the Patent Office managed to carry on its business so as to serve the public fairly well until 1918, when the overburdened machine began to slow down and fail to function. Since that time the Patent Office has been increasingly falling behind. Some 28,000 cases are now awaiting action. It has also fallen behind in the matter of furnishing printed copies of patents, in the matter of manuscript copies and digests, and in furnishing abstracts of titles from the assignment records.

To a layman these may seem mere matters of business inconvenience, but to the business man they are matters of the gravest importance. The inventor, the manufacturer, the investor, can not safely proceed without a knowledge of his rights, which can not be determined without his ability to examine patents in force; and, practically, these can be examined only as the Patent Office furnishes copies. In the same way the business man is constantly called upon to ascertain where the titles to patent property lie, and this information the Patent Office often can not promptly furnish, since the recording of assignments is months in arrears.

The situation above briefly outlined constitutes a serious menace to business wherever predicated upon patent rights. It is nothing less than a tragedy that with a balance in the United States Treasury of several millions to the credit of American inventors Congress has heretofore failed to come to the relief of the Patent Office.

Now that the Government has adopted the policy of imposing heavier taxes upon the profits of manufacturing concerns it becomes more than ever important to the Government to encourage manufacturing and to stabilize it. The Patent Office has been the greatest single instrument for the encouragement and stabilization of American industry in the past, and every dictate of common sense urges Congress at the present time to come to the relief of the Patent Office by passing Mr. NOLAN'S bill. Certainly it would seem to be a matter of simplest justice to authorize the expenditure for carrying on the work of the Patent Office of the money of American inventors, which is held in trust to-day by the Treasury Department.

I am sure that I have written nothing to which any of my professional colleagues would not subscribe. I hope that you will champion the cause of the American inventor and the Patent Office before Congress. If the average Congressman could really be made to see how vitally American industries depend upon the Patent Office for their protection I am sure that he would give the matter such attention as would lead him to vote in favor of pending patent legislation.

Respectfully,

GEO. DUDLEY SEYMOUR.

The Bonus Question—In Lieu of Bonus, Why Not Return the War-Risk Premiums and Allotments?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, March 31, 1920.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, the bill H. R. 13333, which I introduced on the 29th instant, provides for the return to the members of the United States forces, of every arm, serving during the World War, of the premiums deducted from their pay for war-risk insurance and the refunding of all allotments deducted from the pay of the enlisted personnel for their dependents.

It is offered to your consideration as a compromise measure, as a way out of a most perplexing problem. It returns to those who served their country honorably that to which they are justly entitled and restores to them and their families what, in my opinion, was unjustly taken away from them.

GOVERNMENT SHOULD BEAR THE COST OF INSURANCE.

I submit to your careful consideration the thought that in insuring the soldiers and sailors the Government was insuring its own human assets. Of course, the men were of insurable value to their dependents; but they were of greater insurable value to the Government. Otherwise they would not have been taken from their families to fight the battles of the entire people. It was therefore the duty of the Government to assume the burden of carrying that insurance, as much so as it was its duty to bear the cost of insuring its ships. If the soldier was killed in action, it is true, his family would have lost a wage earner; but the Government would have lost an asset even more valuable. To require the soldiers and sailors and their families to bear the burden of the premiums was wholly unjust and inequitable. The men should have received their $30 a month without deduction or abatement. And the same is true of their allotments.

GOVERNMENT SHOULD RETURN ALLOTMENTS.

No allotments should have been charged against the pay of the men, and the allowances based on the men's allotments should have been the voluntary contribution of a grateful country for their sacrifices.

The attitude of the Government toward the enlisted personnel of our Army and Navy was picayunish. It required the soldier to assume the risk of his calling, a risk which should have been assumed by the Government. It can not be corrected by making the men a present of a bonus. It can only be corrected by returning to them the money unjustly taken out of their meager salaries. If Congress will only take this stand, it need not run the risk of humiliating them by the inevitable suggestion that they are the recipients of a bounty, a bonus, or gratuity—terms which are inherently offensive to all true Americans. Our maxim should be, "Be just before you are generous."

WAR-RISK INSURANCE A FAILURE.

The war-risk insurance idea was not only founded upon an error in principle, but all the complications, confusion, and red tape that followed were only the natural result of putting the soldier, serving his country for a mere pittance, in the same category as a well-paid civil employee. To introduce a complicated system of bookkeeping requiring records to be made on company pay rolls of deductions for war-risk insurance, as well as allotments, invited confusion and necessitated accounting and clerical work that was almost impossible to perform while the regiments were in the field or in action. There is not a Member of Congress whose time has not been taken up in adjusting and straightening out the innumerable errors which have inevitably crept into so awkward and impossible a system.

And the labor is not done when the pay rolls are made out. All of the work has to be reviewed and gone over again when a soldier dies. Photostat copies of all the pay rolls are made, if extant, and the name of the deceased soldier followed down from month to month and all payments verified. The War Risk Insurance Bureau, notwithstanding the large force at its disposal, has not force enough and never could have force enough to keep up-to-date records of every soldier, sailor, and marine, as it ought to have. It should be required to halt where it is, make complete records of the standing of each soldier, sailor, and marine, and the Government should return to the men and their families all of the premiums so exacted.

WHAT IT WILL COST.

The following policies or certificates of war-risk insurance were in force March 29, 1920:

Army	3,846,008
Navy	489,179
Marines	71,664
Coast Guard	6,618
Nurses (female)	17,112
Public health	49
Total	4,430,630

The average service was eight months, and the average premium was about $5, or $40 for each beneficiary for the average service. The return of the premiums would therefore entail an expense of $177,225,200.

It is approximated that 4,200,000 of the enlisted personnel made allotments. Figuring the average allotment at $15 and the average service as eight months, the amount due each beneficiary of this act will be $120. The total amount of allotments to be returned will therefore be $480,000,000.

Summarizing, the cost of returning insurance premiums will be	$177,225,200
The cost of returning allotments	480,000,000
Total cost entailed by this act	657,225,200

HOW THE MONEY WILL BE RAISED.

The bill provides that the money requisite to carry out the act may be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and by the issuance of certificates of indebtedness bearing interest at 4½ per cent per annum, which can be met by small appropriations running over a term of years. The obstacle thrown in the way of those suggesting this relief is thereby removed and your committee is relieved of the unwelcome burden of providing for bond issues with their inevitable increase of taxation.

FUTURE LAND LEGISLATION FOR SOLDIERS.

If Congress sees fit in the future to provide land or homes or borrowing facilities for soldiers it is thus relieved of the task of deducting from the grant or gratuity or loan the amounts which the payment of a bonus would necessarily entail, for it would obviously be unjust to grant a bonus to all and land grants and gratuities to others without deducting the amount of the bonus received. The great bulk of the soldiers will prefer money in hand to land in the West, but all equally should have the right to avail themselves of land opportunities without deductions or, on the other hand, without gaining a greater advantage than their brothers who elect only to receive cash. This bill puts them all on the same basis.

FURTHER EQUITABLE FEATURES.

In returning the war-risk insurance premiums and allotments you are rewarding the thoughtful, considerate soldier who was solicitous for the welfare of his family. The selfish, indifferent soldier, who took no thought of his dependents, but spent all his pay for his own gratification, would not be helped by this bill, and it is not the intention that he should be. He has reveled in frivolity while his comrades made personal sacrifices. He has had his cake and has eaten it.

National Highways.

As befits the nature of this indissoluble Union of sovereign States our road system will be in the highest sense a better State system as it becomes a better connected and coordinated national system, and it will be a better national system as it becomes a more equitable and economical State system.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM N. VAILE,

OF COLORADO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, March 18, 1920.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, it is my purpose to show that our present scheme of highway construction and maintenance, known as the Federal aid plan, while possessing many good features, is defective in its underlying theory, and is wasteful, and that the time is ripe for the adoption of the better, more logical, and more effective plan proposed by the Townsend bill (S. 3572), to establish a Federal highway commission, to encourage efficient and economical highway transportation, and for other purposes, subject, however, to some alterations of the latter plan in justice to the "public-land States."

STATEMENT OF THE "FEDERAL AID" PLAN.

The "Federal aid plan" was embodied in what was known as the Shackleford Act, passed by the Sixty-fourth Congress, approved July 11, 1916. It was heralded as a great constructive measure. It was believed that it would cause the development of a system of national highways which would not only contribute greatly to the Nation's postal facilities and to its general highway traffic, rapidly increasing with the phenomenal development of the commercial motor truck, but that it would soon cause the construction of a network of roads, most useful for the national defense. This act appropriated the sum of $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and an amount greater by $5,000,000, for each succeeding year until for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, the sum of $25,000,000 was appropriated, the total amount for the three-year period to be expended outside of forest reserves being $75,000,000.

This act appropriated $10,000,000 for forest reserve roads to be expended at the rate of $1,000,000 per year for 10 years. The Sixty-fifth Congress amended the Shackleford Act so as to make its administration somewhat more liberal to the States and greatly increased the amounts appropriated. Concerning the acts of 1916 and 1919, I desire first to call attention to the following features:

(1) The money appropriated is to be used for new construction, which, however, is defined by the act of 1916 to include reconstruction and improvement.

(2) The Federal Government pays half of the expense of such construction, the other half being paid by the States.

(3) The work is done under the supervision of the highway departments of the several States where the roads are constructed.

(4) The State obligates itself to keep "properly maintained" the roads so constructed, "properly maintained" being defined to mean "the making of needed repairs and the preservation of a reasonably smooth surface, considering the type of road," but not "extraordinary repairs or reconstruction."

THE "LOUISVILLE RESOLUTIONS."

With the approaching termination of the period covered by these appropriations the Western States have been considering the continuance of this Federal aid, and recently a large delegation came to Washington on that matter. This visit was the result of a convention of State highway officials held at Louisville, Ky., in December, 1919. That convention passed a set of resolutions urging the continuance of these appropriations on an enlarged scale and some changes in the apportionment of the funds so that the public-land States should have a more equitable share, based on the nontaxable status of public lands and the permanent withdrawal of forest reserves from taxation and settlement.

These resolutions, however, contemplated the continuance of the basic ideas of the Federal aid plan.

After the Louisville convention, Gov. Olcott, of Oregon, took it upon himself to ask the 12 western public-land States to send a delegation to Washington to urge the adoption of legislation along the line of the resolutions, and these States did send delegates, some 30 in number, who were in session here in Washington, February 10, 11, and 12, 1920, and appeared before the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads on the 14th. They urged an appropriation of $300,000,000 for the continuance of Federal aid for three years on the original plan, but with the changes last suggested and not tying the plan, necessarily, to the Department of Agriculture, together with an additional $100,000,000 especially for roads and trails in the national forests, to be expended at the rate of $10,000,000 per year.

The amounts appropriated under the original and amended law—approved February 28, 1919—may be tabulated as follows, adding to the table some supplementary figures as now proposed by the advocates of a continuation of the Federal aid plan at the meeting at Washington by resolutions to which I shall hereafter, for convenience, refer to as the "Louisville resolutions."

In the following table, which is condensed in order to present it within the space of a column of the RECORD, the column "Year" indicates the fiscal year ending June 30 of the year indicated; the columns under the dates "July 11, 1916," and "February 28, 1919," indicate the appropriations expendable under the acts approved on those dates; the columns "General" represent the general appropriations for post roads, and the columns "Forest reserve" indicate the appropriations for roads and trails in the forest reserves. The appropriations urged by the Louisville resolutions are similarly indicated, the figures in each column representing millions.

Year.	July 11, 1916.		Feb. 28, 1919.		Louisville resolutions.		Total.
	General.	Forest reserve.	General.	Forest reserve.	General.	Forest reserve.
1917	5	1					6
1918	10	1					11
1919	15	1	50	3			69
1920	20	1	75	3			99
1921	25	1	75	3			104
1922		1			100	10	111
1923		1			100	10	111
1924		1			100	10	111
1925		1				10	11
1926		1				10	11
1927						10	10
1928						10	10
1929						10	10
1931						10	10

It will be seen by examination of the foregoing table that the total amount of the appropriations expended and expendable for the three years closing June 30, 1920, is one hundred and eighty-five millions, and that the total amount appropriated by existing laws is two hundred and eighty-nine millions. It will also be observed that the history of legislation under this plan is that when one appropriation nears its end another, very much larger, is immediately proposed.

INCREASING COST OF "FEDERAL AID."

Inasmuch as these appropriations are all for the purpose of construction or reconstruction, and not for repair or maintenance, the States assuming the obligation for the latter, it would seem that if the principle of the law is sound the amounts necessary to appropriate for these purposes would diminish rather than increase as roads become constructed during the passage of the years.

Judging, however, from our experience so far, we may anticipate that if we continue the Federal aid plan and incorporate the suggestions of the Louisville resolutions into law, we shall, in 1924, or probably in 1923, be asked to make appropriations of at least one hundred and fifty millions per annum for general post-road construction and at least fifteen millions annually for roads in the forest reserves.

As to the latter, I do not expect any great and early decrease, no matter what our policy of road construction and maintenance may be in the future. Without being understood as in any way criticizing the very necessary policy of conserving our forests, it may be not inappropriate to suggest that the retention of a vast Federal domain in the midst of rapidly growing communities is bound in the very nature of things to be a continuing expense, and though we ought some time to end the period of original road construction, the expense of administration will doubtless be reflected here as elsewhere in the preservation and development of the forests as a national asset. Where vast tracts of land are permanently reserved from occupation they form a territory through which new roads will constantly have to be built as towns and cities approach nearer to and become more numerous upon their borders. And, as the terrain of the forest reserves is rugged and mountainous, road building there is of the most expensive kind. But outside of the forest reserves, while we can not expect the need for new construction to cease, there ought to be some stage of development when it would tend to diminish so that expenditure for this purpose, as distinguished from repair and maintenance, would be less instead of greater than theretofore.

Without denying that the Shackleford bill was productive of some benefits, and heartily approving the more liberal provisions of apportionment contemplated by the Louisville plan and the spirit which animated the originators of that plan, I am convinced that the present system is not productive of the benefits expected, either to the Federal Government or to the States, and that better results to both can be accomplished with small appropriations on the different and, in my judgment, far superior plan presented by the Townsend bill.

In support of this view it is my purpose to give here a brief résumé of the working of the Federal aid plan in some of the Western States, with particular reference to my own State of Colorado, which will perhaps serve as a fair example of all of the public-land States, since it contains neither the greatest nor the smallest amount of public land still available for entry, neither the greatest nor the smallest amount of permanently withdrawn lands in the forest reserves, but a very large amount of both kinds of public lands, and since its surface consists partly of level plain and partly of high and rugged mountains.

"FEDERAL AID" A HINDRANCE TO DEVELOPMENT.

In at least two principal respects the present plan of Federal aid road construction has proved not conducive to the best interests of the State or the Nation.

(1) The requirement of equal appropriations by the States for the construction of post roads prevents the proper maintenance of other State roads and the development of tributary roads.

As already noted, the Federal aid acts require that each State which accepts any part of the Government appropriations which may be allotted to it under the scheme of allotments prescribed shall appropriate an equal amount to be expended in construction as above defined.

The State of Colorado will receive during the calendar year 1920 the sum of $2,075,000 from all sources for its road fund for that calendar year. There are in Colorado approximately 7,000 miles of primary State roads and 32,000 miles of secondary highways, which do not and can not participate in these Federal appropriations, with the exception of 882 miles. The Federal appropriations may be expended only on post roads; that is to say, on roads over which the mails are now or may be hereafter transported.

The mileage and kinds of roads already approved in Colorado and which are now being considered for approval are as follows:

TABLE II.—Mileage and classification of Federal aid projects in Colorado.

	Earth.	Concrete.	Sand.	Miscellaneous and undetermined.	Total.
1918	9	4	64	3	80
1919	19			21	40

Of the 882 miles which might come within the scope of the Federal aid plan there are, therefore, 656 miles yet to be approved. But not only the 127 miles but the remaining 656 miles are scattered widely through the State and the different projects have little or no relation to each other. They are valuable as post roads at places lacking railroad transportation, but they are not nearly so valuable for general traffic purposes or for the national defense as they would be if they formed connected parts of a connected whole and served for transportation through and from more important centers.

Incidentally it may be observed that the Federal aid plan has, in actual practice, apparently stimulated road building of an inferior rather than a superior type of construction. The report of the Bureau of Public Roads for the year ending June 30, 1919, showed that 60 per cent of all the mileage approved to date is of dirt, sand, gravel, or clay construction. If we assume this type to be adequate, then, per se, the road is not of primary importance, since any highway carrying any considerable volume of traffic must be of a durable type, according to all engineering authorities. If this type of construction is employed in roads of primary importance, then the money is wasted.

From the point of view, however, of developing through traffic and the feeder roads for such traffic, there is a still more important objection, and that is that the State funds are tied up to the less valuable projects, and the general improvement of the State's road system and its correlation to the system of other States is necessarily neglected. This conclusion unavoidably appears from the following table showing the receipts from all sources for the Colorado road fund in 1920 and the manner in which it must be expended if the State should accept in full its share of the Federal appropriation. This table is based on the calendar year, which is the State's fiscal year, but the necessary adjustment has been made to fit the Government appropriations to this method of computation.

In the following table the projects upon which the Federal aid could be employed are called roughly 10 per cent of the primary system. There are actually somewhat more than 10 per cent of the primary State roads. They are, however, only a fraction over 2 per cent of the primary and secondary roads combined. The secondary roads are cared for by the counties, but they are as much a part of the whole road system of the State and county as the primary roads.

One-mill State tax	$1,400,000
Fifty per cent of automobile State license fees	350,000
Fifty per cent of 1 per cent Federal gasoline tax	200,000
Internal improvement fund	125,000
		2,075,000
State's share of Federal aid to be met on one-to-one basis for improvement of approximately 10 per cent of the State road system	1,700,000
		375,000
State road funds to be applied for cooperation on forest-reserve projects	130,000
Balance available for department expenses, maintenance of Federal aid roads, and maintenance, improvement, and county aid on approximately 7,000 miles of State primary highways	245,000

In other words, if the State should accept its share of the Federal aid, it would only have available for the maintenance of the roads thereby constructed and also for the maintenance, reconstruction, and improvement of all its other roads less than 12 per cent of its total road fund. Of that total road fund, $1,750,000 is raised by State taxation of the people of the State, who have 7,000 miles of State roads to keep in repair, but 97 per cent of that amount must be used to cover the Federal appropriation for the construction of only 656 miles of those roads. One of two things is bound to result. Either the State will conclude that it can not avail itself of very much of this $1,700,000 or it will be bound to neglect the major portion of the roads.

As a matter of fact, both results occur. The neglect by the States of their own roads is a fact so familiar as to need no citation of instances. It is very largely attributable to the effort to match the Federal appropriations. On the other hand, the States' inability to do this has resulted in a large part of these appropriations not being expended for the purpose for which they were intended.

The report of the chief of the Bureau of Public Roads, October 15, 1919, states:

Of the post-road appropriations made by the Congress there was available during the fiscal year a total of $80,000,000, the same being the sum of the appropriations for the fiscal years 1917, 1918, and 1919. From this there was deducted the 3 per cent allowed by law for the administrative purposes, and the remainder, or $77,600,000, was apportioned among the several States. Of this sum there was paid to the States during the fiscal year for road-construction work a total of $2,702,247. At the close of the fiscal year 1918 there had been paid to the States $425,445. So that the grand total of all payments to the States on June 30, 1919, was $3,127,693, which left to the credit of the States an unexpended balance of $74,472,306. In addition, the $95,000,000 appropriated for the fiscal year 1920 was apportioned to the States, after deducting the 3 per cent for administrative purposes, and that sum became available with the close of the fiscal year. On July 1, 1919, therefore there was available to the credit of the States for expenditure a total of $166,622,306.

The total mileage of projects executed and approved under the Federal aid plan is pitifully small, the report of the chief of the Bureau of Public Roads showing a total of only 5,790 miles up to the date of the report, October 5, 1919. We have a total of some two and a half million miles of highways in the United States.

In Colorado it would be obviously impossible for the State with the trifling fund of $245,000 to do all of the following things:

First. Maintain in proper condition the Federal aid roads on which $3,400,000 would have been expended;

Second. Construct and maintain all other State roads; and Third. Maintain the overhead expenses of the organization which is to do all of these things.

In fact, it could not, with so small a fund, do any one of these things. The result would be that vast sums expended by both the Government and the State would be wasted through insufficient maintenance, and no encouragement would be offered to the traffic which should furnish the principal use of the "Federal aid" roads by coming to them from tributary or feeder channels.

NECESSITY OF LATERAL ROADS.

I recall an experience, often repeated, which illustrates this point. I was for several years county attorney for a large county comprising one of the most fertile and populous agricultural valleys in the State, and extending into the mountains, where it included also some mining and timber interests. The principal attraction of the county is, however, to tourists and pleasure seekers, inasmuch as within its boundaries are comprised the famous mountain parks of the city of Denver. The county took a just pride in helping the State and the city of Denver—which is another municipal corporation—in the construction of a magnificent system of scenic highways to and through these mountain parks. The work was admirably done. Many miles of new roads on easy gradients were constructed. Old one-way mountain roads were widened. Great fills of stone were thrown over valleys, and bridges of steel and concrete and many miles of retaining walls added beauty, strength, and expense to the system. It is one of the show places of the country. You can rest the throbbing engine of your motor on the spot where Buffalo Bill used to rest his horse. If your eye is as good as his you can see in the clear air perhaps 70 miles over the plains; and from out of that dim distance whence the old pioneer's prophetic vision was accustomed to watch immigrant trains winding slowly up the Platte, you can now see the trains of four transcontinental railways approaching the city of more than a quarter of a million people, whose streets and buildings are spread before you like a pictured map. Resting against the mountain on which you stand is the beautiful little city of Golden, the home of the famous Colorado State School of Mines, whose graduates are found in every country of the world, tapping the sides of the Andes and the Himalayas, as well as of the Rockies. Some 40 lakes, natural and artificial, lend their silver to the green and gold of the farms that checker the whole prairie landscape. And when you look to the other side, to the west, you see the perpetual snow of Evans and the other monarchs of the Continental Divide. Your breast just simply fills up with the inspiration of the scene. You are reluctant to leave it even to explore the wonders which lie beyond.

But you do so at last, your motor humming smoothly up easy grades and down long, smooth descents. You never fear the meeting with another car, the curves are so gradual and the roads so wide. You look down over sheer depths with the fascination of pleasure, not the fascination of fear, because you are protected from them by a wonderful thick wall of great stones set in everlasting cement. You stop on the rounded backs of three mountain watersheds to fill your lunch basket with our golden-hearted Mariposa lilies and with the purple columbines, which I and the other school children of Colorado adopted as our State flower. You return to your hotel through two mountain villages by way of a deep canyon whose red and gray cliffs shelter the merriest little trout stream in the world.

There is nothing to mar your pleasure, and I was proud, indeed, that it fell to my lot to be an official of that county when those roads were built and to have some part in the job. But, notwithstanding my pride in the achievement, there was one thing that marred my pleasure. That was the complaint of the man from Jones Crossing, who appeared before our board of county commissioners and protested that while the State highway a mile from his place was a fine road to haul his crops to market, he could not get to that road because the intervening mile was one continuous mudhole. The county was very hard pressed, indeed, to give any assistance to the hundreds of farmers and lumbermen and miners who did not live on the main road, but paid the taxes which largely supported it.

The county finally did get around to the point of improving the feeder roads. But we can not yet do it on a national scale, because we have not developed, and we are not likely to develop, under the Federal aid plan, a primary system of highways. Consequently, diversion of funds to secondary roads is neither permissible nor practicable. We have not in the United States to-day one transcontinental highway improved for its full distance. The Lincoln Highway is the closest approach, and it has been made possible by contributions from public-spirited men. Nothing within the present Federal aid act would ever require the construction of any interstate highways.

The mere fact that maintenance from Government funds is specifically forbidden makes Government expenditure a current expense instead of an investment.

In Western States, such as Colorado, Arizona, New Mexico, and so forth, maintenance is impossible because every penny of State funds is absorbed under the dollar-for-dollar plan.

In my judgment it would be a great mistake, for my own State at least, to accede to the further continuance of any plan of road financing which follows the present lines, though some adaptations may and should be made from the present law in view of the peculiar situation of the public-land States.

JUSTICE TO PUBLIC-LAND STATES.

I shall, directly, set up in detail a comparison of the provisions of the Federal aid act with those of the Townsend bill, showing, conclusively and overwhelmingly, as it seems to me, the great superiority of the latter. But in one very important respect it should be improved by the incorporation of an idea from the Louisville resolutions or some similar idea. The Townsend bill as presented takes no account of the distinctive situation of those States having large areas of land the title to which is still in the Federal Government, much of it there to remain forever.

The Federal aid acts attempted to adjust apportionments between the several States on a plan which would recognize differences in their proportionate area, population, and existing road mileage, and provided for the distribution of funds as follows: One-third in the ratio which the area of each State bears to the total area of all the States; one-third in the ratio which the population of each State bears to the total population of all the States, as shown by the latest available Federal census; and one-third in the ratio which the mileage of rural delivery routes and star routes in each State bears to the total mileage in all the States. These acts also, as has already been noted, provided separate appropriations for forest reserve roads.

The Louisville resolutions, contemplating and urging the continuance and extension of the Federal aid plan, propose that "the percentage which the patented land area bears to the total area of a State shall be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture; the 50 per cent now required as such State's portion of cooperation shall be multiplied by the resultant percentage as above determined, and the figure obtained will be the minimum percentage which each State shall be required to furnish of the total of any Federal aid project." The Louisville resolutions also contemplate a separate appropriation for forest-reserve roads.

I believe it will be useful at this point to insert a table showing the area of public land and forest reserves in the 12 public-land States.

States.	Area.	Public land.	Forest reserves.	National parks.
	Sq. miles.	Acres.	Acres.	Acres.
Arizona	113,956	22,309,100	11,154,923

Idaho	83,888	14,316,108	17,606,792
Montana	146,997	11,818,414	15,957,196	2,142,720
Wyoming	97,914	26,759,500	8,384,174	915,060

New Mexico	112,634	21,063,165	8,294,222
Oregon	96,699	13,850,755	13,118,680	159,360
Utah	84,990	31,540,671	7,415,551

It may be deduced from the foregoing table that the entire public-land acreage in those States is a grand total of 351,818,594 acres, or 43 per cent of the entire area of those States, and that of this amount 122,698,424 acres, or 11.9 per cent, of the entire area is forest-reserve and national-park land which will never go into private ownership or become taxable.

The Federal Government is a landlord over a domain within the boundaries of these 12 States which exceeds by 30,000 square miles the total combined area of New York, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, New Jersey, Ohio, New Hampshire, Vermont, Maryland, Delaware, Connecticut, Maine, Virginia, and West Virginia. There is a very definite obligation on the part of the Government to pay its share of the cost of the development, which I submit should include maintenance of the roads of those States. As the State has pushed forward its own road systems, the Government has benefited by the increased value of its holdings, just as have the residents of the State who have been individually taxed for this development. A generation of the life of the settler's family, a generation of time filled with hardship and labor, is required in order to create a home on the public lands which are still open to entry. The settler's improvements are taxed as soon as they are put on the Government land, and his title is taxed as soon as he acquires it from the Government. In some counties in Colorado the tax is as high as 8 mills on full cash value for road purposes alone, while the Federal holdings, worth billions of dollars, are tax free, and the citizens of the West pay tribute at an ever-increasing rate for the use of the reserved lands.

I have no complaint to make that the Government has been niggardly in the performance of the obligation created by this situation, and I would be the last man in this House to propose any cessation of such performance, but I do believe that the vast sums already appropriated and now asked could be far better expended under the plan proposed by the Townsend bill, subject to one important change designed to increase the proportionate amount of money expended in those States part of whose area produces no State revenue.

THE EHRHART PLAN.

It will have been noted that the plan of the Louisville resotions contemplated an increase of Federal aid expenditures in the public-land States based on the proportionate area therein of the Government-owned lands. Area, however, is not the sole test. The question depends primarily upon revenue, and consequently the value of the respective areas of Government-owned lands and privately owned lands is a most important factor.

Hon. Thomas J. Ehrhart, the very efficient State highway commissioner of Colorado, to whom—as to Mr. Pyke Johnson, formerly of the Colorado State Highway Department—I am indebted for much of the material used in this paper—although I am not at present advised whether Mr. Ehrhart entirely agrees with my conclusions—presented to the Louisville convention an elaborate and ingenious plan of apportionment of Federal aid based on a consideration of both the area and the value of the public lands in proportion to both the area and the value of the total area of the State.

His proposal is, in substance, as follows: Take the average between the percentage which the area of public lands in a State bears to the total area of such State and the percentage which the valuation of the public lands in each State bears to the total valuation of real property in the State, multiply the percentage so obtained by 50 per cent, the State's base share, deduct the per centage so obtained from 50 per cent. The resulting difference will give the proportion which the State should furnish, and the Government should furnish the difference between that and 100 per cent of the combined amount of State and Federal funds which should be expended in the State under the Federal aid plan.

What should be that combined amount to which the suggested process is to be applicable would, of course, have to be first determined. As the Ehrhart plan was suggested as an amendment to the Federal aid act, I assume that a preliminary application of the threefold plan of apportionment provided by that act was contemplated. In my opinion an adjustment of the amounts to be expended in the several States by the Federal Government, with reference to their respective areas of untaxable lands, is not less important under the Townsend bill, notwithstanding it proposes that the entire cost of construction and maintenance of national highways should be borne by the National Government. That bill as offered simply apportions the total appropriations among the several States in the same ratio that the mileage in such States bears to the total mileage selected in all the States.

The Ehrhart plan may not be simple enough for incorporation in a statute, and the feature of valuation of Government lands may possibly involve an element difficult of accurate appraisement, but it is worthy of careful consideratаion in formulating a permanent policy of national highway finance. Without at the present attempting to adjust it to the Townsend bill, I desire here to present the tabulated schedule of adjustments which it proposes.

NOTE.—The figures for Government-owned lands in Montana, Wyoming, and Nevada are less than the actual amounts, because national forests, which lie in more than one of these States, are not included in the foregoing table. See Table IV.

Mr. Ehrhart says in support of his plan:

I maintain that if the Government owned all the lands in the West it ought in justice to build 100 per cent of the roads. The Government owns from 4 to 85 per cent of the lands in each of the States named. I can not understand how any fair-minded man, after a moment's consideration, can help but admit that the United States Government should pay on some reasonable basis for the roads necessary to develop its own property in lieu of local road taxes which are applied to all other land, and especially so when no other State or county tax is or can be levied. Some of my forestry friends may say, "We are spending money building roads." Very true; but the inhabitants of these Western States are paying into the National Treasury for permits, leases, stumpage, etc., more than is expended on roads in the reserve lands, and I submit that the foregoing proposition based on land area and valuation would be a fair basis of apportionment of Federal aid.

As a suggestion for the consideration of the committees having charge of national highway bills, I respectfully propose that after determining the amount which can be appropriated for, say, the next four years for all Federal road undertakings, we set aside not less than one-tenth of that amount for the construction and maintenance of roads and trails in and to the forest reserves; that this sum be apportioned to the several public land States in the ratio which the forest reserve acreage in each of such States bears to the total acreage of all the forest reserves; that this money be devoted to both construction and maintenance; that the State be required to pay for construction and maintenance 50 per cent of the expense multiplied by the percentage which the area of forest reserves in such State bears to the total area of such State. I have not tabulated this percentage anywhere in this paper, as I have already considerably burdened these remarks with tabulated matter, but it is deducible from the other tables herein submitted.

The remainder, not to exceed 90 per cent of the money to be appropriated, should, I think, be apportioned between projects selected by the Federal highway commission contemplated by the Townsend bill in the several States in such manner that those located in the public-land States should receive for construction and maintenance an amount arrived at by first making a calculation on the same basis as provided by existing law—that is, based on the three elements of comparative area, comparative population, and comparative mileage of existing rural routes and star routes—and dividing the figure so obtained for each of the public-land States by some percentage—possibly on the Ehrhart or a similar plan—which will take into account the area or value, or both, of the Government-owned land as compared with the area or value, or both, of all the lands in the State. The remaining amount might then be apportioned between the several States on the basis now provided by existing law and above referred to. It is possible that this might be deemed too complicated a method for the purpose of a general statute which, I concede, ought to be as simple and clear as possible consistent with the object aimed at, but at all events the special needs and the special equities of the public-land States should be recognized no less under a system of national highways constructed and maintained by the Federal Government than under a system which vainly endeavors to work out a national system from the separate, disconnected, and necessarily self-centered activities of the States. It should not be objected that the larger use of Government money in the public-land States will give an especial stimulus to the use of State funds for State roads in those States in order to make and maintain feeders for the national highways. They are entitled to that stimulus.

As befits the nature of this indissoluble union of sovereign States, our road system will be in the highest sense a better State system as it becomes a better connected and coordinated national system, and it will be a better national system as it becomes a more equitable and economical State system.

ABSENCE OF COORDINATION UNDER "FEDERAL AID."

I have stated that in at least two principal respects the "Federal aid" plan has not proved conducive to the best interests either of the State or the Nation and have endeavored to show, as the first of these, that the requirement of equal appropriations by the States prevents the proper maintenance of other State roads and the development of tributary roads.

I now submit that—

(2) State supervision of construction means a lack of that coordination which is essential to the development of a truly national system.

The projects in which the State is interested are inevitably those which will best serve its own needs, though, for the reasons already suggested, the State needs are at best poorly served under the present system. Where State highway departments retain the final authority to select the roads which shall be improved, even though such selection must have Government approval, it does not involve any charge of narrow-mindedness or sectionalism against the State highway commissioner to point out that he is sure to consider intrastate ahead of interstate needs. The latter concern him only when they are identical with or subservient to the needs of his own State. That is his business—to look after the road needs of his own State first.

The following example will serve to illustrate this point: One of our principal roads in Colorado follows the valley of the South Platte from Denver to Julesburg in the extreme northeast corner of the State. From this point the distance is 9 miles to Big Springs, Nebr., where connection is made with the Lincoln Highway, which approaches the corner of Colorado on its way from Cheyenne east through Nebraska. There is quite a long stretch of this road in Nebraska between Big Springs and the Wyoming east line. The 9-mile stretch from the Colorado State line to Big Springs has never been improved. I can not blame the Nebraska State or local authorities for not wanting to spend either their own or the Federal aid funds for this purpose. It is not to their financial interest to have either eastbound or westbound traffic diverted out of Nebraska and into Colorado. Consequently this 9-mile stretch, which would form the connecting link between two excellent roads, each of which is many hundreds of miles in length, remains impassable most of the time. Its improvement would be a benefit to the Nation, both for general traffic and for the national defense, but the Federal aid funds will never be expended there, because the Nebraska authorities for perfectly sound reasons of local policy would never select that short stretch as a Federal aid project. Its improvement would be a benefit to Colorado, but the Colorado authorities can expend neither their State funds nor their share of the Federal aid funds on a project outside the State, and even if they could do so, it would probably be resented by Nebraska officials.

Every State has had experience amply sufficient to demonstrate the necessity for the authority of the State commission in determining the locations of intercounty State highways. As was well said by Mr. Pyke Johnson, of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, in his argument before his associate delegates at the Washington meetings above referred to:

We can not consistently hold to the position that the State should retain control and expenditure of State aid to the counties without admitting at the same time that the National Government should retain direction and control over the expenditure of national funds.

I am firmly of the opinion that instead of tying the hands of the Federal Government by permitting construction of roads necessary to the national business and the national defense to remain subject to the selection and supervision of State authorities, and instead of tying up State funds to the construction of dislocated projects and to their entire maintenance when constructed, we should concentrate our national funds on both the construction and the maintenance of great through arteries of travel; that we should indeed spend the national funds with a sense of just proportion between the several States and particularly with a sense of the Federal obligation to those States which have great areas of public and withdrawn lands, but that the application of the State funds should not be coerced either to the construction or the maintenance of such great through arteries.

The State funds should be released for the primary and secondary State roads, the local roads, which are to feed these through arteries. I hope I shall not be misunderstood as advocating a diminution of Federal appropriations for road building either in Colorado or in any other State. My intention is to advocate a wiser, more effective, and more economical expenditure of such money and the removal of the hobbles now put on the States' money by the Federal aid plan. If it is feared that a State will not expend sufficient of its own money on its own roads, there can doubtless be devised adequate legislative safeguards against such default. One such would be a provision reserving to the Federal authorities the right to postpone expenditure of Government funds on Government roads in such State until assurance was given of the expenditure by the State of a similar sum on its own roads. While such postponement could not continue forever without leaving the national system incomplete, it is believed that it would not have to be very long continued in order to induce the State to do its share of the whole work. The benefits derived by adjoining States would probably be a sufficiently persuasive argument, if any were needed, but the real answer is that it would be easier for the States to construct and develop their own roads under the provisions of the Townsend bill than it is for them to keep those roads from complete decay under the "Federal aid plan." One scheme, by its very nature and conception, encourages the expenditure of the State money on local roads, the other uses up money which could be so expended—and uses it up, moreover, on disconnected and unrelated pieces of national highway.

LESSON OF THE ROMAN ROADS.

The merit of the Roman roads, which connected all parts of the Empire, was not only that they were well constructed. It lay principally in the fact that they were through roads, all of them "leading to Rome" and from Rome. The Roman road did not stop in a morass on the frontiers of the Belgae, to be resumed 9 miles away in Gaul. And in these days, when we are already forgetting the lessons of the war which is not even concluded as these words are written, when we shudder so much at the bogy of "militarism" that we are on the point of denying the duty of self-defense, it may be well enough to remember that over those ancient stone roads Rome brought something other than the sword to the outlying corners of the world. Those roads carried culture and wealth and enlightenment and law.

But the roads we are now discussing lead not to vassal States, but between free and equal States. We know well enough that a properly coordinated system of all kinds of transportation is as necessary in a republic as in an empire. We have, both under Federal control of railroads and in the recently adopted law for their return to private management, fully recognized their national usefulness and responsibility. Let us not limit to these steel highways the application of the lesson learned from ancient Rome. General highway traffic is capable of indefinite expansion. That expansion means the increased prosperity of every community which it touches and, indirectly, of the whole Commonwealth.

Furthermore, if our through highways are in such condition at all times that traffic of all kinds can flow upon them easily, plentifully, and without obstruction or delay, that condition will be a most potent factor to remove from politics one principal source of misunderstandings, recriminations, inequalities, and sectional and political abuses, namely, the subject of railroad rates. With the potential competition of highway transportation ever present and ever enlarging its scope railroad rates will tend naturally and inevitably to adjust themselves to the level of the actual value of the service performed. On the other hand, it need not be feared that this competition will diminish the volume of business done on the railroads, for it is a curious but easily understood fact that transportation of one kind tends to increase transportation of other kinds, though it may change in some degree the character of such other transportation. An example from our own history of the converse side of the situation now under discussion will serve to illustrate this point. It will be recalled that during the period of railroad expansion in the West immediately following the Civil War, there was much opposition by cross-country freighters to the extension of the railroads across the plains through the Rockies and the Sierras to the Pacific coast. These men were sure that the railroads would ruin their business. The very opposite proved to be the case. The character of the teaming freight business did indeed change, but greatly to its profit. Instead of long hauls through a sparsely settled and difficult country the freighter made short hauls to the railroad through a country continually increasing in prosperity. Each business helped the other. The late James J. Hill and his successors recognized this principle, to the great advantage of their great railroad system, by stimulating State and county road construction and maintenance in the country tributary to that system. The result now to be expected from the development of national through highways—namely, the division between railways and highways of the classes of transportation more conveniently handled by each—is not a result to be feared, but rather one to be desired in the interest of economy and efficiency.

To the proposition that transportation of one kind increases transportation of other kinds the automobile furnishes an apparent exception in its supposed effect upon the business of the street railways. It is believed, however, that this is an apparent and not a real exception and that the present financial embarrassment of street railways all over the United States should really be attributed to other causes. However, if the above thesis is erroneous or of incomplete application this simply means that any kind of transportation must be able to function economically as compared with other kinds if it is to survive. The day is doubtless far distant when, for some kinds of transportation, the railroad will not be able to function economically as compared with the highway.

The newer the country the greater is the proportional benefit which it derives from the construction of roads. Colorado will be greatly benefited by the Government's construction and maintenance of main through roads connecting it more closely to Wyoming and Nebraska on the north, Nebraska and Kansas on the east, Oklahoma and New Mexico on the south, and Utah on the west, but no roads can be built through this block of States without being roads of national importance, and just as I believe that the State is within its rights in providing both funds and supervision for the construction of inter-county roads, so I believe that the United States should both construct and maintain those roads which are national in importance and which will, to an increasing extent as the years go by, be devoted to a traffic generated without the boundaries of the respective States.

DETAILED COMPARISON OF FEDERAL AID AND TOWNSEND BILL.

I now desire to proceed to an analysis of the Townsend bill, Senate bill 3572.

It partially justifies the assertion of its critics that it does propose a substantial increase in appropriations, inasmuch as it authorizes appropriations of $425,000,000 for the four fiscal years beginning July 1, 1920, and ending June 30, 1924. Fifty millions of this is to be immediately available, $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and the balance at the rate of $100,000,000 per year for the ensuing three years. By reference to the comparative table of appropriations heretofore set forth, it will be observed that since the Townsend bill does not propose to repeal the appropriations already made under the Federal aid plan, the total appropriations for the current and following years would be as follows, leaving out the figures of the Louisville resolutions, but including the figures actually involved in existing law as deducible from Table I. The same abbreviations are used as in that table.

Year.	July 11, 1916.		Feb. 28, 1919.		Townsend—General.	Total.
	General.	Forest reserve.	General.	Forest reserve.
1920	20	1	75	3	50	154
1921	25	1	75	3	75	179
1922	.....	1	.....	.....	100	101
1923	.....	1	.....	.....	100	101
1924	.....	1	.....	.....	100	101

It was strongly urged before the Senate committee, in support of the Louisville resolutions, that each of the public-land State legislatures convenes in biennial session in January, 1921; that at these sessions the financing of the roads for the next two years would have to be done; and that it was most important that it should then be definitely known that the Federal appropriations would continue after the 1st of July, 1921. Of course, the use of the Government money would not cease at that time whether the States were then entitled to it or not, since the acts of 1916 and 1919 provide for reapportionments of the amount not expended out of the appropriations of previous years. However, the desirability of making at least a year in advance whatever Federal appropriations are to be made must be apparent where these appropriations constitute the basis of State-road financing for a two-year period. This is particularly true if, as the Townsend bill proposes, we are to change our policy so as to release State funds which are now tied to the Federal road appropriations.

Now, I do not pretend to have made a calculation as to the amount which will be needed for construction and maintenance of national highways for the period ending June 30, 1924. The Louisville resolutions call for $400,000,000 as against the $425,- 000,000 of the Townsend bill. The resolutions contemplate that three hundred of the four hundred million shall be expended for general road construction during the latter three of these four years—not overlapping the current and next following fiscal years, as the Townsend bill does—and that the other $100,000,000 shall be used on forest reserve roads during a period of 10 years ending in 1931. This would make it appear at first blush that the Louisville resolutions contemplate the expenditure of less money than does the Townsend bill, and it is true that they do call for $25,000,000—6¼ per cent—less from the Federal Treasury. On further consideration, however, it will be apparent that whether the Townsend bill figures are too high or too low this bill contemplates a much more moderate, perhaps I should say more careful, plan of expenditures, albeit a much more far-reaching plan. The Louisville resolutions call for the expenditure by the State and Federal Governments together of $600,000,000 in the next four years, $800,000,000 in the next 10 years, for construction alone, the withdrawal of the States' share, $400,000,000, from other use, and the withdrawal from other State use of a further enormous but undeterminable amount for maintenance of the roads so constructed. As against this the Townsend bill proposes the expenditure of only a little more than half this amount for both construction and maintenance, together with the release of State funds for the construction and maintenance of other roads.

The Townsend bill contemplates an overhead expense to the Government of not to exceed 5 per cent, as against 3 per cent under the Federal aid plan; but here, again, the real difference is entirely the other way, because under the Federal aid plan practically the entire actual overhead expense is shifted to the States whose highway departments do the supervising, while under the Townsend bill a new Federal commission is established for the purpose of creating, constructing, maintaining, and developing a complete national system of highways, something that we did not have and are likely never to get under the present plan with its diversified and sectionalized authority and responsibility.

However, in any consideration of expense the question of the proportional return in public benefit is most material. The following statement is taken from the report of the Joint Committee on Federal Aid in the Construction of Good Roads of the Sixty-third Congress:

> The cost of hauling on highways is on an average about 21 cents per ton-mile. If all the roads of the country were rock surfaced, this cost would be reduced about two-thirds. By a reasonable and practicable improvement with material less expensive on the average than macadam, a saving can be made of at least 8 cents per ton-mile. If, then, there be road improvement which will effect an average saving of 8 cents per ton-mile on rural road hauling and the average haul be 9 cents, there will be a saving of 72 cents per ton on all produce transported over the roads. This saving applied to the 700,000,000 tons hauled annually over the highways means a total annual saving of $504,000,000 in the total cost of hauling. * * * The annual saving of $504,000,000 may be regarded as a dividend to be received by the American people from the investment necessary to place their highways in such condition as to save them that amount of money. Railroad stock that paid a 6 per cent dividend would be considered a good investment. On the same basis, the indicated dividends from good roads would justify an investment of $8,400,000,000.

The foregoing report was made in November, 1914. In that year there were registered in the United States 1,711,339 motor vehicles of all descriptions. We now have a total of approximately 8,000,000, of which about 500,000 are motor trucks. This number of motor vehicles is increasing by thousands every month. Whatever would have been the possible saving in 1914 by the surfacing of all of our roads would doubtless be multiplied at least fourfold to-day.

Of course, our 2,500,000 miles of highway can not all be improved at once, but for that very reason it is important that we improve those which will carry and develop the greatest amount of traffic. It is just such concentration of Federal funds that is proposed by, and just such increased use of State funds that is expected to follow, the operation of the Townsend bill.

That bill can best be analyzed by comparing it with the Federal aid plan in the several points in which it proposes a remedy for the inadequacies of the present law.

(1) The Federal aid plan deals with each State as a separate unit and provides only that the Government shall cooperate with the States, leaving actual construction to the State highway departments. Consequently highways are not uniformly constructed as between States, and are built under no connected system.

The Townsend bill would give the Nation a connected system of main trunk lines designed to meet the needs of interstate transportation. It leaves the construction in the hands of the National Government or requires Federal supervisory power where State highway departments are made use of.

(2) The Federal aid plan forces the States to match dollar for dollar with the National Government in highway construction, and since construction of trunk lines alone involves expenditure beyond the means of the State, the whole scheme of highway development is retarded.

The Townsend bill would relieve the States of the heavy financial burden involved in the construction of trunk lines and facilitate feeder development by releasing State funds for that purpose.

(3) The Federal aid plan specifically forbids the States to use national funds for maintenance, thus placing the burden of road upkeep upon the States and civil subdivisions, with the result that roads so constructed have frequently been allowed to deteriorate.

The Townsend bill specifically provides that the National Government must forever maintain all national highways, thus insuring the least possible waste and the greatest possible efficiency while setting sound precedent for State, county, and district construction.

(4) The Federal aid plan has the national administration in charge of a bureau of a Government department, with the result that legal procedure has greatly delayed actual construction. The work is too important to be left in charge of subordinates.

The Townsend bill would place national construction in the hands of a commission of five men appointed by the President, with the approval and consent of the Senate, and with final power to accelerate the use of funds along sound and economical lines.

(5) The Federal aid plan makes no provision for scientific location of highways with respect to future traffic development, and permits funds to be scattered over disconnected parts of the total road mileage of two and one-half million miles without regard to their importance as parts of a connected system.

The Townsend bill directs the commission to investigate the principles of transportation and to locate and construct highways to meet the requirements of future traffic and concentrates national funds on a selected system of mileage.

(6) The Federal aid plan leaves the location and selection of Federal aid routes to State highway departments, which are obligated to expend State funds primarily to meet the needs of intrastate rather than interstate traffic, with the result that Federal funds are not concentrated on any main system even within the State, but are scattered over the State according to the pressure exercised by constituents of the department.

The Townsend bill directs the commission to secure the advice of the State highway department with respect to the location of links of the national system, but leaves the final power of selection in the hands of the commission, with the proviso that connecting roads must be constructed with the needs of interstate transportation as a first consideration.

(7) The Federal aid plan takes no account of possible military needs of the Nation, amply demonstrated during the recent war, when Army convoys had to be routed over long distances when passing from inland points to seaboard.

The Townsend bill as one of its primary purposes plans to provide the Nation with a connected network of highways which would serve as effective agencies of through transportation in time of war.

(8) The Federal aid plan makes no provision for uniform regulations of traffic.

The Townsend bill provides for uniform regulations of traffic on national highways with the proviso that the civil and criminal jurisdiction of the State shall not be affected thereby.

(9) The Federal aid plan defines an acceptable project as one which is "substantial in character." Under this provision 60 per cent of the total mileage approved to date by the Department of Agriculture has been of a type lower than macadam.

The Townsend bill provides that only such "durable" types of surface shall be adopted as will adequately meet any existing or probable future traffic needs.

(10) There is no provision in the Federal aid acts for the acquisition by the Government of roads already constructed and which are of a standard and location suitable for incorporation in a national system.

The Townsend bill provides that where States have constructed sections of highway which are selected as a part of the national system and which are of a standard of construction deemed adequate by the commission, the commission shall value the reproduction cost at current prices and wages, and shall construct, or may at its discretion contract with the State highway department for the construction of, other highways connecting or correlating with the national system and of a mileage equal in value to the highway or part thereof so selected as part of the national system. No cost of the maintenance of such roads shall be borne by the Government.

This provision is equitable to the States which have already expended large sums for the construction of through highways; it gives the State the value of this asset acquired through its thrift and foresight, and it applies the principle of Federal aid where it can logically and properly be applied.

(11) Under the Federal aid acts all condemnation proceedings must be instituted by the States. This is an anomaly in view of the intended national character of the roadways to be acquired; but it is in accord with the anomalous nature of the Federal aid acts which leave selection, construction, and maintenance of national highways in the hands of the State authorities.

The Townsend bill corrects this illogical and sectional plan by requiring the States to turn over rights of way to the Government so far as may be legally possible. It is submitted that this acquisition of title by the Government is no more an invasion of the sovereignty of the States than is the similar acquisition of title to sites for Federal buildings, Army camps, naval bases, and so forth. It may be observed, however, that the compulsion resting upon the State or its civil subdivisions to make such transfer is only that as a condition precedent to the expenditure of Federal money on national roads within such State the rights of way shall be so transferred "as fully as may be permitted under the constitution of the State." It may be conceded that the permanent application of such compulsion would block the full completion of a perfect national system of highways, but for the reasons previously suggested it is not believed that such disciplinary withholding of funds would have to be very long continued. There are, it is submitted, no States which could afford permanently to be left out of such national system of highways. There are, perhaps, none which could not be left out without greater detriment to themselves than to the rest of the Union.

(12) The Federal aid acts do not provide any standard widths of roads or roadways.

Under the national system provided for in the Townsend bill all highways are to have a right of way of not less than 66 feet and a wearing surface of not less than 20 feet, except where this is rendered impracticable by physical conditions, excessive cost, or legal obstacles.

(13) The Federal aid acts are primarily for the construction of postal routes.

The Townsend bill unifies all road-building activities of the Department of Agriculture under the heading of the Federal highway commission, which is to take over also such highway duties as are now vested in the Council of National Defense.

CONCLUSION.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the time is as ripe for the formation of a definite national highway policy as for a definite Army or Navy policy or a definite foreign relations policy, that the policy under which we are now operating is not definite and can never be truly national, and that a review of the whole subject conclusively demonstrates that the present plan gives us the least possible benefit from both State and National funds, and that the Townsend bill properly adjusted to the needs of both the public-land States and the private-land States presents the basis of a sound constructive and permanent national policy, insuring the maximum of advantage to the Nation and to the several States.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES J. THOMPSON,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 5, 1920.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a speech of Hon. CHARLES C. KEARNS, delivered at McKinley day banquet, at Canton, Ohio, January 29, 1920.

Omitting the preliminary remarks made by Mr. KEARNS bearing on the life and character of McKinley, the speech is as follows:

SPEECH OF HON. CHARLES C. KEARNS, DELIVERED AT M'KINLEY DAY BANQUET, AT CANTON, OHIO, JANUARY 29, 1920.

In the beginning I desire to say I have no quarrel with the great masses of loyal and patriotic men who make up the Democratic Party. These men have been misled by the pretense of a false leadership. The present Democratic administration was conceived in falsehood and deceit and ever since has reveled in graft and wild extravagance. By a false pretense it secured the confidence of the electorate of the Nation and it has never since overlooked an opportunity to violate its trust. It has chosen to pile needless burden after burden upon the weary shoulders of the taxpaying public, rather than stay the profiteer in his mad rush to riches. It has compelled the 110,000,000 men, women, and children of this country to pay constant tribute to this lawless band of profiteers. While the war was on and the young manhood of the country was baring the breast to the dangers of battle and loyal men and women at home were exerting their energy to get needed supplies to our soldiers at the front and in camp, the profiteer preyed unhindered upon the vitality of the country. The administration sometimes rebuked, but never punished, this the greatest domestic foe. Since peace has come this enemy at home still plies his nefarious trade in every household of our land. This is done in defiance of a pitifully weak and vacillating administratioin. This band of highway robbers boldly and successfully defy the law and go unjailed.

So well do they recognize the helpless impotency of the Department of Justice that they go unmasked into every household in every State of the Union and loot and plunder. The profiteer has brought want and misery and suffering into a countless number of homes, yet it seems he has not yet reached the zenith of his wild career. The red danger pales into nothingness compared to this great evil of the hour. With laws so thick and drastic that no honest man dare turn to right or left for fear of violation, the lawless continue in their mad rush unafraid. Attorney General Palmer did take decided stand against the coal miner and stopped what might have been a national disaster. Some say for this he must be called to higher duties. I believe before the people call him into a wider field they will first ask him to put handcuffs on the wrists of those who have their hands in the pockets of every home throughout our land. It is true the miners' strike was partly stopped in the earlier stages of its development, but the operator was never hindered, and is still allowed to make, in many instances, a thousand per cent upon his investment.

Such dishonest pretense as this and kindred acts are what give impetus to the great unrest to-day.

There is no place in the American politics for the blatherskite or hypocrite. There is a demand, however, for the brave and courageous leader of men and public thought who will meet all questions with a courage that only fears the wrong. The man who shapes his thoughts in soft and pleasing speech to attract the masses to his leadership, regardless of the justness of his cause, is a traitor to right and a menace to our institutions of government. The country is calling aloud to-day for a leader who can turn a face of flint against the masses, regardless of their numbers, when their demands are selfish and unjust.

The controversies between labor and capital have been coaxed and encouraged by the present-day demagogue until their estrangement presents another grave danger of the present hour. Labor and capital should be bosom friends. The prosperity of the Nation depends upon their companionship. The happiness of the one depends entirely upon the contentment of the other. Neither can prosper when the other fails. If I have counted accurately the pulse beats of the Nation or read aright the public mind, I have learned that the whole people are looking with field glasses for the man who can espouse that side of our domestic disputes that is right and just and with an equal firmness spurn the side of wrong regardless of the numbers for or against. There is wanted a Goliath in our modern-day politics who hews straight to the line, letting the chips fall where they may.

Whoever this leader is to be he must be a man imbued with love for his own country. His chief mission must be here and not abroad meddling in the affairs of strangers and permitting strangers to have a voice in ours—a man who believes in a league of Americans. When such leadership is found, our domestic questions will be readily solved.

I can not help but think that the best patriotic thought of America is opposed to the proposed Wilsonian entangling alliance that would forever take away from nations the right to mind their own business. I am forced to the belief that America, through a reckless and ambitious leadership, has drifted far afield in the year just past. Persuaded by the false allurements of a union of governments, national rights and independence of action would be bartered and frittered away forever. The price is more, vastly more, than the patriotism of America would ever be willing to pay. My belief is that when the people of this country realize and understand the hypocrisy and deceit contained in the unreserved covenant of this proposed alliance they will speak in unmistakable fashion. Briefly let me say it is an attempt to pull down the Stars and Stripes and unfurl instead the flag of internationalism.

England wants this particular League of Nations because she now controls by virtue of this treaty more than one-fourth of all the globe. Much of this territory has been taken by force from unwilling peoples; has been taken from peoples who will loosen the British yoke when some day they have found opportunity and strength. This will mean war, and England wants to now forswear the great nations of the world to help her in her fight to retain her domination when that time comes. Other countries of the Old World join with her in an attempt to bind the United States in this unholy alliance, because they, too, have by the terms of this same treaty become the beneficiaries of territories and peoples to which they have no color of right. They, too, fear the time when the day of reckoning will come, for that time must come because the sins of nations, like the evil that men do, will some day find them out.

At the close of the World War a new map of Europe was drawn by hands that often cared but little for human rights. Peoples and territories were moved about from government to other sovereignty much as pawns are moved from place to place on the chessboard. The high ideals of those who, when war raged, asserted the principles of self-determination became mockeries at the peace table. Those who gave expression to these lofty thoughts when the blood of the universe flowed from a million wounds and more were the same men who made mockery of their own speech at the first opportunity. For many months behind closed doors, where the world could not look on, they filched and filched again from friend and foe alike.

Not until the curtains were drawn and the public was allowed to look in upon their work was the rape of China known. China, big honest, yet unaroused China, that had looked upon us as a friend in any hour of need. The pity is that America stood by and refused to interfere while this big, friendly country struggled for release from those who committed this cowardly, dastardly assault. Even to this day the President and those who blindly follow him say the Senate of the United States must not write words into this treaty that would at least disclaim consent on our part to the outrage. This treaty takes Shantung, a rich and populous Province, from the greatest Republic in the East—a trusting, loyal, and confiding friend of ours—and gives it to Japan, the most overbearing and autocratic monarchy on the face of the globe to-day. Think you the day of retribution will never come? Great and glaring sins never go unpunished, and when the hour comes for this great nation of the Orient to strike, conscience will impel every country that loves right and justice and truth to blend their arms with hers.

As hateful and unthinkable as the Shantung affair may appear to all men of honor and integrity, it can not overshadow England's treachery to Egypt and her people. When that country was coaxed and influenced to enter into the whirlpool of blood she was promised not only her release from Turkish interference but absolute independence, provided the allied arms should win. The treaty of peace was written and signed and Egypt's representatives were never allowed admittance to the peace conference; they knocked, but were denied their seats. In their enforced absence the following sentence relating to Egypt was incorporated into the treaty and is found on page 68 of the Senate print of that document and is numbered article 147:

> Germany declares that she recognizes the protectorate proclaimed over Egypt by Great Britain on December 18, 1914, and that she renounces the régime of the capitulations in Egypt.

Thus did our peace delegates become a party to another outrage, and the Senate of the United States is told that it must not write into the treaty a reservation which would say to England and to the Old World, "Do as you please with Egypt, but we do not lend to you our approval or consent."

Another provision vitally affects our own country. I refer to that clause that gives the British Empire six times the voting strength that is given to the United States. I can not understand how it is possible that any true American could ever agree that any nation should become six times greater than our own. Yet there are men who would sacrifice this principle in order that we might enter into these entangling alliances against which we have been warned by a whole line of distinguished men in the past.

I want to say here and now that this covenant of the League of Nations and the treaty embodied as it is into one document as it stands to-day is the most treacherous and un-American instrument of writing that was ever attempted to be fastened for all time upon the American people. Out of it all, however, comes a ray of hope, and that is the great majority of the rank and file of the Democratic Party denounce it in unmistakable terms.

This document without reservations would mean an end to our national independence. It would mean a supergovernment composed of certain nations of the world, of which we would be at best only a member State. It would surrender our right to independent self-government by transferring these powers and rights, in part at least, to alien councils. The very thought is so abhorrent and unthinkable to the real and true American mind that the wonder is that Woodrow Wilson, in his selfish ambition to create this new world power, could find one sympathetic mind in all the United States. He says the very heart and life of this covenant is found in article 10. Destroy or weaken it by reservations or otherwise, he says to the Senate, and you will break the great, big, throbbing heart of the world. Perhaps he mistakes his own heart for that of the universe.

God forbid that any man, or set of men, may ever grow so great and powerful that he or they can betray into strange and unsympathetic hands national rights that were wrenched from a despotic country by those who fought and bled a century and a half ago—rights, I submit, that were baptized in the blood that flowed from patriotic veins all along that seven years' pathway that led from Lexington to victory at Yorktown. Article 10 takes from Congress the right to make war or not and lodges this function in a council of nations. And neither would we have the poor privilege of selecting the side on which we could cast our lot. Under this deceitful document millions of American lads, at the command of alien authority, would be carried thousands of miles from home to fight in a stranger's war and perish in a foreign land in a cause not his or ours. This League of Nations is given by its authors a life perpetual, and this means that American boys throughout all the countless ages to come and go would fight and die in all the quarrels of Europe—quarrels in which they could have not even the remotest interest.

The proponents of this league claim it will put an end to war. They know that the nerves of the world are now unstrung, and that the big and brave heart of our Nation is torn and mangled and bleeding and is hungry for a perpetual and everlasting peace. They take advantage of this state of mind and promise freedom for all time from the ravages of war. This promise is as false and deceitful as was the slogan, "He kept us out of war," about which you and I have heard so much. If not, why is it that every paragraph of the covenant points not the way to peace but the path that leads direct to war? If not, why is it that while our President absented himself from Washington, assisting in its making, his Secretary of War was at that very time at home writing a proposed Army reorganization bill that provided for the most astounding and gigantic military system that the world had ever known? While the war raged and our brave and courageous men laid down their lives on a foreign battle field, we consoled the grief-stricken mother that her son had made the sacrifice that Germany's military system and its kind might perish from the earth. Notwithstanding this promise so solemnly made and at a time when men should speak the truth, the President and his Secretary of War have brought this Prussian military system to us many times multiplied. They have brought it to us all and more, only leaving behind the Kaiser himself.

The great masses of the people, be they Democrats or Republicans, are neither fools nor knaves and can not always be led astray by promises that are false. To keep the United States out of war is only a piker's job, so the President now extends his field of activities to the entire universe. This statement, I fear, follows too closely upon the heels of his former pledge to carry with it the weight of credulity. That wing of the Democratic Party that asks as to join our fortunes and our lives with strange and alien nations seeks to allay our fears by promises of universal and perpetual peace. At the same time they seek to place within our midst an armed camp of nearly 600,000 regular soldiers, augmented annually by a force of nearly a million of compulsory trained 19-year-old boys. Away with such hypocrisy. It is so rotten that its stench penetrates every home throughout our beloved country. If this military machine is necessary, if danger is lurking in the near future, or if, indeed, we must become the policemen of the world, let us say so. Be honest and candid with the masses, who are entitled to the truth. I do not know what the future, be it far or near, may hold, but I can not believe at this present moment, when the world is taking stock, that we should write into any law mandatory authority for compulsory military training. This may be necessary in the very near future, but surely this burden should not be placed upon the taxpayers and the boys until with a better vision we can penetrate the needs of the future.

Yes; many of the countries of Europe want this particular League of Nations, because in its covenant or constitution our country agrees to go to their aid when summoned with its millions of men and its billions of wealth. Standing as we do today at the dawn of a new era, let me appeal to you, let me appeal to your hearts and your reason, regardless of partisan politics, to close your ears to the call of the rotten monarchs of the Old World who fear the crumbling of their thrones. Let us listen only to the voice of America as she calls aloud for a league of her own nationals whose dominant thought will be the preservation of America and her soul-inspiring traditions. Let us listen to the voices of Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Lincoln, and McKinley. These men are dead, but their advice and judgment and warning still live. Their lives stand out in our history to-day monuments to the immortality of constitutional America. Their lives stand out to-day like guideposts pointing out the road to safety and perpetuity and warning against the pitfalls and intrigues of Europe and her quarrels.

Let me read here what McKinley has said on this very subject. It comes to-night like a voice from the tomb.

> We have cherished the policy of noninterference with the affairs of foreign governments, wisely inaugurated by Washington, keeping ourselves free from entanglement either as allies or foes, content to leave undisturbed with them the settlement of their own concerns.

We stand to-night awaiting the approach of two great national conventions where presidential candidates will be selected and party platforms written. The people, having grown weary of false promises and this new internationalism, have turned their eyes and rest their hopes upon the Chicago convention. At that convention war lords may occupy seats as delegates and try to force a nomination and party platform that would wed the Republican Party to a militaristic program. There will be men in both the Republican and Democratic conventions who will attempt to fasten upon the Republic this monstrous and costly military machine to which I have just referred—a system that would conscript each year nearly a million of our young men for military training; would after training place them in reserve for further service; and would for this purpose keep intact throughout our land our draft boards. Under this plan these young men would be taken out of the industries where they are so much in demand. They would be taken from farm and factory and mine and shop and mill and every other place of human endeavor. This would be done notwithstanding they are all calling for more help now. These men base their judgment upon the demands of 4,000,000 boys who have so recently laid down their arms.

They claim these young men are demanding that this military machine be kept alive and are clamoring for high-up military officials for public office. If I have listened and understand aright their story, these boys are asking for nothing of the sort. When I say this I mean the real soldier—the private and the junior officer who fought in trench and out in no man's land, where bullets flew, where shells went screeching and screaming and bursting by, carrying with them their cruel messages of death, out there where their comrades fought with them and fell. I mean, too, these boys who were called into camp and were made to do military duty at home. These men who passed through this hell and lived, I am told, will never vote for their superior officers who never smelled the smoke of battle, but in places of comfort and safety wore the insignia of a high-up officer, an insignia that only meant a class distinction between him and them.

But why waste time on this question? I predict that the Republicans at Chicago will select a big, broad-minded, patriotic man who is a real statesman to lead them to victory this fall, an American who pays homage to no king or potentate, whose love for this country is so great and constant that he can not share with any other a divided allegiance; a man who will be safe and sane and universally loved for his loyalty to country and admired for his courage and transcendent ability. I think I know the man, and you too, who will be nominated. He is brilliant in speech and faultless in logic. A man who knows the needs of our country and is so courageous that he can weather pressure and false advice that would direct him into strange and dangerous places. In search of such a man the convention we all believe will come to Ohio, and without dissenting voice it is your hope and mine will nominate that matchless leader, that paragon of men, charming in personality, Ohio's only candidate, for the Presidency of the United States—WARREN G. HARDING. With HARDING as the standard bearer I predict again that party lines will vanish, and practically a unanimous nation would rally around his cause and proclaim him Chief Executive for the next four years. Then America would, as if by magic, free herself from the greed and graft of the profiteer; business would again assume a safe and sane position in the affairs of the world; men would go about their daily activities assured that legitimate and honest avocations in every line of human endeavor would receive their merited protection and governmental encouragement. Capital and labor would forget their estrangement and as comrades would again unite to bind the ugly wounds of war. Holding as you do views so exactly in harmony with this great and good man's plans, I take it, it is quite unnecessary for me to dwell longer on the subject.

This brings me to another thought I desire to emphasize with all the power that I can command, and that is the Republican primary that will make selection of a candidate for governor of Ohio. I will not say that a Republican electorate demands, but will say the voters, regardless of party, will require of a candidate for this high and important place a man of real constructive business ability and one accustomed to dealing faultlessly with big questions that vitally affect the homes throughout the State. The man who will be the next governor of the State must first and last be an American of the highest degree of character; a man whose love for this country and its institutions is so sacred to him that the very thought of divided affection is repulsive to his soul; a man who can not be enamored by the blandishments and cajolery of strange influence or foreign power; a man who will listen to the argument of reason, but can not be influenced by the smooth tongue of flattery; a man broad and courageous enough when elected governor who can, with a firm and fearless hand, brush aside the political parasite that will follow in his wake, and serve the people as good judgment will dictate; a man whose ear is as ready to listen to the plea of the toiling masses as it is to give heed to the voice of power and wealth. He must be able to stand on such a high and lofty plane, built so securely on a foundation of right and justice, that all classes and all creeds can be assured of a square deal. There may be other men who might develop these qualifications that I believe the people demand of the candidate to be chosen by them as their governor, but unless I am badly deceived, your own Representative in Congress to-day from this district, ROSCOE C. MCCULLOCH, measures up to this high standard and more. I like him because he believes from the bottom of his heart that the most distressed and unfortunate family in your State and mine has not lost one right that the State has to bestow upon the most favored and most fortunate family in our midst. He knows the necessity of capital and the importance of labor; he knows that should all the people be happy and prosperous these two great factors of industry must walk arm in arm through life as boon companions.

For the last five years I have known him well and watched him closely. I have seen him grow and develop until he has become a real and important factor in the councils of the Nation. He has a mind of his own and his judgment is faultless, his honesty of purpose is beyond question, and he possesses a courage that can withstand the attacks of all the combined forces of evil.

If the Republican Party in its wisdom nominates this young and distinguished man for governor, I firmly believe that party lines will be forgotten and ROSCOE C. MCCULLOCH will receive the greatest vote ever given to any former governor of this, the greatest State in all the Union. He has youth and strength and brain, and before November next his persuasive voice will have penetrated into every home in Ohio, and his name will be the hope of all therein. This man, endowed as he is with these choice blessings, will be a fit successor to the beloved and immortal McKinley. If we who know him best do our full duty to Ohio, we will not let the hours and days go by from now until primary day without telling the people of his eminent fitness for this exalted place. It is the people's right to know and our plain duty to carry to them this message of hope. Tell them that he never yet has violated a trust; that he never will. Any criticism that political enemies will urge against him will only strengthen him in the love and esteem of the electors of the State. As a public official his record is clear. Scan his record in Congress as you may and you will learn that it stands out prominently without scar or blemish of any kind. Never has he cast a vote that would bring dishonor to him or the great district that he represents. Being a public servant with high and lofty ideals, his devotion to his country and its cause throughout the trying times just past will be in the days to come a lesson for ambitious youth to learn and profit by. The world wants men, true men; men who can not be swayed by the seductive passion of greed or influenced by the poisoned arrow of hate. MCCULLOCH stands as a giant among men, and when the people of this State know him as you and I know him victory for him and them will be assured. His nomination will be distinctly a victory for the State.

I do not know what MCCULLOCH's personal platform will be when he makes this race for governor, but I do know it will be a constructive one and one that will presage good for the State.

I do not know what the platforms of political parties will contain, but I do know that Americanism unalloyed is going to be forced into the campaign of every candidate by the people, whether that candidate would have it so or not. My opinion is that the people of Ohio and the Nation demand more nationalism and less internationalism. My opinion is that the people of this country desire to attend unhelped to their own business and allow other countries to do the same. And for this reason my belief is that the League of Nations without strong and clear-cut reservations will be distasteful to them. They are not now and never will be misled by promises of universal and everlasting peace. They pray for this, it is true, because they hate war.

It leaves in its wake broken homes and heartaches and deep sorrow, and if they had their way they would banish it from the world forever. They can not forget either that the same men who are now making these promises are the same men who a few years ago, before the Great World War commenced, were saying that the world had grown too enlightened to ever again be deluged in war. These are the same men who were so sure at that time that the dogs of war had been so securely chained that they could never break their fetters, that they had even coaxed the dove of peace to build her nest and hatch her brood in the very mouths of cannon that only yesterday were belching forth a destruction to all the world's civilization.

We pray for peace and pray again that our prayers may be answered, but we can not help but remember that ever since time began down to the present hour there has never been an age but what some country has been grappling at the throat of some other country in a death struggle for national existence. I fear this will be true as long as the greed of nations and nationals are allowed to be controlling factors. But surely we can not escape war by agreeing in this covenant to defend with our resources the boundary lines of Europe as they were made by this treaty. But our great danger is that too many in our midst are mindful of other interests, forgetting our own. In this connection let me say that as horrible and distasteful as war is to the well-thinking mind, we can not be led astray by promises that are not sincere. Neither can we escape war by bartering away our country into alien hands. The President has said himself that this particular League of Nations sets up a supergovernment that far overshadows our own. I quote his language exact in a speech at Kansas City, September 6, 1919. I am quoting now:

> I have, let me say without the slightest affectation, the greatest respect for the United States Senate; but, my fellow citizens, I have come to fight for a cause. That cause—the League of Nations—is greater than the Senate. It is greater than the Government. It is as great as the cause of mankind.

I am quite sure that the President has spoken the truth and without reservations our country as a free and independent Nation would cease to exist. This being true is it not time for all real lovers of their country to place here and now upon this monster's head an iron heel and crush out its life before it can sink its poisonous fangs deep into our Nation's flesh?

"It is greater than the Government." God forbid. The tears and the heartaches of every American mother whoever gave a son in battle from Bunker Hill all along that long and winding path that leads from there into the battle fields of France cry out against it. If this is true and we should enter into this arrangement, then we have falsified the tongue of old Liberty Bell and have made a lie out of Bunker Hill. Perry's victory becomes a farce. In doing this we write deceit all over the face of the entire story of Appomattox.

If this be true, San Juan Hill was a mockery and Chateau-Thierry was a meaningless and unprovoked tragedy—Chateau-Thierry, where the American boys threw themselves into the vortex of blood and battle, snatching victory from the greedy grasp of the German hordes; Chateau-Thierry, where these same unconquerable khaki-clad lads turned the face of the German Army toward home and they never stopped until they had planted the flag of freedom upon the ramparts, I hope, of an everlasting liberty.

Two paths open up before us, so let us choose now that our choice may live among traditions immortal. Let us have nothing of this new internationalism, but dedicate anew our old nationalism and we will challenge the admiration of those in our midst who love liberty and its cause. Do this and America will, with a renewed hope and abiding faith, welcome the unborn generations.

Let us put men in office who are Americans, men who can withstand the smiles and blandishments of king and queen, of prince and princess, and stand as immovable as the towering peaks of the everlasting hills for the perpetuity of our own Government and its institutions.

Terminating the State of War with the Imperial German Government.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM L. IGOE,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 5, 1920.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, House joint resolution 325, terminating the state of war with the Imperial German Government, is a very unusual document, wholly without precedent in our history, and raises many interesting and perplexing questions as to its constitutionality and its effect if valid.

The first section declares that the state of war is at an end. This declaration is unconditional and complete, and not qualified, as in section 3, by a provision requiring the German Government, in its own behalf and for its nationals, to waive certain claims, demands, rights, and benefits. This being so, the question at once arises as to what effect this unconditional declaration will have on the actions of the United States in seizing property of the German Government and her nationals during the war. The Alien Property Custodian, under an act of Congress, has taken possession of property having a value of over a half billion dollars.

The unratified treaty of peace with Germany contains elaborate provisions in its financial and economic clauses for the adjustment of debts and claims of every kind. In the hearings before the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, during the examination of Mr. Palmer, page 21, appears the following statement of Senator KNOX:

> In response to Mr. Palmer's statement that the alien enemy had no rights, I replied that under international law private property of the alien was always protected until after the hostilities ceased, and then an accounting was made for it. That is a rule of international law, and has been for a hundred years. * * *

On page 22 appears the following:

> Senator SWANSON. I understand your negotiations have obtained the acquiescence of the German Government in Congress disposing of the alien enemy property as it sees proper?
> Mr. PALMER. Yes.
> Senator SWANSON. Is that the result of your negotiations?
> Mr. PALMER. The treaty.
> Senator SWANSON. I mean, is that the result of the treaty, that they will acquiesce in the disposition of alien property as Congress may see proper?
> Mr. PALMER. Yes.
> Senator POMERENE. Is not this the situation as to alien claims? I understand the rule to be with regard to alien property, in international law, as stated by Senator KNOX; but those who were framing this treaty saw fit to insert in the treaty a provision ratifying the acts of the Custodian of Alien Property. Whatever his rights may have been under the general principle of international law, they are more clearly defined by the treaty itself, so that it rests with Congress under this treaty and under the alien property act.
> Mr. PALMER. That is correct.

Articles 23 and 24 of the treaty with Prussia, 1799, are continued in effect by article 12 of the treaty with Prussia, 1828. Article 23 is as follows:

> If war should arise between the two contracting parties, the merchants of either country then residing in the other shall be allowed to remain nine months to collect their debts and settle their affairs and may depart freely, carrying off all their effects without molestation or hindrance; and all women and children, scholars of every faculty, cultivators of the earth, artisans, manufacturers, and fishermen, unarmed and inhabiting unfortified towns, villages, or places, and, in general, all others whose occupations are for the common subsistence and benefit of mankind, shall be allowed to continue their respective employments, and shall not be molested in their persons, nor shall their houses or goods be burnt or otherwise destroyed, nor their fields wasted by the armed force of the enemy, into whose power by the events of war they may happen to fall; but if anything is necessary to be taken from them for the use of such armed force, the same shall be paid for at a reasonable price.

In article 24 of the same treaty is the following:

> and it is declared that neither the pretense that war dissolves all treaties, nor any other whatever, shall be considered as annulling or suspending this and the next preceding article; but, on the contrary, that the state of war is precisely that for which they are provided, and during which they are to be as sacredly observed as the most acknowledged articles in the law of nature and nations.

In the Treatise on International Law by Senator Cushman K. Davis, published in 1901, with an introduction by Senator LODGE, the annotator, Mr. P. J. Healy, added a note on the subject of the effect of war on treaties, which is quite exhaustive and is of special interest at this time. He says (p. 141):

> It must be noted that certain treaties are entered into which provide for the contingency of war and are not abrogated by it. There are also treaties which fix territorial boundaries and property rights upon which war has no effect. * * *
> Treaties of boundary belong to a class of treaties which are regarded by jurists as perpetual in their nature, so that, being once carried into effect, they subsist independently of any change which may supervene in the political circumstances of either contracting party, unless they are mutually revoked. Vattel, Droit des Gens, lib. II, section 292, speaks of compacts which have no relation to the performance of reiterated acts, but merely relate to transient and single acts, which are concluded at once, and suggests that they may be more properly called by another name than that of treaties. Martens (Precis sec. 58) has accordingly proposed to call them transitory conventions, which Wheaton approves. (1 Twiss, sec. 225.)

Mr. Justice Washington, in the case of Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts v. Town of New Haven (8 Wheat., 494) says: "But we are not inclined to admit the doctrine urged at the bar, that treaties become extinguished, ipso facto, by war between two governments, unless they should be revived by an express or implied renewal on the return of peace. * * * There may be treaties of such a nature, as to their object and import, as that war will put an end to them; but where treaties contemplate a permanent arrangement of territorial and other national rights, or which in their terms are meant to provide for the event of an intervening war, it would be against every principle of just interpretation to hold them extinguished by the event of war."

It is said that treaties are perishable things, and their obligations are dissipated by the first hostility. But this is to be understood of treaties that have reference to the pacific relations of the contracting parties, and, even in respect of such treaties, the expression is inaccurate. It is true that their covenants exist only with a state of amity with the confederate states, and that they are necessarily suspended during war, because a state of war is inconsistent with pacific relations and leaves nothing for such treaties to operate upon during its continuance; but since a treaty of peace acts as an act of oblivion in respect of the differences wherein war originated, and of all grievances committed or suffered in prosecution thereof, it necessarily follows that all engagements subsisting between belligerents at the commencement of hostilities are revived by the treaty of peace, so far as they are consistent with its provisions. (Puff. VIII, 9; Wheaton, 494; Vattel IV, sec., 42.) But treaties that have reference to the belligerent relations of the contracting parties are suspended during peace and are brought into operation during war, otherwise they would be wholly unreasonable and inoperative. (Bynk. Q. J. P. II, X; Vattel II, sec. 175; 1 Kent, Comm. p. 165; 1 Wildman, pp. 175, 176.)

The Senate of the United States having under consideration the treaty of Paris, terminating the Spanish War, the question was raised in that body as to the effect of the war on the treaty of 1834, which existed between the United States and Spain. Mr. Davis, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, and author of this work, reported the treaty of 1834 settled a particular fact that, in accordance with that settlement, Spain engaged to pay the United States a certain sum of money, and in a particular manner, thereby acknowledging the obligation to be a part of her national debt, which, according to all the authorities, is never discharged by the event of war. This position indicates that the treaty of 1834 comes under the head of treaties which Vattel and Wheaton denominate "transitory conventions," and may furnish a key to other cases.

The following argument and authorities were, in part, relied on by Senator DAVIS in reaching the above conclusion, though prepared by the annotator of this work:

Do hostilities between two nations abrogate all existing treaties? If not, what treaties revive at the conclusion of peace? These are great questions, on which "doctors disagree"; in fact, most of the international law writers are too general in their treatment of the effect of war on previously existing treaties to remove from the realm of doubt many questions that may arise on the conclusion of peace not specifically provided for in the treaty of peace.

From an examination of the best recognized authorities on the subject I deduce the following conclusion: Treaties of the following character survive a war: Those that relate to and fix a permanent condition of national existence, fix boundaries, etc. Those which determine property rights, either real or personal. Those which contain a final adjustment of a particular question. Those which contain special reference to a subsequent war and provide for their continuation. Those which determine some great international principle. The following are abrogated by war: Treaties of alliance and friendship. Treaties of commerce and navigation. Postal treaties, etc. There is a division of authorities on this question. Those treaties the provisions of which are inconsistent with the new conditions.

Wheaton (p. 381; Boyd's ed.) treats the subject as follows:

"Treaties, properly so called, are those of friendship and alliance, commerce and navigation, which, even if perpetual in terms, expire of course. Treaties fixing boundaries and territorial jurisdiction."

On page 382, Wheaton says:

"Most international compacts, and especially treaties of peace, are of a mixed character and contain articles of both kinds, which renders it frequently difficult to distinguish between those stipulations which are perpetual in their nature and such as are extinguished by war between the contracting parties or by such changes of circumstances as affect the being of either party and thus render the compact inapplicable to the new condition of things. It is for this reason and from abundance of caution that stipulations are frequently inserted in treaties of peace expressly reviving and confirming the treaties formerly subsisting between the contracting parties and contain stipulations of a permanent character or in some other mode excluding the conclusion that the obligation of such antecedent treaties is meant to be waived by either party."

On page 707 of the same work he says:

"The treaty of peace does not extinguish claims founded upon debts contracted or injuries inflicted previously to the war and unconnected with its causes unless there be an express stipulation to that effect."

Lawrence (sec. 167) divides treaties into four classes, the first of which only concerns our case, if it can even fall under that head—"those to which the name 'pacta transitoria' has been given. They are agreements fulfilled by one act or series of acts, which produce by being once performed a permanent effect. Boundary conventions and treaties of cession or recognition are examples. War has no effect upon them."

In the third class he places "conventions for regulating ordinary social, political, and commercial intercourse, such as treaties of commerce and extradition treaties. The effect of war upon instruments of this kind is very doubtful. They are, of course, suspended while war lasts, but it is a much-disputed question whether they revive again at the conclusion of peace or are destroyed by the war and require to be reenacted if they are to come into force when it is over. * * * With these facts before us, we may venture to say that, though no rule can be laid down as undoubted law, it is best to hold on general principles that treaties of the kind we are now considering are merely suspended by war and revive at the conclusion of peace."

Gallaudet (p. 210) says: "The effect of a state of war on treaties depends, naturally, on the character of these contracts. Thus all engagements intended to operate in a state of peace, such as treaties of amity, alliance, and others of a political nature, are definitely terminated. Customs, postal arrangements, conventions for commerce and navigation, agreements regarding private interests, are generally regarded as suspended until termination of hostilities." On page 254 the same author says: "The conclusion of peace does not invalidate engagements made prior to the war, nor does it interfere in any way with the private rights of subjects or sovereigns unless by special stipulation. * * * International conventions, the operation of which has been suspended by the existence of war, resume their force at conclusion of peace, unless they have been modified or abrogated by the terms of the treaty of peace."

Halleck (Int. Law, p. 352) says: "A treaty of peace does not extinguish claims unconnected with the cause of the war. Debts existing prior to the war and injuries committed prior to the war, but which made no part of the reasons for undertaking it, remain entire and the remedies are revived."

"War does not affect the compacts of a nation, except when so provided in such compacts; and except also that executory stipulations in a special compact between belligerents which by their nature are applicable only in time of peace are suspended during the war." (Field Int. Code, sec. 905.)

"All engagements subsisting between belligerents at the commencement of hostilities are revived by a treaty of peace, so far as they are consistent with its provisions." (1 Wildman, Int. Law, p. 175.)

De Martens holds that war abrogates only those treaties the existence of which is incompatible with belligerent relations.

Calvo (vol. 5, sec. 3152) holds that all treaties remain binding, and revive at the conclusion of peace, unless changed by the terms of the treaty of peace or are inconsistent with the new relations.

Wooley (sec. 160, subd. 4) says: "Private rights, the prosecution of which is interrupted by war, are revived by peace, although nothing may be said upon the subject, for a peace is a return to a normal state of things, and private rights depend not so much on concessions, like public ones, as on common views of justice. And here we include not only claims of private persons in the two countries upon one another, but also claims of individuals on the Government of the foreign country and claims—private and not political—of each Government upon the other existing before the war."

Vattel (p. 438) says: "The effect of the compromise or amnesty can not be extended to things which have no relation to the war that is terminated by the treaty. Thus claims founded on a debt or an injury which had been done prior to the war, but which made no part of the reasons for undertaking it, still stand on their former footing, and are not abolished by the treaty, unless it be expressly extended to the extinction of every claim whatever." He further says that the compromise and amnesty relate to their own particular object—that is to say, to the war, its causes, and its effect.

Phillimore (vol. 3) lays down as a general rule that treaties are abrogated by a subsequent war, but recognizes a modification of the rule in this: That a treaty which recognizes a principle and object of permanent policy survives the war. He cites the English rule in support of his position, and in that contention the proposed treaty with France in 1801 and the discussion concerning it in the House of Lords. Lord Grenville, Thurlow, and others supported that view, while the Lord Chancellor Eldon opposed it. The points of admission they had under discussion at the time were, first, the point of honor of the British flag not being asserted, as was settled by the treaty of 1783; second, the stipulation with respect to the gum and logwood trade. It might be observed in this connection that Lord Grenville was foreign minister shortly before this period, and better terms of settlement with France were offered, which the noble lord saw fit to refuse. Pitt was now foreign minister, and it was proposed to discredit his administration of affairs, and a resolution was offered for his expulsion.

The broad principle that all treaties are abrogated by subsequent war has no foundation in fact, and is not supported by authority. The treaty of Utrecht was not renewed in later treaties, and in certain important particulars its binding force was universally accepted. (Phillimore, vol. 3, p. 807.)

Mr. J. Q. Adams says: "The treaty of 1783, so far as concerns boundaries and fisheries and other national privileges and rights, was not abrogated by the War of 1812."

"It can not be necessary to prove that the treaty of 1783 is not, in its general provisions, one of those which, by the common understanding and usage of civilized nations, is or can be considered as annulled by a subsequent war between the same parties. To suppose that it is would imply the inconsistency and absurdity of a sovereign and independent State, liable to forfeit its rights of sovereignty by the act of exercising it on a declaration of war." (Mr. Gallatin to Mr. Rush, quoted in 2 Lyman's Diplomacy, 91.)

War does not by itself abrogate treaties or portions of treaties which vest rights of property. (Society, etc., v. New Haven, 8 Wheat., 464.)

It appears to me a correct conclusion from the foregoing authorities that there can be little dispute about this position, viz, that transitory conventions determining a particular right are continuing in their nature, and are not abrogated by a subsequent war. Such was the nature of our treaties with Spain in 1834 and 1871. By both those treaties Spain acknowledged herself indebted to certain of our subjects in a specific amount and agreed to pay it. That act vested in our people a substantial property right, which was beyond the promisor's power to repudiate. This fact is well recognized by the joint commission in formulating the present treaty of peace. Out of abundance of caution, our commissioners suggested that the revival of certain treaties be specifically provided for, but the Spanish commissioners did not feel justified in entering upon those questions under power of their commissions. The treaty, however, leaves no room for doubt as to the intention of the negotiators regarding the binding force of preexisting debts. See article 7 of the treaty, which reads as follows: "The United States and Spain mutually relinquish all claims for indemnity, national and individual, of every kind, of either Government or of its citizens or subjects against the Government, that may have arisen since the beginning of the late insurrection in Cuba, and prior to the exchange of ratifications of the present treaty, including all claims for indemnity for the cost of the war." The above article certainly indicates the intention of the parties as to preexisting claims and fixes definitely when Spain's responsibilty ceases."

In view of the wording of the treaty with Prussia and the foregoing authorities, especially the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts against the town of New Haven, eighth Wheaton, page 494, it is certain that much confusion and litigation would follow an ending of the war with Germany, without proper provision by treaty for a ratification of all the acts of the United States affecting property of German nationals and for an adjustment of claims of Americans for property seized by Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM W. HASTINGS,
OF OKLAHOMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, April 6, 1920.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, we have gone far afield to-day in discussing many questions of interest to the country. I want to invite attention to the principles of government as outlined in the political creed of Senator ROBERT L. OWEN, of Oklahoma, whom the State tenders to the Nation as its candidate for the Presidency, as follows:

THE POLITICAL CREED OF ROBERT L. OWEN.

"I believe in the Constitution of the United States; in the constitutional rights of the States; in the sovereignty and in the common sense, common honesty, and benevolence of the American people; in the duty of passing laws to make effective the sovereignty of the people and to establish the concrete mechanism through which the conscience and intelligence of the majority shall govern this country; in the rule of the majority honestly arrived at; in a thoroughgoing corrupt-practices act to prevent the corruption or misleading of the electorate, and the abuses of so-called 'machine politics'; in the 'publicity pamphlet,' through which every citizen shall have information edited by the contending parties, directly furnished by the Government, presenting the facts and arguments for and against every candidate and for and against every great public measure upon which the people are invited to pass; in the 'short ballot,' so that the electorate may not be confused by long machine-made 'slates'; in the 'preferential ballot,' which automatically coheres the majority of voters at one election and prevents the successful intrigue of organized minorities under machine-rule methods; in the 'initiative and referendum,' by which the people can initiate any law they do want and veto any law they do not want.

"The right to acquire and hold private property is the great reward which society wisely provides as the best incentive to stimulate human energy, initiative, and thrift. The denial of this right would be ruinous to the productive energy of mankind, lead to disorder, negligence, indifference, poverty, and general want. It would mean Bolshevism and chaos. But the right of property is subordinate to the right to life and liberty; the latter must not be sacrificed to the former.

"I believe in law and order and in the faithful enforcement of the statutes without fear or favor; but I do not believe in sedition laws or other laws under which the liberties of the people or the freedom of the press might be jeopardized or unduly interfered with.

"So long as prohibition represents the will of the majority of the people of the United States, it should be enforced in good faith. I am opposed to the saloon and the liquor traffic.

"I am strongly opposed to a 'wet' plank in the Democratic platform. Members of the Democratic Party widely differ with regard to this subject, and their political cooperation should not be destroyed by the interjection of this question.

"The full powers of the Government should be exercised to promote our domestic and foreign commerce and to liberate and stimulate the processes of production and distribution, a principle well exemplified through the Federal reserve act, the farm-loan act, the agricultural extension act, the good-roads act, and so forth. The foreign and consular services should be put on a thorough business basis.

"I believe in a department of education, in the education of the heart as well as the head, and in adequate salaries for the most important of public servants, the very poorly paid teachers. Ignorance is the mother of poverty, indolence, crime; education creates wealth, industry, civic worth. No State can rise higher than the level of its average individual citizenship. The very life of democracy depends on the physical, mental, moral, and political education of the people.

"The public-health services should be cohered and expanded for the better conservation of human life. Physical training, hygiene, sanitation are vitally necessary to the development of American life. The best evidence in the world has demonstrated that human life could be extended by known preventive processes an average of 14 years per capita in the United States.

"I believe in the political, economic, and moral equality of men and women.

"The legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the United States should each confine itself strictly within its own constitutional limits.

"The United States should be prepared to absorb unemployed labor on the building of good roads, and so forth, that all our people should be kept profitably employed, so there should never be any involuntary unemployment in the United States.

"The conservation and development of all our natural resources and their full use for the benefit of all the people is essential to progress and increased production.

"I believe in the vigorous protection of the rights of American citizens wherever they go on the earth.

"The immediate passage of the treaty of peace and the covenant of the league with such reservations as shall prevent possible misconstruction to our disadvantage is of urgent importance.

"The war measures should be repealed and every meddlesome or unnecessary interference with the liberties of the citizens should be terminated. I am opposed to universal military training or to any processes leading to militarism in the United States.

"The excess-profits tax should be repealed, because the consumers pay all the excess-profits tax plus. The excess-profits tax interferes with the free exchange of property, and interferes therefore with increased production and distribution and acts as a brake on commerce.

"The cost of the war should be distributed over the next half century, and the people of to-day should not be subjected to the extremely heavy taxes necessary to the immediate or very early liquidation of the war debt.

"The Government should control our merchant marine and establish American trade routes and fair freight rates at sea.

"I am in favor of the Tariff Commission, of reciprocity, and in a moderately low tariff adjusted to raise revenue and to afford incidental protection, but in no case to shelter private monopoly.

"The budget system, rigid economy in governmental expenditures, the avoidance of all waste and extravagance, and the employment of the highest standards of modern business are urgently needed.

"The Government should use its good offices in stimulating home building and home ownership.

"The right of labor to fair wages, respectful treatment, reasonable hours, safety, sanitary conditions, collective bargaining, and the right to be represented by counsel of its own choice should not be denied. The pressure of public opinion should be organized and exerted to educate and induce labor and capital to cooperate in the service of the public with mutual good will. Willful tyranny of one group over another group should be restrained.

"Labor, capital, and management are entitled, severally, to a just reward for services rendered, and an adequate mechanism for the settlement of their disputes should be very carefully worked out by conciliation, arbitration, mutual sympathy, and understanding, without coercion, but under which the rights of the public at the same time should be thoroughly safeguarded. Neither labor, capital, nor management will ever reach their highest efficiency if denied just compensation and reasonable conditions.

"The Federal Reserve Board should encourage a uniform 3 per cent rate of interest by the reserve banks to member banks who borrow only a portion of their own reserves, with progressive rates and a check on unduly aggressive borrowers. The control of stock speculation and commodity speculation should not be attempted by raising interest rates, but by raising margins, reducing and refusing loans, if absolutely necessary to restrain the abuse. The rate against short-time Treasury certificates and war bonds should not exceed the interest rate the security bears. Usurious interest rates on collateral call loans should be forbidden as against the public's interest. Stable and low interest rates are of vital importance to increased production and distribution.

"The war bonds can be brought back to par by a judicious policy in regard to interest rates. The high usurious rates of 10, 15, and 20 per cent on call collateral loans in the financial centers causing violent fluctuations in the stock market, the 6 and 7 per cent rate authorized by the reserve board, and the consequent 7 to 9 per cent commercial rates are all unjustified and result in business hesitation and doubt, in depreciating the war bonds, in retarding production, and add greatly to the high cost of living.

"It is the duty of Government to bring these patriotic war bonds back to par and use its good offices in favor of a lower and more stable interest rate.

"The powers of the Government should be exercised firmly and persistently against profiteering and unrestrained private monopoly and against unreasonable profits on turnover, which are among the chief causes of the high cost of living.

"The public must be protected in its own rights against the processes of organized greed to prevent dangerous social unrest. The reduction of the high cost of living is the greatest of all the present public problems. To accomplish it, the people must first in sober truth control the election machinery of the Government; otherwise their representatives, too often nominated and elected by the crafty processes employed by the special interests, will disappoint the people in the substantial remedies required to give relief.

"I believe that progressive and liberal men and women of the Nation must find some method of intelligent cooperation for the protection of the people against the very highly organized special interests engaged in exploiting the people, the producers and consumers, who are politically and commercially unorganized.

"I believe in the spirit of democracy and that they who worship it 'must worship it in spirit and in truth.'"

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM B. McKINLEY,

OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 8, 1920.

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, when our worthy President first conceived his league it was founded upon the 14 commandments as he practiced them at Princeton. He wrapped it carefully in a mantle of secrecy, and when the Ark of the Covenant sailed for France, of the 1,500 disciples no one was taken along who would interfere with his cherubim. When the mantle was unfolded in the presence of Lloyd-George, he took the precious infant to his bosom. By him it was handed over to the doughty South African chieftain to be cared for.

And it was.

When it was again presented to its fond father he did not recognize his child. Freedom of the seas had been turned into a British navy dominating the world. Self-determination meant the friendly Kingdom of Montenegro swallowed up by Serbia. Japan had been given the Pacific Islands that dominate the Philippines, Hawaii, and our western coast. Germany had been left intact, a compact fighting unit. Austria completely scrambled. England had acquired practically all of German South Africa. Armenia and Constantinople had been wished onto the United States. Shantung Province, with its 40,000,000 of population—as great as the population of France—was torn away from friendly China and given to Japan. This stealing of Shantung Province, with its mines and its railroads, from China and giving it to Japan will have the same effect upon China and be of the same benefit to Japan as would the taking of either the State of Pennsylvania or the State of Illinois out of the heart of the United States and handing it over to Japan. The so-called league has as good a moral and legal right to deliver Pennsylvania as they have to deliver Shantung.

A year ago at this time, for 10 days, in an automobile, I rode over the destroyed regions of France and through the thriving German manufacturing towns of the Rhine Valley. Factories in operation in Germany. Silence and desolation in all that part of France that before the war produced one-fourth of the French national income. The feeling in my mind all the time was what a wrong was being done these people. Why was not a peace treaty with Germany signed within 60 days after the armistice? Had this been done, credit could have been extended to these French manufacturers to enable them to restore their factories and give work to their people. After war was legally ended there would have been time enough to work out the scheme of the future peace of the world.

You know the United States never declared war against Germany. The President came before Congress in April, 1917, and told Congress that German submarines were sinking peaceful American merchant ships. He asked Congress to give him the power to use the armed forces of the United States to suppress this outrage. Power was given him, and this condition was brought to an end with the signing of the armistice.

Let us promptly pass this resolution declaring war at an end and then let us offer to cooperate with other nations in the working out of a plan to maintain, so far as possible, the peace of the world.

When the millennium comes we will have no more wars. The millennium is not yet here. Until it arrives, human machinery must do the best it can to prevent war.

It has always seemed to me the organization called the League to Enforce Peace was on the right track. Now that Mr. Wilson appears to have killed his child, I am in hopes that this League to Enforce Peace will get down to earth again and go to work upon their own plan, work it out and present it to Congress and to the people of the United States for their consideration.

In a city the rougher element respect an efficient police force and behave. So do rougher nations. My suggestion is for the United States to maintain an efficient and well-equipped Navy and a well-organized, moderate-sized Army, with a surplus of officers, the country to have conveniently located armories fully stocked with war supplies of every kind. If an emergency arises, the millions of young men will then be in position "to spring to arms," with the arms and the officers ready to receive them. Let us then stand for a system of enforced arbitration between nations, where fighting can come, if ever, after a delay and only as a last resort.

Perhaps we did not all of us always agree with him, but we did respect our late distinguished citizen who advocated a soft step and a big stick.

Taxation of the Federal Land Banks.

SPEECH

OF

HON. DICK T. MORGAN,

OF OKLAHOMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, February 20, 1920.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill H. R. 12610, the legislative, judicial, and executive appropriation bill, making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration is H. R. 12610, known as the "Legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill." The general appropriation bills are not supposed to contain any legislative provisions. In this bill, however, beginning on page 43, there is a provision which is purely legislative.

The legislative provision to which I call attention and to which I most strenuously object is as follows:

Provided, That, beginning with the fiscal year 1921, the Federal Farm Loan Board shall, as soon as possible after the close of each half of each fiscal year, levy upon the Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks, in proportion to their gross assets, an assessment equal to the amounts expended from all appropriations on account of salaries, including any additional compensation, and expenses of the board and its appointees and employees for the half of the fiscal year then closed. The board, in making such assessment, shall assess exclusively against either class of banks such expenses as may be incurred exclusively on behalf of such class. Such assessments shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

This provision has no proper place in this appropriation bill and is clearly subject to a point of order. When it is reached in the reading of the bill I propose to make a point of order against it. While I have no doubt that my point of order will be sustained, I desire to discuss the merits of this provision. My reason for so doing is this: The proviso quoted above is, in substance, identical with the provisions of Senate bill 2377 and H. R. 6861. Both of these bills are on the calendar of the House, and in their regular order they will come before the House for consideration.

Generally speaking, the proviso above quoted and the Senate and House bills above referred to authorize the Federal Farm Loan Board to levy an assessment upon the Federal land banks and the joint stock land banks sufficient in amount to meet the annual expenses of the Federal Farm Loan Board, including the salaries of the four commissioners, the miscellaneous expenses of the board, and the salaries of all its employees.

The Federal Farm Loan Board consists of the Secretary of the Treasury and four commissioners. The commissioners are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. They receive an annual salary of $10,000 each. The total expenses of this board this year were $241,000. The appropriation made in this bill for the next fiscal year for the expenses of this board is $294,000. Under the Federal farm loan act this expense is paid out of the Treasury of the United States. The proviso which I am discussing and the Senate and House bills referred to authorize the levying of a tax upon the 12 Federal land banks and the joint stock land banks sufficient to reimburse the Government for the amount expended in support of the Federal Farm Loan Bureau.

The Federal Farm Loan Bureau is under the Treasury Department. All the appointees, clerks, and employees under this bureau are Government officials or employees. No satisfactory or sufficient reason can be given why the expense of maintaining this bureau should not be borne by the United States in the same manner that the Government bears the expense of all the great departments of the Federal Government.

I do not think that the Appropriations Committee of the House gave this matter the consideration which its importance deserves. I read the hearings on the subject before the Committee on Appropriations. There was no argument made in behalf of this proposition. There is no reason given why such a provision should be made the law. I have examined the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and the reports of the Senate committee which reported Senate bill 2377. The report of the Senate committee on this bill consists of less than 10 lines and less than 100 words. There was no argument presented showing the necessity of the legislation. There was no reason given in its behalf. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows that there was no discussion of the bill when it passed the Senate. The bill was called up and passed without any explanation, without any discussion, without any question being raised as to the propriety of the legislation. The Banking and Currency Committee of the House, in reporting the Senate bill and reporting the House bill, in its reports does in a very brief way attempt to justify the action of the committee, but it seems to me that those who had these propositions under consideration have not realized their importance and do not fully comprehend the effect of this proposed legislation.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the Federal Farm Loan Board itself, and every member of it, is in favor of this provision being made for the purpose of strengthening rather than weakening their institution, and that they ask us to do it and prepared the provision themselves?

Mr. MORGAN. I was not aware that the Federal Farm Loan Board had prepared this provision. I am glad the gentleman has given the House that information. Furthermore, I have read the statements made on this matter before the Appropriations Committee. I submit that while these commissioners did approve the legislation they did not give any reason to support it. I remember their testimony. They did not ask for this legislation. They simply expressed approval of it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Does not the gentleman think that those charged with the official activities of this concern are in sympathy with it?

Mr. MORGAN. I will say that I have heretofore been a strong supporter of the Federal Farm Loan Board but I can not defend, I can not approve, I can not even excuse their action in regard to these propositions. I can not think that the position the members of this board took is consistent with their duty.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Does the gentleman believe that they should be objects of charity and that they should be treated any different from any other institution that is placed on its feet, and that it is perfectly able to take care of itself?

Mr. MORGAN. Does the gentleman mean the land banks or the farmers?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I am speaking about the banks.

Mr. MORGAN. Who are the banks? The Federal land banks are the farmers who borrow through these banks. These banks are simply incorporated borrowers. The borrowers are the only stockholders in the banks.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Absolutely, and does the gentleman think the Federal farm loan banks should be excused from the expense of paying their proper charges, when the building and loan associations that help to provide homes for the poor people of the cities have to pay the expense of their banks?

Mr. MORGAN. I shall not be diverted from my line of discussion. I am not talking about building and loan associations organized under State authority. They are not under discussion. The borrowers from the Federal land banks do pay all the expenses of these banks. The Government does not pay any portion of the expenses of the Federal land banks or joint-stock land banks. The only expense the Government pays is the salaries of the Federal officials at Washington who in behalf of the public supervise these banks. The Federal Farm Loan Bureau is no part of the Federal land banks or the joint-stock land banks. This bureau is composed of Federal officials who represent the public, who act for the public, who safeguard and protect the interests of the public and the Nation at large. And the general public should pay the expense of this bureau and the salaries of all the public officials comprising it. It is true, I admit, that a part of the work of the Federal Farm Loan Bureau is to encourage the extension of the business of these banks, but this is done with a view to the extension and expansion of the great fundamental industry, agriculture. Primarily it is not done in the interests of the farmers. It is done for the benefit of the nonfarming population; it is done for the benefit of the multiplied millions of our citizens who reside in our towns and cities; it is done to strengthen the very fabric of our national edifice.

Any argument which would justify the levying of a special tax upon the borrowers from the Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks to meet the expense of the Federal Farm Loan Bureau would justify the levying of a special tax upon the farmers to pay the entire expense of the Department of Agriculture. It would justify the levying of a special tax upon trade and commerce to meet the expense of the Department of Commerce. It would justify levying a special tax upon labor organizations to meet the cost of the Department of Labor. Therefore if we are to levy a special tax upon the borrowers from the Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks to meet the expense of the Federal Farm Loan Bureau, then the entire expenses of all the great departments and bureaus of this Government should be met by special taxes levied upon the particular interests these various departments serve.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; for another question.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Does the gentleman not think that inasmuch as they have received the sanction of the Federal Government and in a measure the guaranty of the Federal Government, the Federal Government ought to exercise some control over them?

Mr. MORGAN. I do believe that the Federal Government should exercise a supervisory power over these institutions.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. And does the gentleman not think that the Federal control, whatever it is, should be counted as part of the overhead expense?

Mr. MORGAN. I certainly do not think so.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Does the gentleman not think it should become a part of their overhead as the national banks which have to contribute to that overhead expense?

Mr. MORGAN. I am glad the gentleman has mentioned the national banks. They are supervised by the Comptroller of the Currency. Under the Comptroller of the Currency there is a bureau which costs the Government annually something like $200,000. The very bill now under consideration makes appropriations for the Comptroller of the Currency and the bureau under him. This bureau supervises the national banks of this country in exactly the same manner that the Federal Farm Loan Bureau supervises the Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks. For more than half a century the Federal Government has been paying the salaries of the Comptroller of the Currency and the Federal clerks and employees in his bureau. Tens of millions of dollars have been paid out of the National Treasury for the supervision, regulation, and control of the national banks. These institutions have multiplied in number. They have paid large dividends to their stockholders. They have annually added to their surplus until it equals their aggregate capital. We now have in round numbers 8,000 national banks. Their capital, surplus, and undivided profits amount to $2,494,050,000. They paid dividends last year above 12 per cent. The owners of these banks have grown rich. They represent the money power of this country. But no one has proposed that the expenses of the Comptroller of the Currency and the bureau under him shall be met by a special tax levied upon the national banks. Behold the change! Slightly over three years ago 12 Federal land banks came into existence. They are still in an undeveloped condition; they have hardly started business. They are not organized for profit; they are cooperative institutions. Outside of the temporary capital furnished by the Government, which is being rapidly returned to the Government, they have no capital except that which is furnished by the borrowers.

These banks have no income except what is paid by the borrowers; no one except the borrowers pays a single cent in the treasury of these banks. They are altruistic in their nature and purpose. They serve a great national purpose. The borrowers from these banks, who are owners of all their capital, are not our rich farmers. They are, comparatively speaking, the poor farmers of our country. Every one of them has his farm mortgaged. The mortgage generally equals 60 per cent of the value of the farm and improvements. These men are struggling under a debt which will require them and their families a lifetime of labor, toil, and sacrifice to liquidate. These are the men and women and children upon whom you propose to levy this special and unjust tax. The national banks with all their capital, with all their accumulated wealth, with all their power to take profits and levy tribute upon the great commercial and industrial interests, are to be supervised, regulated, and controlled at the expense of the National Government. But you propose that the Federal land banks, whose stock is owned exclusively by farmers, whose farms are mortgaged, should be taxed to pay the expenses of Federal supervision. Is this House ready to make this unjust discrimination in favor of the national banks and against the banks which serve the farmers? Will the Congress of the United States be guilty of this unjust discrimination? I sincerely hope not.

I know that when national banks are examined they are required to pay a fee for that examination, but this charge covers only the cost of that examination. There is no levy or assessment upon the national banks to pay the salary of the Comptroller of the Currency or the expense of the bureau operating under him. The expense of this bureau which is devoted to the supervision of the national banks is now, and always has been, paid from the Treasury of the United States without any contribution from the national banks.

PROPOSED ARGUMENTS IN FAVOR OF THIS SPECIAL TAXATION.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. I yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. Is not the Federal Farm Loan Board similar to the Federal Reserve Board?

Mr. MORGAN. In some respects.

Mr. McFADDEN. Is it not a fact that the 12 Federal reserve banks pay the expenses of the Federal Reserve Board, and is not this a similar situation?

Mr. MORGAN. I am glad the gentleman asked this question, and I will answer it. I will point out the difference between the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Farm Loan Board. I will show that the law which provides for the payment of the Federal Reserve Board is not in any way a precedent for levying a tax upon the Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks to pay the expense of the Federal Farm Loan Board. The Federal reserve act created the Federal Reserve Board located at the National Capital. It created 12 Federal reserve banks. The Federal Reserve Board was given a large degree of control over the 12 Federal reserve banks. The national banks, in effect, were required to provide capital for the 12 Federal reserve banks. The Federal reserve act did authorize the Federal Reserve Board to levy an assessment upon the 12 Federal reserve banks sufficient to pay the expense of the Federal Reserve Board.

It was, no doubt, this provision that gave rise to the proposition which we now have before us to make the Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks pay the expense of the Federal Farm Loan Board, but the two cases are not at all similar. Here is the reason: The Federal reserve act limited the dividends which the Federal reserve banks could pay to their stockholders to 6 per cent per annum. These banks, after setting aside the proper amount for reserve accounts and paying 6 per cent dividends, were required to pay the balance of their earnings into the Treasury of the United States. The United States appropriated to its own use all the earnings of these banks in excess of the legal surplus and the 6 per cent dividend. The United States, therefore, neither gained anything nor lost anything by requiring the Federal reserve banks to pay the expenses of the Federal Reserve Board. If this assessment was not levied upon the Federal reserve banks, they would have that much additional money to turn into the Treasury of the United States. As a matter of fact, this provision in the Federal reserve act is to-day a dead letter. It does not take anything away from the Federal reserve banks or lessen the profits or earnings of the stockholders of the said banks. It does not save the United States anything; it does not lessen in any degree the expenditures of the United States. The situation with the Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks is entirely different. The joint-stock land banks are profit-sharing institutions, and the capital is furnished by private parties, but all the net earnings of these institutions go to the shareholders. There is no limit to the dividend that they may pay. The borrowers furnish the capital for the Federal land banks.

These Federal land banks are nonprofit-sharing institutions. The officers and employees of these banks are not owners of any of the stock in the banks. They are not in any way interested in the amount of dividends declared by these banks. Technically speaking, the Federal land banks do declare dividends and pay these dividends to their stockholders, but as a matter of fact it is not a dividend in the real sense of the term, for when these institutions pay dividends it means that they are returning to the stockholders the overcharge which they have been making in interest rates. These banks have no money except that which is paid to them by borrowers. When these banks have a surplus above their administrative expenses it means that the borrowers have paid too high a rate of interest, and under the law this amount is returned to them in the form of dividends. But these dividends represent an overcharge. If therefore Congress shall enact a law authorizing the levying of an assessment upon the Federal lands banks to pay the expenses of the Federal Farm Loan Board, Congress is thereby authorizing the Federal Farm Loan Board to levy an additional tax upon the borrowers from these institutions, because borrowers alone are shareholders in these banks; borrowers alone pay the expenses of the banks; borrowers alone are entitled to have returned to them in the form of dividends any surplus contribution they have made to provide for the running expenses of these banks.

Therefore, the provision in the Federal reserve act which authorizes the Federal Reserve Board to levy an assessment upon the Federal reserve banks to meet the expenses of the Federal Reserve Board is not a precedent for authorizing the Federal Farm Loan Board to levy an assessment upon the Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks to pay the expenses of the Federal Farm Loan Board.

The supporters of this proposition assert that the Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks would be in a stronger position before the public if they are required to pay the expenses of the Federal Farm Loan Board. The idea is this: Certain interests are carrying on a campaign trying to induce Congress to repeal the provision of law which exempts the farm-loan bonds issued by these banks from taxation. It is asserted that if the Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks will submit to a special taxation sufficient to pay the expenses of the Federal Farm Loan Board, that this will place these banks in a stronger position to resist the campaign to repeal the law, which exempts the bonds of these banks from taxation. This seems to be the idea of the Federal Farm Loan Board. It is one of the arguments presented to me by the advocates of these bills. Now, there is nothing at all in this argument. The provision of law which exempts the bonds of the Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks from taxation should stand or fall on its merits. It is either right or it is wrong. If it is wrong, it should be repealed; if it is right, it should remain the law. As a friend of the Federal land banks, I am ready to meet this question squarely and fairly whenever it is presented, but I am not willing to consent that the borrowers from the Federal land banks, who are the owners of all the stock in these banks and who contribute every cent of money that these banks have or can possibly possess, shall submit to a special tax which I regard as wholly unwarranted and unjustified.

FEDERAL LAND BANKS CAN NOT MAKE MONEY.

Another argument presented is that the Federal land banks are now making money and are able to pay this tax. Whoever makes this assertion does not comprehend the nature and character of the Federal land banks. The Federal land banks can not make money. They have no way of making money. They are not money-making institutions. They are not organized, nor are they operated for profit. They are cooperative institutions. The borrowers of these banks are the owners of the banks. No one can secure a loan from these banks except he becomes a stockholder therein. If at the end of the year there is a surplus in the treasury of these banks, it means that the borrowers have paid in more than was necessary for the operation of their own bank, and under the law the surplus accumulated is to go back to the borrowers from whom it came. The surplus in these banks does not come from the public; it does not come from contribution by the Government; it does not come from profits made through any business transaction; it is simply an extra assessment that the borrowers themselves have paid into the treasury of these banks. No one is therefore justified in asking that these Federal land banks shall submit to a special tax on the ground that they are making money. They are not making money; they can not make money; they are not money-making institutions.

UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that this legislative proposal, if enacted into law, would be unconstitutional. The Federal land-bank act, approved July 17, 1916, created 12 Federal land banks. The law fixed the terms and conditions upon which borrowers could secure loans from these banks. About 100,000 borrowers have accepted those terms and conditions and secured loans through these Federal land banks. Congress, of course, could amend the law so as to change the terms and conditions upon which loans in the future may be secured by borrowers, but Congress can not change the terms and conditions upon loans heretofore secured. Under the terms of the Federal land-bank act, every borrower was required, through the farm-loan associations, to subscribe to the capital stock of the Federal land banks in an amount equal to 5 per cent of the loan he secured. No one would contend that Congress would have the constitutional power to pass a law now which would require these borrowers to subscribe an additional 5 per cent of their loans to increase the capital stock of these banks. Under the Federal land bank act the surplus earnings of the Federal land banks is required to be paid in dividends to the stockholders of these banks. That law is a part of the contract which the stockholders of these banks entered into. Congress can not now change the law applicable to those who have heretofore secured loans and taken stock in these Federal land banks. The United States can not appropriate to its use the surplus earnings of those banks without the consent of the borrowers who are stockholders in these banks. If Congress could take any part of this surplus without the consent of these borrowers, obviously it could take all of it.

This surplus under the law under which these contracts and loans have been made is the property of the shareholders in these banks. Congress can not take this property away from these shareholders without their consent. Article V of the Constitution of the United States declares that no one shall "be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." Section 10 of Article I of the Constitution forbids any State from passing any "ex post facto law or law impairing the obligation of contracts." This proposed legislation is in the nature of an ex post facto law, which is forbidden under the Constitution of the United States. It clearly impairs the contracts which these borrowers under the law have made with these banks. It clearly changes the terms and conditions of contracts these men have entered into. This proposed law not only clearly violates the constitutional and legal rights of the stockholders in these Federal land banks but it clearly violates the moral obligations of the United States. To my mind the proposition is clearly obnoxious to the principles of sound morality. Even if the United States has the legal right to impose it, it has no moral right to do so.

THE AMOUNT OF THE TAX.

Strange to say, one of the arguments used by the proponents of this proposed legislation is that the amount is small and would not be felt by borrowers from the Federal land banks and the joint-stock land banks. But if a tax of $300,000 a year upon the borrowers from these banks would not be felt by 100,000 borrowers, certainly then the amount is too small to be felt by 110,000,000 people of the United States. As the law stands now this $300,000 a year for the support of the Federal Farm Loan Board is paid by all the people of the United States. If the amount is too small to be considered by the borrowers, certainly the placing of this burden upon these borrowers will not afford any appreciable relief to the taxpayers of the entire country. But the amount of the tax is not, after all, the main thing in issue. The principle involved is the question. If the proposed tax is wrong in principle, then it ought not to be levied, however small and infinitesimal it may be.

APPROVAL OF THE FEDERAL FARM LOAN BOARD.

Mr. Chairman, I am aware that the Federal Farm Loan Board in its late annual report approves the proposal to authorize the levying of a special tax upon the Federal land banks and the joint-stock land banks sufficient to pay the expenses of the Federal Farm Loan Bureau. The farm-loan commissioners in their report do not, however, present any arguments in favor of this proposition. They do not give any reasons why this radical change should be made. I have talked with a number of the Federal farm-loan commissioners about this proposition. They have not given me any reason which to my mind justifies the position they take. I have had great confidence in the members of the Federal Farm Loan Board. I have given them cordial and enthusiastic support. I regret exceedingly the position they have taken in this matter. But, Mr. Chairman, the members of the Federal Farm Loan Board do not speak for the farmers of the United States. They are not authorized to speak for the men who have their farms mortgaged to the Federal land banks and to the joint-stock land banks. Their commissions do not come from the farmers of the United States. The farmers who have secured loans from the Federal land banks and the joint-stock land banks have not authorized these farm-loan commissioners to speak for them. The Federal farm-loan commissioners, in my judgment, have underestimated the importance of this proposition. Apparently they look upon it as an insignificant proposition. They seem to think that the levying of $300,000 annually upon the borrowers from the Federal land banks and the joint-stock land banks is an item hardly worth mentioning. They do not seem to think there is anything wrong in the principle underlying the proposition. They do not seem to recognize that this proposition, if enacted into law, is a discrimination against the farmers of the United States. For one, I deny that the Federal farm-loan commissioners are authorized to speak for the farmers of the United States on this matter. I submit that the farm-loan commissioners, before approving this matter, should have submitted it to the borrowers from the Federal land banks and the joint-stock land banks. These commissioners had no right to consent to the levying of $300,000 a year taxes upon these borrowers without consulting the borrowers about it. The borrowers had a right to be consulted about it. It matters not how large or how small this tax is to be, it should not be levied upon these borrowers without their consent.

Mr. Chairman, I am deeply in earnest in this matter. I have been a Member of this House for more than 11 years. I have sought every opportunity to aid the farmers of the United States. I do this, first, as a matter of justice to our farmers, and, second, to promote agricultural development in the interest of those engaged in other industries and for the general welfare. I contributed in every way in my power to secure the passage of legislation which would give our farmers better credit facilities and lower rates of interest. I believed this was a practical way to help both our farmers and the Nation. It required several years of effort to secure the passage of the Federal land-bank act. It became a law July 17, 1916. It is only in its infancy. It is still more or less an experiment. Certain interests opposed this legislation. The same interests are still opposed to it. They would like to see it fail. The friends of the system should be on their guard. Every proposal to amend this law should be carefully considered. One of the essentials to make this new farm-credit system a success is economical administration. These banks will have no money except what they receive from farmers who borrow from them. All costs of administration will be paid by borrowers. I am therefore opposed to assessing these banks to pay the salaries of Government officers and employees. It will add just that much to the expenses of administering these banks and take that much more from the pockets of the borrowers. Bear in mind the borrowers pay all the expenses of the Federal land banks and the joint stock banks. It costs now $1,500,000 to operate the 12 Federal land banks. All of this expense is now paid by the borrowers. We can not ask them to do more than this. To do so would be, as I view it, a gross injustice, which I do not believe the Congress of the United States will perpetrate.

Peace Resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY J. STEELE,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 8, 1920.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, the ultimate object and end of war is peace, and all will agree that it is the duty of belligerents to make war fulfill this object as quickly as a just and honorable peace can be obtained. No dissent will be made to this as a general proposition, but, nevertheless, the fact is that few public acts have provoked more bitterness and rancor among the people than the exercise of the treaty-making power. Even the saintly Washington was made to suffer in this regard in negotiating the British treaty of 1794, commonly known as the Jay treaty. In view of our present experience, it may be interesting to recall that occasion. The refusal of Great Britain to observe several of the obligations imposed by the definitive treaty of peace signed in Paris in 1783 produced a hostile feeling, increased by Great Britain's continued insistence of the right of search and impressment, which, in the winter of 1793, actually threatened war. On April 7, 1794, a proposal was made in Congress, in accordance with a recommendation made by Secretary of State Jefferson, for retaliatory legislation to prohibit all commercial intercourse with England after November 1, 1794, unless before that date she should give pledge to observe the treaty. Before the resolution passed, however, Washington, who feared the result of such an enactment, intervened and on April 16 sent to the Senate the nomination of Chief Justice John Jay as a special ambassador to negotiate a treaty adjusting the difficulties.

The House nonintercourse resolution was then defeated in the Senate by the casting vote of Vice President Adams. Jay reached London June 15 and on November 19 signed a treaty, but owing to the slowness of communication it did not reach Washington until March 7, 1795. A special session of the Senate was called for June 8 following, and on that date the treaty was laid before the Senate in executive session. It was ratified June 24 by a vote of 20 to 10, a strict party vote. Washington withheld the contents of the treaty from the public until some time after it was ratified. Before its terms were officially made public on July 2 its text was published from a copy furnished by a Senator to an anti-Federalist organ in Philadelphia. An outbreak of public wrath and denunciation followed such as has seldom occurred in the history of our country. Jay was burned in effigy from Massachusetts to Georgia and both he and Washington were declared to have been bought with British gold. Impeachment of Washington was even suggested and the attacks were of such a character as to draw from him the protest that they were "so exaggerated and indecent as could scarcely be applied to a Nero or even a common pickpocket."

In the Memoirs of John Quincy Adams (vol. 7, p. 427), he states that Senator Crawford told him that Washington went to the Senate with a draft of a treaty; that—

> They debated it and proposed alterations, so that when Washington left the Senate Chamber he said he would be damned if he ever went there again. And ever since that time treaties have been negotiated by the Executive before submitting them to the consideration of the Senate.

At the termination of the war between Spain and the United States in 1898, a peace protocol was signed on August 12, wherein it was provided that the final treaty should be made by a commission to meet at Paris not later than October 1. The representatives of the United States were William R. Day, Senator Cushman K. Davis, Senator William P. Frye, Whitelaw Reid, and Senator George Gray. It will be observed that a majority of this commission was composed of Senators, two from the majority and one from the minority. After prolonged discussion and threatened failure, the treaty was signed December 10. Notwithstanding the composition of the commission the treaty encountered intense opposition and ratification was barely accomplished on February 6, 1899. Even treaties made in times of profound peace have led to the same results. Thus, the Canadian reciprocity treaty, negotiated during the administration of President Taft, led to bitter opposition in both countries and to the popular defeat of the Canadian Government which approved it.

From these and many other instances that might be cited, it is plain that the people have always been jealous of new features of government or policy incorporated in treaties with foreign powers.

It may be contended that the same power which has a right to declare war has the inherent power to terminate war, and thereby virtually conclude a treaty of peace.

This would seem to be a logical conclusion were it not for the fact that the declaration of war is usually the act of a single nation, while the framing of treaties of peace is usually preceded by a series of negotiations and requires the concurrence of one or more nations. Because of this it sometimes happens that the power of making peace is committed to a body of men who have not the power to declare war. Each nation can provide its own procedure upon the subject. (1 Kent, 166.)

Where, however, a nation is governed by a written Constitution, the answer to such a contention depends upon where that Constitution has committed the power. Our Constitution declares that the Government shall consist of legislative, executive, and judicial powers. Article 1, dealing with the legislative power, declares that Congress shall have power "to declare war, to raise and support armies" and "to provide and maintain a navy," and "to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces." Article 2, dealing with the executive power, declares that "the President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States," and that he shall have power "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur." In considering the proper interpretation of these various provisions, it must not be forgotten that the Government of the United States is a limited government with certain enumerated powers; that it is not a Government of universal authority but that its authority is specific, confined to certain described subjects and relations which the Constitution itself denominates its "powers" and to one or more of which powers all its acts must be referred. These express powers are described in general terms, for the details of legislation can not be foreseen and therefore are impossible of enumeration. At the end of the enumeration of legislative powers, Congress is given authority to make all laws "which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof."

The laws are not to be all such laws as the Congress may in its discretion deem necessary and proper; nor are they to be only such laws as are indispensably necessary to the exercise of a specific power, and without which the power must remain dormant. They are to be laws which are necessary and proper for carrying into execution the various specific powers of the Government or some one of its branches, which powers are vested in the Government by the Constitution. That is to say, the law by which a specific power is to be exercised must bear the relation of means to an end; must be appropriate as a means to the attainment of the object of the specific power, or, in other words, it must execute the power, and not be something which bears a remote, fanciful, indirect, or incomplete relation to that power. A century ago Chief Justice Marshall, in a construction of this clause of the Constitution, laid down the elements which go to make up an implied power, which is now generally accepted by men of all parties. These elements are of a threefold character: First, the law must not be prohibited; second, the means chosen for the execution of an express power must be plainly adapted to that end; and, third, it must be consistent with both the letter and spirit of the Constitution. Let us now apply this great rule of interpretation. There is a legislative power to declare war and to raise and support an army and navy. Would an act to end war execute either of these powers? War is a contest between nations carried on by force and with arms. To declare war is to officially or formally announce the date of the outbreak of hostilities. To end war is to terminate hostilities.

Is the power to terminate hostilities necessary and appropriate to the execution of the power to declare the outbreak of hostilities? In the 130 years of the existence of this Government this is the first attempt to end war by legislative act. Neither the convention which framed the Constitution nor other authorities upon the subject sanction such a view:

> The declaration of a state of war is an enactment by the legislative branch of the Government; the creation of laws is a function that belongs exclusively to the same department; but when a law exists or the state of war exists it is for the President, by virtue of his Executive office and of his position as Commander in Chief to employ the Army and Navy, and the militia actually called into the service of the United States, in the execution of the law, or the prosecution of hostilities, as he may think proper. * * *
> The power to make treaties, which had been given to the Senate by the committee of detail and which was afterwards transmitted to the President to be exercised with the advice and consent of two-thirds of the Senators present, was thus modified on account of the changes which the plan of government had undergone and which have been previously explained. The power to declare war having been vested in the whole Legislature, it was necessary to provide the mode in which war was to be terminated. As the President was to be the organ of communication with other Governments, and as he would be the general guardian of the national interests, the negotiation of a treaty of peace and of all other treaties was necessarily confided to him. (Curtis, Const. History, 578–9.)

In the report of the committee of detail of the Federal convention which framed the Constitution, the clause was "to make war." In Elliott's Debates, volume 5, page 439, appears the following:

> Mr. Madison and Mr. Gerry moved to insert "declare," striking out "make," war, leaving to the Executive the power to repel sudden attacks. Mr. Sherman thought it stood very well. The Executive should be able to repel and not to commence war. "Make" is better than "declare," the latter narrowing the power too much.
> Mr. Gerry never expected to hear in a republic a motion to empower the Executive alone to declare war.
> Mr. ELLSWORTH. There is a material difference between the cases of making war and making peace. It should be more easy to get out of war than into it. War, also, is a simple overt declaration; peace attended with intricate and secret negotiations.
> Mr. Mason was against giving the power of war to the Executive, because not safely to be trusted with it, or to the Senate, because not so constructed as to be entitled to it. He was for clogging rather than facilitating war; but for facilitating peace. He preferred "declare" to "make."
> On the motion to insert "declare" instead of "make," it was agreed to. Connecticut voted in the negative; but on the remark by Mr. King that "make" war might be understood to conduct it, which was an Executive function, Mr. Ellsworth gave up his objection, and the vote was changed to aye. * * *
> On the motion for adding "and peace" after "war," it was unanimously negatived.
> From this it is clear that the convention narrowed the war power of Congress. It changed its power "to make war" to "to declare war," and refused to add after the word "war" the words "and peace." Peace is, of course, the end of war, and having expressly withheld the power to declare peace it necessarily withheld the power to declare the end of war.

Not only was the legislative power to end war expressly withheld by the convention and not necessary to the execution of any express power, but it is inconsistent with another power specifically conferred. I refer to the treaty-making power above cited. In the convention it was attempted to insert in this clause a provision that peace treaties should require only the concurrence of a majority of the Senate, but this amendment was defeated and peace treaties were placed upon an equality in this regard with all other treaties.

It may therefore be said that whether war be ended by conquest, mere cessation of hostilities, armistice, protocol, or surrender, all of these means may be called simply an inchoate treaty of peace, which becomes perfect upon the exchange of the ratifications of the final treaty of peace. If Congress by legislative act can end war, it could ignore the constitutional provision that treaties should be made by the President and Senate. If peace is already obtained, how can the President negotiate a treaty of peace? Peace treaties have the element of duress on the part of the conqueror in war, but this element is surrendered by the ending of the war. Thereafter the former belligerents are compelled to negotiate treaties upon the basis of amity. In its legal aspects a treaty is a compact made between two or more independent nations with a view to the public welfare. In its essence it is a contract. It differs from an ordinary contract only in being an agreement between independent States instead of private parties.

Again, in the pending resolution the war is specifically and unconditionally declared at an end. Prior to the war the United States had negotiated certain treaties with Germany. What effect, therefore, does the declaration of war and peace produce on these treaties, which bound the contracting parties at the moment of the rupture of their pacific relations? Are these treaties wholly annulled in strict law, or do some of their provisions fall while others remain in force? The solution of these questions depends naturally upon the character of the engagements contracted. Thus all are agreed in admitting the rupture of conventional ties concluded expressly with a view to a state of peace; of those whose special object is to promote relations of harmony between nation and nation, such as treaties of amity, of alliance, and other acts of the same nature having a political character. As to customs and postal arrangements, conventions of navigation and commerce, and agreements relative to private interests, they are generally considered as suspended till the cessation of hostilities. By necessary consequence, it is a principle that every stipulation written with reference to war, as well as all clauses described as perpetual, preserve, in spite of the outbreak of hostilities, their obligatory force so long as the belligerents have not by common accord annulled them or replaced them with others. (Moore's Digest Int. Law, vol. 5, p. 385; 8 Wheat., 464.)

Without any new or repugnant provisions in the shape of a new treaty, the old treaties with Germany will revive at the passage of this resolution. If, then, Germany refuses to yield these rights and submit to the embargo provided in the resolution, we will be in the position of being compelled to meet these claims, and in addition losing all prospects of future trade with that country. She will then simply stand upon her rights under the old treaties and many complications will result.

In the preamble to the resolution it is stated that the President has advised the Congress that the war "with the Imperial German Government has ended." In the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, filed December 15 last, sustaining the war-time prohibition act, the statement of the President to Congress on the occasion of the signing of the armistice "the war thus comes to an end" was held not to be a legal termination of the war. The court then said:

> In the absence of specific provisions to the contrary, the period of war has been held to extend to the ratification of the treaty of peace or the proclamation of peace. (Hijo v. United States, 194 U. S., 315, 323; The Protector, 12 Wall., 700, 702; United States v. Anderson, 9 Wall., 56, 70.) In the first-named case, growing out of the War with Spain, where actual hostilities were suspended by the protocol of August 12, 1898, the court said: "A state of war did not in law cease until the ratification in April, 1899, of the treaty of peace."

In discussing this resolution the Philadelphia Inquirer, the leading Republican newspaper in Pennsylvania, after referring to the necessity for repealing war-time legislation, well says:

> Leaving these matters aside, however, it must be confessed that the situation which induces Congress to take action is a wretched one. In the first place, the constitutionality of the resolution is dubious, and it may be taken for granted that the President will veto it and send it back to Congress, where the probability of its receiving the necessary two-thirds majority to pass it over the veto is decidedly shaky. Again, we are accepting, or are insisting that Germany shall grant us, all the benefits contained in the treaty of Versailles, the very treaty which we refuse to ratify.
> That is a mighty humiliating position for a great Nation such as the United States to occupy. The adoption of the resolution with the approval of the President would necessitate the making of a separate peace with Germany, an intricate process, which could not fail to involve us in many difficulties and bring about many complications with our late associates in the war.

Time forbids further discussion of the condition of uncertainty that would follow the adoption of this resolution. It would leave the rights of property of American citizens in Germany unsettled, as well as our status in taking over the property of alien enemies in this country. We have also taken over millions of dollars worth of German ships, and our acts in this regard would also remain unsettled. In concluding a treaty of peace the powers pledge themselves to regard as settled not only all their differences existing before the war and leading to it, but also all such mutual claims as may have arisen during the war in connection with the conduct of hostilities. These advantages we will lose in the adoption of this resolution. I yield to no one in my sincere desire for peace at the earliest possible moment, but I can not assent to it at the sacrifice of American rights and by an unconstitutional method leading to more chaos than exists at present.

Army Reorganization Bill—A Separate Organization for Aviation.

SPEECH

OF

HON. HUBERT F. FISHER,

OF TENNESSEE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, March 8, 1920.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12775) to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Chairman, the very elaborate discussion and investigation made by the subcommittee on aviation of the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department is quite fresh in the minds of the Members of the House. I take it for granted that the reorganization bill of the Army, in so far as it relates to the Air Service, will now be of special interest, for it is vital at this time to take a forward step in matters dealing with aviation that we may profit by the experiences of the war.

The Committee on Military Affairs has provided for a separate corps for the Air Service. Under the national defense act the Air Service was placed under the Signal Corps, but during the recent war it was made a separate organization. No one considered at all the proposition of returning to the former arrangement, for the development of aviation during the war was so great and the part it played in winning the war is so clear to everyone that it naturally placed itself because of that development and war service into a corps of its own.

It has been attempted to be shown that since the armistice the War Department and the present administration have permitted the Air Service to stagnate. Such a charge is unjust and is not warranted by the facts. It has been, of course, necessary to reduce the number of officers and men to a more nearly peace basis and to cut expenses everywhere, because the burden of taxation is now so heavy that the activities in aviation had to be curtailed, just as all Government activities are being curtailed. However, in so far as the directing personnel of the present Air Service organization is concerned, the War Department, through the Secretary of War, has shown most excellent judgment.

Where is the person who can justly criticize the selection of Maj. Gen. C. T. Menoher as Director of the Air Service? It must be recognized that we are dealing with a unit of the War Department coordinate with the Infantry, Cavalry, and Artillery, and it is not an organization of the air activities of all the different departments of the Government. He is an Army officer who had a most efficient record before we entered the war. He commanded the Forty-second or Rainbow Division from December, 1917, to November 10, 1918, during which time that division participated in many engagements with the enemy, and the record made by that division is known to every Member of the House. Gen. Menoher has been given many war decorations for his distinguished service. A list of these decorations is interesting and is as follows: Distinguished service medal, Victory medal with five clasps, Croix de Guerre with palm, Legion of Honor (commander grade), and Order of King Leopold of Belgium (commander). There is not an officer in our Army to-day who knows more vividly than does he what a tragedy it was for our Army not to have had a full quota of all kinds of aeroplanes to aid in winning the war, for his division was constantly participating in engagements with the enemy when our troops had little protection from the air.

As Director of Military Aeronautics the Secretary of War designated Brig. Gen. William Mitchell, who is one of the best qualified flyers of the entire Army. At the time he was trained to fly the War Department was of the opinion that only those close around 20 years of age would make successful flyers, but notwithstanding he had passed that age he quickly qualified as a flyer. He qualified as junior military aviator under the rigid regulations fixed by the War Department under the terms of the national-defense act. Later he was made a military aviator for distinguished services against the enemy. His record demonstrates that the administration selected for this important post an officer who was essentially a fighting aviator. He was on the front a few days after war was declared by our Nation. He was the first American officer to fly over the German lines; he commanded the air service of the First Army at the Battle of St. Mihiel and commanded the air service of the Third Army that advanced into Germany after the armistice. His distinguished service during the war has been recognized by this country and our Allies. A list of his war decorations is given as follows: Distinguished service cross, distinguished service medal, French war cross, commander of the French Legion of Honor, and the British Order of St. Michael and St. George. Those who would like to criticize and find fault with the judgment of the Secretary of War are very hard to please if they find fault with the selection of these two very distinguished officers as directing heads of the Air Service as organized since the armistice.

The decline in the Air Service since the armistice, whatever it may be, is chargeable largely to a lack of money to carry out the program recommended by the experienced officers in charge and also to the fact that there has been and still is considerable uncertainty as to what action Congress would take in the matter of legislation providing for the future policy of Congress toward the general subject of aviation. The separate corps for the Air Service provided in the Army reorganization bill is undoubtedly a move for a more satisfactory handling of aviation in the Army, but there still rests a responsibility on Congress to take a further step forward toward creating an organization separate from the War and Navy Departments, which will have as its object the promotion and development of aviation from every standpoint. Many of those who have most carefully studied the question believe firmly that there should be created a separate and distinct department of the Government and that anything short of this will be a limitation on the development. It is interesting to read the testimony of those who so strongly urge a separate department. Mr. Benedict Crowell, the Assistant Secretary of War, has given the matter most careful study, and was designated by the Secretary of War to select a number of associates to visit Europe to get all the information possible on the development of aircraft and the plans of other Governments, and to lay before any committee of Congress dealing with aviation a full report of the investigation. The Crowell commission recommends "the concentration of the air activities of the United States—military, naval, and civilian—within the direction of a single Government agency created for the purpose, coequal in importance with the Departments of War, Navy, and of Commerce."

The commission visited England, France, and Italy and held conferences with such leaders as Marshal Foch, Gen. Duval, Hon. Winston Churchill, Field Marshal Haig, and many others who had had experience in the development and direction of aviation in those countries.

After Mr. Crowell fully presented to the subcommittee on aviation the needs for a separate department there was a considerable amount of testimony presented which made it apparent that many Army and Naval officers thought it unwise to create a separate department of the Government, thus taking the Air Service units out of the War and Navy Departments. In an effort to reach a middle ground where the general field of aviation could and would be encouraged and benefited Mr. Crowell very clearly analyzed the views which had been presented. He said:

Going a little further into the matter it is perfectly evident that although a good many of the opinions may not be easily reconciled, on many points at least 90 per cent of all the opinion agrees. In grouping the instances under this heading, at least 90 per cent of all the testimony would agree that a department for civilian aviation should be established. That is work which at the present time is not covered by any existing department and can not well be covered except by a separate, independent department. The functions of that department have been described and I will not attempt to go into them.

The next thing on which there is practical agreement is that the division of production and procurement is necessary and should be centralized in a separate organization. Here is a large amount of duplication as things have existed, and that can be avoided by the consolidation of those activities in one department.

* * * * * * *

My next item would cover the subject of engineering and design common to all aviation. That should be in that separate department by common consent. Ninety per cent of the opinion favors that. It avoids much duplication going on to-day. Engineering and design that is specialized could well be handled by the special departments as it is to-day.

Another of the functions of that department of aviation, on which there is, I think, a universality of opinion to-day, is that the Army and the Navy and the Post Office Department should operate with their own men those planes that are closely connected with their own service in which they are specialists. That would cover, of course, observation planes for the Army and Navy, and there is, of course, no duplication there by allowing them to retain that function. They should also train their own men for this special work. The special training should be given by each of these special departments, and the specialized engineering should, of course, also be done by the special departments.

We have, then, a practical agreement on all those points to-day, leaving only two points on which there is a great difference of opinion. One of those two points is the matter of teaching men to fly. We have separate departments to-day teaching men the same thing, because flying is the same, whether they fly in the Navy or in the Army. By teaching them to fly, I mean teaching them to maintain themselves in the air. I see no reason why that should not be in one department, because by putting it in one department we would get better service and would avoid the duplication that exists to-day.

I would add that there is no doubt as to the success of that, because the Army has recently actually trained men for the Navy, and the Navy has written and expressed its satisfaction with this work. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, dated only a few days ago, is in the files of the War Department. That leaves only one item on which there is a great divergence of opinion, and that is in connection with the fighting air force; and by that, I mean the pursuit squadrons.

Gen. Mitchell, together with a very large majority of the fliers, strongly urges a separate department. He said:

The whole question about this thing, to my mind, amounts to this: Is an air service of sufficient importance to be developed as a separate arm, or is it still an auxiliary? All the large nations in the world to-day have come to the conclusion that it is a principal arm and requires development in that way, and that it should not be held up and kept back as a subsidiary part of the older services. Even China now has a department of aeronautics. If you want to get at it from the standpoint of what is the greatest economy of effort in so far as financial outlay is concerned and in so far as efficient operation is concerned, I believe you should adopt a system something of this kind: You will have a department of the Government made responsible for aeronautics with an air force under it (and by force I mean a force in a sense that the Army is under the War Department); you will have a section that is concerned especially with suply of all aircraft and accessories, and you will have a department that is charged essentially with the development of civil and commercial aviation. That unquestionably is the simplest method of handling it. The air force, the supply, and the civil sections should be coordinated under a director.

This talk one hears about air service having to be a part of the Army, Navy, or anything else to be able to operate we know there is nothing to. If an air force is assigned in the same manner that the Marines were to the Second Division in Europe, they are going to operate in just as efficient a way from every standpoint; and, furthermore, you will get greater efficiency because air officers will see that their units are made efficient, as distinguished from officers who are only in the air service for a little while and then go back to something else.

The Secretary of War is opposed to an independent department for aviation, and in his annual report for 1919 said:

A sound policy, however, would seem to involve a generous attitude on the part of the Congress in the matter of appropriations, recognizing the commercial possibilities of the airplane by encouraging its use in the Postal Service, and, of course, recognizing its tremendous importance both to the Army and the Navy. Having determined how far these various possibilities justify support, an aggregate appropriation might be made to be expended under the direction of the President upon the advice of a board of which the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Postmaster General, and the Secretary of Commerce would be members. Such a board would inevitably consider the special needs of the military and commercial interests and would watch from day to day the developments of the art as it promised greater usefulness in one or the other direction.

By such cooperation of the special services, an interchange, if not a direct pooling, of engineering could be effected, and ultimately training could be arranged to be given to civilian aviators in the same schools and with the same facilities as are used in the early stages of the training of military and naval aviators. Such a board could appropriately advise the President upon the matter of flying regulations, and the President could in turn bring legislation to the attention of Congress.

By the use of the aggregate fund thus placed under the President's general direction, encouragement to the extent of the funds available could be given to the industry, and the orders for Government account so placed as to maintain as extensive facilities as possible for the rapid production of specialized types of aircraft in the event of emergency. Such a board could also bring into the field of its general study and operation the manufacture and use of lighter-than-air craft, and it may be worth while here to observe that with the quantity production of noninflammable gas the possibilities of the rigid and dirigible balloon are in many ways as promising as those of the airplane. As the Chief Executive, having under his constant care the commercial and industrial development of the country as well as the national defense, the President would undoubtedly cause himself to be advised from time to time as to the best distribution of jurisdiction in this field, and by assigning to the Army and Navy the functions which can best be performed by them, respectively, and by bringing to a common view the needs of the military establishments and of commerce the best results could be obtained.

On the whole case, it seems quite clear that the time has not come to set up an independent department of the air, there being as yet no commercial use nor likelihood of the commercial use of the airplane which will prove profitable enough to maintain the industry, and certainly no such prospect of independent effectiveness of aircraft as an agency of war to justify reliance upon it to the detriment of the traditional military arms. As a matter of fact, in war, as yet, the infantry is the backbone of military effort, and all other arms on land, on the sea, and in the air are mere aids to its advance and protections to it while it is performing its functions of advance and occupation.

In the hearings he stated that he thought that—

We ought to unite in production of aviation materials sufficiently to use the appropriation which the Congress makes, with a view to preserving as far as possible all necessary facilities for the production of aircraft. * * * I can see no objection to that coordination of the inspection, engineering, and purchase ends of aircraft as will secure concentration of purchase, encouragement of facilities for manufacturing purposes, and the joint benefits of improvement in design to prevent duplication and waste of effort.

Gen. Menoher opposes the independent department and clearly stated his views, as follows:

I would like to state, if I may, in a general way just what I stand for in this general proposition of organization of the Air Service, and then we can take up the question of wherein I differ from Mr. HULL in his bill. There are three fundamentals for which I have been contending.

One is that the Army, and the Navy also, should retain its personnel and its organization as an integral part of the Army, or the Navy, as the case may be; that the flying officer shall be an officer of the Army. The Navy is contending for the same thing very strongly. I have explained this previously in this room to the full committee as to just how I stand on that.

* * * * * * *

I have not gone into it as to the needs of the Post Office Department, because their need is different from ours. I leave that for the determination of superior authority to mine. I will deal with that with which I am immediately concerned. It is unthinkable to me that the air force that operates with the Army should not be a part of the Army.

The second contention that I make is, and I consider this vital also, that each of the departments of the Army and of the Navy, and if the Post Office Department is included in the same category, it also, but I speak particularly for the Army—that the Army should determine the types to be provided to suit their needs. In other words, each service should carry on its own experimental development to the point of production and that then, and only then, should the production department take over the matter of production. Now, a plane is a plane, but a plane as delivered from a manufacturer, ordinarily, and especially in this case delivered from a civilian manufacturer who did not understand the specific needs of the Army, a plane turned over by them would not be a fighting plane any more than a soldier who had not been given a uniform or arms would be a fighting man. There are a thousand and one things in a complete plane ready for service that can only be determined by the activity that uses it, the Army or the Navy. The armament, the radio, the armor that it should carry, the signals, the photographic apparatus, and all those things have to be determined by the army, and the two have to be built mutually around each other; that is, the equipment and the plane itself have to be built around each other. Space is exceedingly limited. Then again the function will have to be determined by the service that is going to use the plane. So I maintain that the Army, speaking for the Army now, should determine the type of plane, should carry on its own experimental development up to the point of production.

The third contention is that we should have an agency for production which would take over the matter of production when the design that was desirable for a particular service was ready, to take that over and produce it; that this agency should also be charged with handling civil aeronautics. Now, by that I mean the aeronautics that are necessary in carrying on the functions of the various departments of the Government. I have in mind particularly the forest patrol, of which we did a great deal last summer. I believe that this civilian agency should carry on that work; that it should also be charged with the preparation of rules and regulations for the navigation of the air, the licensing of pilots, the inspection of aircraft for commercial and other purposes, and I am inclined to think that it should operate planes for this civil work, and, too, that it should take over the forest patrol, although we stand ready now to continue the work that we have been doing last summer and carry it on in the future as we have in the past, just in case of an emergency. That is the only legitimate and proper use of aviation by the Army for that purpose that I can see. So that those are the three things that I contend for: The personnel of the Air Service of the Army to remain integrally a part of the Army; that the Army should carry on its own experimental development up to the point of production; that there should be a production agency which should be charged with the production, and that it should handle the civil work of the Government.

Gen. Pershing is also opposed to an independent air service, but believes something should be done to bring about coordination and cooperation. The following is an excerpt from his statement:

Before the joint meeting of the Military Affairs Committees I indicated my belief that some cooperation and coordination between the different departments of the Government using airships might well be obtained, and, in fact, that such coordination was essential to the development of aviation. The question of coordinating the industrial end of aviation is, of course, an entirely different matter from the proposition of taking away from the Army this Air Service and establishing a department of aeronautics independent of the control of the War Department.

I think it is necessary that military aviation retain under control of the War Department a technical section especially charged with research and other work, connected with the development of military aircraft. Military necessities are quite different from commercial necessities, and I think satisfactory progress in military development can best be assured by retaining under the War Department a technical aviation personnel. This personnel should, of course, closely cooperate with the technical personnel of the central agency.

In reference to the Air Service, the future development in air transportation, of course, can not be foreseen, but we expect a very rapid development. During the war this service developed very rapidly, and there is every reason to believe we may look forward to a great future for it. This service is recognized by England, France, and Italy as possessing great possibilities, and it seems to me that America should not lag in encouraging aviation, but should keep pace with the progress of other nations, or, better still, keep ahead of them.

Of course, at present it is especially valuable for military purposes, yet its limitation to this service is not indicated. If Congress is of the opinion that general aviation should be encouraged, as I am, then the appropriations for commercial, naval, and military aviation might very well be included under one head, to be used first for the development of observation, reconnaissance, and combat service in the Army and Navy, and, second, for the development of commercial aviation, which would include the procurement of planes for all purposes and the encouragement of invention, and all that sort of thing.

While there is now no department of the Government looking after the particular field of civilian aviation, the Post Office Department has done a splendid work with a comparatively small fund with which to operate. Mr. Otto Praeger, the Second Assistant Postmaster General, has made the following recommendation:

I think Congress ought to pass a bill for a department of aeronautics which will coordinate the appropriations asked for by the different departments; which will coordinate the buying, to the end that manufacturers can have a steady line of supplies that they need for building planes; that will make investigations for the betterment of aeroplane construction; that will help to acquaint manufacturers with information as to markets and as to new ideas, as to what their competitors are developing abroad, and that will make the rules and regulations in the air and the licensing of pilots, and beyond that I do not think the department should go. A department of that character would do more, by reason of coordinating the buying, than anything else that can be done. I do not believe a department of that character should be given a fixed program of $100,000,000 or $200,000,000, either to subsidize manufacturers or to buy unnecessarily, but its buying should be such that factories would have a steady run of small orders during the year. You can not set up an aeroplane factory today as you can set up an assembled automobile plant, because the material entering into an aeroplane, from the wood to the glue, is specialized. Within one year, unless the aeroplane industry in this country picks up, we will not be able, nor will the Army or the Navy be able, to go into the field to buy parts for our De Haviland and our Curtiss planes. One specialty manufacturer after another is going out of business. And it does not take scores or hundreds of millions of dollars to spend upon aeroplanes in a year to keep factories alive, but it does take an intelligent spreading of those advances over a year to help keep the factories going while they are building up commercial aviation.

From the officers of the Navy have come more objections to any sort of separation of the air activities than from any other source. It is to be noted that at the present time the Army is training satisfactorily for the Navy the aviators needed in the naval service. We find also that very recently Capt. T. T. Craven, a member of the executive committee of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, and one of the most prominent officers in the Navy familiar with all the details of naval aviation, stated that he would recommend that the aircraft board of the Army and Navy be legalized by Congress, to be held responsible for the avoidance of all duplication in aviation. A brief excerpt from his testimony is as follows:

My thought is and has been for a long time that cooperation between the Army and Navy, while fair to-day, could be improved. Gen. Menoher, the head of the Aeronautical Board, also the senior representative of the Army on the board, and I, the senior representative of the Navy on that same board, fully realize that we could get together more closely and should be absolutely together on the matter of development, invention, and production. It is up to us to take the steps necessary to avoid duplication in every way, and that is our purpose.

Both the majority and the minority reports of the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department recommended legislation to bring about cooperation in development. The majority members recommend as follows:

A SEPARATE AIR SERVICE INDISPENSABLE.

Any investigation to be of permanent value should offer a solution for the problem of intelligent aircraft advancement.

Fortunately, or unfortunately, the striking failure of the War Department to rise to the aircraft emergency, either in peace or in war, has made necessary the creation of a separate bureau or department of aeronautics. Therein all governmental activities should be centered with a capable, progressive official at the head.

Practically every witness examined on the subject of future American air service united in a plea for separate independent control. From generals to lieutenants, from private citizens, familiar with the subject, and from every experienced aviator appearing before our committee, including Gens. Mitchell, Kenly, and Foulois, military aircraft authorities, and LaGuardia, Meissner, Kindley, and, last but not least, Rickenbacker—men who upheld American air laurels at the front—all unanimously urge a separate air service that will work and cooperate with the Army, Navy, Post Office, and Interior Departments in the development of aviation. We feel that real progress in aviation must depend in a material degree upon encouragement given to civil and commercial aviation.

Adequate appropriations, wisely expended, are necessary to put America to the front, where she belongs. The imperative necessity for this policy must be apparent to all who have studied the constantly increasing scope of aeronautics. Cooperation with and encouragement to inventors and manufacturers and a broad, intelligent policy is demanded. Practically all other countries have adopted that course, and ours must not fail at this crucial period to do so.

The future of aviation is beyond our present dreams or understanding, and our Government must do her full part in leading in its development.

The minority members recommend as follows:

Efficiency and economy in experimentation and production require the coordination of the Government's airplane activities. This is essential to avoid duplication and financial waste. No plan of coordination, however, should be permitted to stifle the efforts of any one department in advancing types of machines and equipment.

A separate Air Service, with authority to coordinate experimentation, purchase, and production, to chart out air routes, encourage the selection of air fields and stations thereat, and to make and enforce rules and regulations for aerial traffic, could perform a very essential function in the development of aircraft. In our judgment, such a separate service should be a civilian organization cooperating with the Army and Navy but free from military domination.

However, if the field of a new organization which is so strongly recommended can not be outlined entirely by common consent of those now looking after aviation activities in the different fields, the Congress of the United States has clearly a duty to perform in seeing to it that proper legislation is enacted in order to prevent our Nation from falling behind. We should recognize that at the beginning of the war there was a sad lack of technical foundation, and which could not be built up and bought by large appropriations during the emergency. There is a broad field of legislation yet untouched, but which is now needed because of the rapid development of civilian and commercial aviation. Appeals to civilian aviators to follow the Army and Navy air regulations is not effective, but there should be legislation controlling this new field. Congress should have the advice of the head of a central organization for all the air activities when it approaches this new field of legislation.

I sincerely hope that before this Congress adjourns or takes any sort of recess a bill which will encourage the development and bring about a consolidation, pooling, engineering, invention, training, and production in all aircraft activities will be enacted into a law.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ERNEST R. ACKERMAN,

OF NEW JERSEY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 9, 1920.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is a fitting time to consider resolutions declaratory of the state of peace. Anniversaries of Good Friday have come and gone since the state of war was declared to exist with Germany. Now a third Easter season has arrived, and although a treaty has not as yet been consummated with Germany, yet a state of peace, which no one can gainsay, has existed for more than 17 months. What the people are hungry and crying for is a cessation of the numerous war-time laws to which they willingly and patriotically subscribed during the continuation of hostilities, but which they are not patiently inclined toward inasmuch as the guns have long since ceased to reverberate across the battle fields of France.

This resolution does not in any way contemplate the nonnegotiation of a treaty with Germany. What is primarily accomplished if the resolution becomes operative is a repeal at the date of its becoming effective of all the laws which were enacted as war-time measures.

I offered, as a new Member of Congress, in the opening days of the last session, an act to repeal the censorship of the mails. By a strange coincidence the censorship was lifted a few days after my resolution was introduced.

No one can be so poorly versed in the affairs of his country as to believe for a moment that anything contained in this resolution removing war-time emergency restrictions can be or should be construed as limiting or impairing the right of the President, under his constitutional authority, to negotiate a treaty of peace with the Government of Germany or to resubmit the treaty of Versailles to the Senate.

It perhaps may not be inappropriate for me at this time to state that I believe a very large majority of the American people would be glad if the President would accept reservations and resubmit the treaty to the coordinate body for further consideration.

Mr. Speaker, at a time like this technicalities, as far as possible, should not be a barrier to the attainment of a condition of peace, which is devoutly desired by the millions of our citizens throughout our broad land. Of course no one desires that in any way a precedent should be established that can not be referred to with approval. I am sure that feature of the situation has been kept constantly in mind while the measure was being framed. Neither does this resolution intend that the Government of the United States, in restoring its internal affairs from the war to a peace basis, limits its abiding interest in its relations with and the welfare of its associates in the late war.

The emergencies of the war which the adoption and enactment of this resolution would repeal have all been satisfied. Sound public policy, therefore, makes clear the reason and necessity now for their repeal, and this is the time paramount to all others for a pacific declaration which will go far toward extinguishing any smoldering elements of dissatisfaction that hitherto may have been observed among the diversified elements in the melting pot of our western civilization.

Those charged by the Constitution with the administration of foreign affairs are not hampered or restricted by this resolution in any effort that they might make to form a league of autonomous States having as its object the erecting of a bulwark to prevent a repetition of the horrors upon which we have been compelled to gaze for these long years.

May we speed the day when such a properly safeguarded arrangement may be brought to pass. A profound sentiment for the establishment thereof pervades the mind of militant and victorious America at this hour. Rather, this resolution, like a pilot engine, precedes a possible vehicle of human enfranchisement for millions and by its adoption should be an indication that the way is clear for the mightier project to proceed toward its ultimate goal.

Those of us who have been eyewitnesses of the devastation occasioned by this titanic struggle can not be callous to efforts in this direction but are additionally impressed with the necessity of seeing that in the construction of that barrier nothing is there that might impair the integrity of our country should circumstances make necessary the resolving into original units of States which might form what many consider a Eutopian creation.

While we devoutly hope wars may become as extinct as the mastodon or the dodo, yet a further continuance of the war-time laws and regulations would long remain and rankle in the remembrance of our citizens. If the unwelcome necessity for a revival of the same should arise the present situation might be unhappily referred to and might not be contributory toward acceleration of legislation designed to meet the then emergency.

No one feature will contribute more, in my opinion, to a reduction of the high cost of living than the removal of war-time restrictions. The minds of our citizens must be unfettered from the necessarily onerous regulations so cheerfully and patriotically borne during active hostilities.

It seems to me that an effort in this manner to accelerate the arrival of normal conditions could not be otherwise than welcomed by the Executive.

Every Member of the House will remember that when the United States went into the war there was no partisanship; Democrats and Republicans were forgotten names, and we were all Americans. Therefore it is likewise possible for this Congress to be equally as nonpartisan and patriotic in declaring that the "war has ended," and thus be Americans at its conclusion as we were in the beginning. It is for our country's sake, not for political reasons, that it should be accepted.

To me it seems that everyone can subscribe to the terms of this resolution, which has had most careful and mature consideration. It should receive the affirmative vote of every Member on both sides of the House.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY E. BARBOUR,

OF CALIFORNIA.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 9, 1920,

On the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 327) terminating the state of war between the Imperial German Government and the United States.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I shall support the resolution before the House for the reason that it declares as a matter of law what is conceded by everyone to be a fact, namely, that the state of war which has existed between the Imperial German Government and the United States is at an end.

Actual warfare with Germany came to a close 17 months ago. The treaty of peace has failed of ratification. It is not for us to determine the fault or to place the blame for such failure. It is our duty to recognize the existing condition and to the fullest possible extent rectify it, in order that there may be a return to normal as soon as possible.

War measures, which conferred upon the Executive during the emergency almost unlimited powers, are still operative. In many instances these laws are being administered by subordinates. This produces an unhealthy and unnatural condition. The tremendous expense of war-time establishments still maintained, necessitating the retention in Government service of thousands of employees, perpetuates a burden from which the country is crying for relief. The high cost of living continues without abatement. Profiteering is rampant. Taxes are burdensome, and a change is demanded. The food-control act and other obnoxious measures, never intended for times of peace in a free country, are still on our statute books and hang like a dark cloud over the Nation. Labor disputes are met with injunctions issued under war-time powers, instead of bravely facing the issues, searching out and remedying the cause, if any exists. Is it to be wondered that unrest prevails?

Personally I would prefer that the war be ended by treaty. But how long must we wait if we insist on following that course? This resolution will not prevent subsequent ratification of the treaty of peace, but no one knows how long peace will be postponed if we wait to accomplish it by treaty. We owe it to ourselves and to the world at large—even to our late enemy, now struggling to maintain a government of law and order—to declare without delay, here and now, that this anomalous condition shall no longer exist; that the United States is in law as well as in fact once more in a state of peace.

The Peace Resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HUBERT D. STEPHENS,

OF MISSISSIPPI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 9, 1920.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, it is my purpose to vote against this resolution. Its proponents know full well that nothing can be accomplished by it. The only reason for presenting it is that it is hoped that some partisan advantage may be obtained.

The people of the Nation want peace. Conditions demand that the war be terminated and a peace status restored as early as possible. No one is more anxious than I to have this done.

But that is not the question involved in the consideration of this resolution. The resolution does not simply declare the war at an end and repeal certain war-time legislation; it proceeds to negotiate a treaty with Germany.

If the object is simply to effect a peace status, sincerity and good sense would dictate that the resolution should end with the second section. Instead, it follows this with provisions for a treaty with the enemy. This is a usurpation of power; it is a clear violation of the Constitution; and the whole thing is a nullity.

Other gentlemen have discussed at great length the question of the treaty-making power and have cited numerous authorities on the subject. Therefore I shall not go into that matter very fully.

I shall only say that the Constitution of the United States expressly gives the President and the Senate authority to make treaties. The House has nothing whatever to do with them; it can neither negotiate them, nor approve nor disapprove them.

Congress has no power to fetter or limit in any way the President or the Senate in the exercise of this constitutional function. It can not limit or attach conditions to the exercise of the treaty-making power.

Those who lived in the day of the writing of the Constitution—Washington, Hamilton, Madison, Jefferson, and others—recognized this fact. Their every utterance upon the subject shows it. All the authors of commentaries on constitutional law agree to the proposition. During the entire life of the Nation the right has never been challenged by the Congress itself.

I do not go as far as some gentlemen and contend that Congress has no right to declare that war has ended. In my judgment Congress does have that power.

Simply to do this is not an invasion of the treaty-making power. Treaties are contracts and they deal with settlements and with future trade relations, and so forth.

It is not absolutely necessary to have a treaty in order to end a war. It is wise to have one; it is usual to negotiate one; but war can be terminated without one.

The writers on the subject state that a war may be terminated in three ways: (1) By a mere cessation of hostilities without any definite understanding; (2) by the conquest or subjugation of one belligerent by the other; (3) by a treaty of peace.

If war can be terminated by mere cessation of hostilities, it necessarily follows that a nation that has been engaged in a war can declare that the war has ended. This would be simply the statement of a fact. In doing this there is no invasion of the treaty-making power. Simply because a treaty may be in contemplation does not change the situation or limit the power to make such a declaration.

The power of the Congress to act in that regard still exists, and there remains only the proposition as to whether in the circumstances it is the part of wisdom to exercise it.

It is wholly unnecessary to argue the wisdom of taking that action now, because that question is presented in such a manner that it can not be considered alone. It is so involved with the matter of the treaty that the two can not be separated.

Arguments that the good of the Nation demands an immediate return to peace conditions have no bearing on the subject. Criticisms of the terms of the treaty that was laid before the Senate, however just and proper those criticisms in themselves may be, do not help to decide the question presented. Attempts to place the blame for the delay in effecting a termination of the war by treaty are all beside the question. Opinions upon the wisdom or unwisdom of the League of Nations, whether we shall accept it with or without reservations or not at all, are foreign to the matter now engaging our attention.

What does confront us is this: Shall we pass a resolution that is a clear violation of the Constitution? Shall we proceed in the face of the law that declares that a treaty is in its nature a contract between two nations, not a legislative act?

Mr. Speaker, although I shall rejoice as much as anyone when the war is declared officially and legally to have come to an end, yet I am unwilling to vote for a resolution that as clearly violates all precedents, as well as the Constitution, as this does.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN H. WILSON,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 9, 1920,

On the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 327) terminating the state of war between the Imperial German Government and the United States.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, as the majority party in Congress herald this resolution as the means of establishing the peace of the world and putting the United States on a peace basis, and the people of the United States, the State of Pennsylvania, and the district I have the honor to represent desire, above everything else, that peace with honor be made a reality at the earliest possible date, it appears proper and fitting that as one who most ardently desires peace and sincerely hoped that the treaty of peace and covenant of the League of Nations would be ratified with or without reservations, I should state the reasons that impel me to vote against this resolution.

On the 6th day of April, 1917, four days after the President of the United States, in a memorable address, had indicted the Imperial German Government of having committed acts of war against the United States, Congress, by resolutions, declared that a state of war existed between the Imperial German Government and the Government and people of the United States.

This action by Congress fixed the legal status of the citizens of the United States and the German Empire, and was a formal announcement that the United States would enter the war on the side of the allied nations of Europe against the Central Powers.

At that time the great majority of the people of the United States knew and fully believed that for over two and one-half years the liberty-loving sons of France, England, Belgium, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, Canada, Australia, and Italy had stood embattled in a welter of blood, iron hail, poison gas, and a veritable hell of suffering and horror on what appeared to be the very frontier of civilization and held at bay armed forces of the Central Empires under the direction and control of the Imperial German Government, representing the ideals of barbarism and the Dark Ages.

A great majority of the citizens of the United States then believed that unless the forces stigmatized as Prussian militarism were not checked in this onward march and totally destroyed by the armed forces of the United States in combination with the armed forces of the Allied Governments that civilization was doomed; that the right of self-government, civil and religious liberty, and everything that freemen hold dear would become but facts of history.

A great majority of our people believed that with the defeat of Prussian militarism, with its doctrine that "might and might alone make right," and "that among nations morality has no place, force being the only arbiter," and its forces destroyed by the armed forces of the self-governing nations of the world, that these nations, after victory was achieved, would be able to evolve some plan of conciliation, arbitration, or mutual counsel that would make wars among the nations of the world a remote possibility; that would permit the reduction of the armaments of the nations of the world, and relieve wealth-producing labor from the heavy burden of maintaining great armies and navies.

President Wilson, in his message to the joint sessions of Congress April 2, 1917, said:

With a profound sense of the solemn and even tragical character of the step I am taking and of the grave responsibilities which it involves, but in unhesitating obedience to what I deem my constitutional duty, I advise that the Congress declare the recent course of the Imperial German Government to be in fact nothing less than war against the Government and people of the United States; that it formally accept the status of belligerent which has thus been thrust upon it; and that it take immediate steps not only to put the country in a more thorough state of defense but also to exert all its power and employ all its resources to bring the Government of the German Empire to terms and end the war. It is a fearful thing to lead this great, peaceful people into war, into the most terrible and disastrous of all wars, civilization itself seeming to be in the balance. But the right is more precious than peace, and we shall fight for the things which we have always carried nearest our hearts—for democracy, for the right of those who submit to authority to have a voice in their own Governments, for the rights and liberties of small nations, for a universal dominion of right by such a concert of free peoples as shall bring peace and safety to all nations and make the world itself at last free."

That great American and patriot, Theodore Roosevelt, in his book "America and the World War," said:

My proposal is that the efficient civilized nations, those that are efficient in war as well as in peace, shall join in a world league for the peace of righteousness. This means that they shall by solemn covenant agree as to their respective rights, which shall not be questioned; that they shall agree that all other questions arising between them shall be submitted to a court of arbitration, and that they shall also agree—and here comes the vital and essential part of the whole system—to act with the combined military strength of all of them against any recalcitrant nation, against any nation which transgresses at the expense of any other nations.

* * * * * * *

Our business is to create the beginning of international order out of the world of nations, as these nations actually exist.

* * * * * * *

I earnestly hope that we shall ourselves become one of the joint guarantors of this world peace under such a plan, and that we shall hold ourselves ready and willing to act as a member of the international comitatus to enforce the peace of righteousness as against any offender, great or small.

* * * * * * *

This would mean a great practical stride toward relief from the burden of excessive military preparation. It would mean that all liberty-loving and enlightened people, great and small, would be free from the haunting nightmare of terror which now besets them when they think of the possible conquest of their land.

Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE, who is more than any one other man responsible for the present unenviable and anomalous position of the United States among the nations of the world, while fired with patriotism and with his heart overflowing with the milk of human kindness, and before he permitted his vision to be clouded by partisanship, if not by mere personal chagrin, in a speech delivered at Mount Union College, June, 1918, said:

The President, who delivered the war message, and the Congress who voted for the war, would be guilty of the blackest crimes if they were willing to make peace on the status quo ante bellum and recreate the situation which existed before the war.

If we send our armies and our young men abroad to be killed and wounded in northern France and Flanders with no result but this, our entrance into the war with such an intention was a crime which nothing can justify.

* * * * * * *

The intention of Congress and the intention of the President was that there could be no peace until we could create a situation where no such war as this could recur. We can not make peace in the ordinary way. We can not make peace except in company with our allies. It would brand us with everlasting dishonor and bring ruin to us if we undertook to make a separate peace.

Inspired by the words of these and hundreds of other great leaders, the people of the United States, filled with a zeal to crush militarism, save civilization, and end war for all time, rose to the great occasion as no people ever rose before, and almost over night mobilized the man power, industry, and wealth of the Nation; selected, mobilized, equipped, and trained 4,000,000 of the flower of its young manhood; sent 2,000,000 of them safely across 3,000 miles of an assassin-infested sea; and sent with them stores, supplies, munitions, and money in volume that staggers the imagination.

This democratic army, gathered from the farm, the shop, the store, the counting house, and all the walks of peace and industry in July, 1918, met the flower of Prussian militarism in its apparently irresistible onward push, and, true to the traditions of America, checked it, hurled it back, and thus the American Army became the balance of power, along with the armies of the Allies, that crushed Prussian militarism and made it sue for peace and its commander sign the terms of the armistice dictated by the commander of the allied armies November 11, 1918.

The end of the war being anticipated, the country at the election on November 4, 1918, elected a Republican Congress on a platform advocating a hard dictated peace, fearing the idealism of the President and a Democratic Congress might negotiate a soft peace with Germany.

The President, together with the representatives of the allied nations, after months of labor dictated a peace with Germany, a peace of justice which met with the approval of the civilized world. Coupled with this peace they assisted in setting up self-governing nations in the dismembered parts of Austria-Hungary, Poland, and so forth, and fixed the boundaries of each, and, further coupled with this peace, a covenant that all of the allied nations and such other self-governing nations as might desire to join with them solemnly agree that at least for the period of two years they would lend their moral and physical forces to the carrying out of the terms of the treaty and establish a lasting peace; would endeavor to prevent war and agree upon a plan to reduce armaments.

This treaty and covenant was signed by all of the representatives of the allied nations except China and has been ratified by all except the United States. It was laid before the Senate by the President July 10, 1919, and after more than eight months of talk the Senate on March 19, 1920, returned it to the President unratified, and thus was destroyed the only instrument by which the terms of the world peace won in the World War can be enforced and established.

The Republican majority in Congress, elected on a platform demanding a dictated peace and promising that no peace would be made with Germany by negotiation, now ask us to vote for this resolution, which, in substance, provides, first, that the war with Germany declared by Congress April 6, 1917, is at an end; second, writes the date of approval of this resolution into all war legislation as the date of the end of the war; third, says to Germany, "We will be friends with you and trade with you providing you will within 45 days agree that the terms of the treaty of Versailles bind you and your citizens in relation to the United States"; fourth, directs the President to find out whether Germany is willing to so agree or not and after he finds out to notify the general public; fifth, if Germany does not so agree, then imposes a fine of $10,000 on any person who transacts any business with a citizen of Germany unless he first gets a permit so to do from the President; sixth, serves notice that in any event the United States hangs on to anything it got under the terms of the armistice.

I can not support this resolution for the reason, first, that grave doubts exist as to the constitutional authority of Congress to enact the resolution and grave doubts as to its legal effect, if enacted. Instead of tending to clarify the situation it will make confusion worse confounded, for business will not know, until the legal effect of the enactment of this resolution is judicially determined, whether or not the several war measures sought to be repealed are repealed. Congress has the clear right to repeal or modify them directly and not depend upon an inferential repeal by such a resolution as this. Congress, under control of the Republican steering committee, has been in session since the 19th of May, 1919, and has not repealed or modified any of these war measures, or made an effort to do so.

If this resolution be a nullity, then this action is simply playing petty politics with the hopes and aspirations of the world for peace, stability, and tranquillity. Second, if it be within the constitutional power of Congress to enact then the first section of the resolution, which declares unconditionally that the war with the Imperial German Government is at an end, establishes peace with this Government and the people of Germany without terms.

The terms of the armistice entered into by the commanders in the field at the cessation of hostilities were merged in the treaty of Versailles on its execution by the representatives of the allied Governments, including the United States, and also by Germany.

The Senate of the United States refused to ratify this treaty, and thereafter Congress, by this resolution, declares the war with Germany at an end.

Under international law we are either in a state of war with Germany or at peace. By this resolution we declare the war at an end, and it must follow we are then at peace, and at peace without terms, for the terms of the armistice were merged in the treaty, and the treaty which Germany signed, rejected by the United States.

A peace with Germany without terms is a betrayal of the soldiers of the United States who sleep on Flanders field and of all her soldiers who made the supreme sacrifice in the great conflict. Such a peace belittles the wonderful service of the gallant soldiers and sailors of our Army and Navy.

It blasts the hopes and aspirations of the men and women who gave so freely of their all and made such great sacrifices that the war might be won and civilization saved.

Such a peace is an abandonment of the Allies who for two years and one-half held the first lines of defense and who were succored in their great time of need, and by whose cooperation with us, and we with them, the war was won.

Such a peace leaves France, Belgium, and the small nations of Europe open to attack, for while Germany surrendered she has not been rendered impotent. There are at least 350,000 men in the German regular army, and the British war office estimates the number at 400,000. In addition, there are 12,000 men in the land forces of the regular navy; 40,000 to 50,000 in the armed constabulary; 150,000 to 200,000 in the army reserves; and 300,000 to 400,000 in the civic guards. Thus there are about 1,000,000 men in Germany available for quick military duty, and probably all of them are veterans.

Such a peace will preclude the United States from representation on the reparation commission, and will prevent the United States from using her good offices in seeing that equity and justice is done to the people of Germany in the enforcement of some of the terms of the peace treaty, which may perhaps be too harsh for the people of Germany to comply with.

This resolution is a left-handed attempt to ratify the treaty of Versailles, and puts this mighty Nation that holds the destiny of the world in the hollow of its hands in the position of sneaking away from its associates in the war after the conflict, and endeavoring to obtain by applying at Germany's back door all of the material fruits of victory without responsibility as to whether or not the terms of the joint treaty are carried out.

The primary purpose of the resolution is to establish commercial relations with the German people, and much as I desire to see the United States at peace with all of the world, and with an ardent desire to see the German people, along with all peoples of the world, work out their destiny in peace and prosperity, I can not vote for the resolution.

I can not, however, bring myself to believe that the people of the United States expended $30,000,000,000 solely that we might trade with Germany.

That the fathers and mothers of the United States gave their sons to their country solely that we might trade with Germany.

That the thousands of maimed and crippled soldiers of the United States endured this misery and gave their bodies to be mutilated solely that we might trade with Germany.

That the soldiers of the United States who so valiantly went to war and rendered so great a service to mankind did all this solely that their Commander in Chief, the President of the United States, might be permitted to go to Berlin, with hat in hand, to find out whether or not Germany would trade with us.

I can not bring myself to think that the 85,000 soldiers of the United States in the World War, for whom taps have sounded and who now sleep in the silent bivouac of the dead, awaiting the reveille of the soldier's resurrection, died solely that commercial relations with Germany might be renewed, and because I am not so convinced I can not support and vote for this resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON,

OF WISCONSIN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 9, 1920.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, with all Europe largely dependent upon the United States for its food supply, Congress is charged with a tremendous responsibility in considering the legislation intended to make possible the increased production demanded of the American farmer.

Congress can not act intelligently unless correctly informed as to the operations of the various agencies which have been created to aid and encourage agricultural development. The farm-loan system created by the Federal farm-loan act is one of the agencies of which much has been expected. I think the record of the Federal and the joint-stock land banks in the short time they have been in operation shows that these institutions are rendering a great service to agriculture and to the Nation as a whole.

These banks, according to the title of the act creating them, were expected "to equalize rates of interest on farm loans." And there is abundant evidence that interest rates have been reduced in every high-interest section of the United States. That is a very important service for these banks to have performed. They have done more than merely to save a handsome sum in interest for all who borrowed of these banks. Their mere presence in the farm-loan field supplied the competition necessary to reduce the rates of interest for all farmers who borrow, no matter of whom they borrow. It has been estimated that the farmers of America already have been saved a total of not less than $30,000,000 in interest and $20,000,000 in commissions by the operations and as a result of the competition of the banks created by the farm-loan act.

And that fact has aroused the bitter opposition of the old-style, commission-charging, farm-mortgage broker. When any campaign becomes bitter, the bars are let down for all manner of misrepresentation and false statement. Often, under these conditions, false issues are raised which prejudice a case before it is fairly opened for discussion. Now, as there have been some misleading and some false statements made as to the operations of the joint-stock land banks under the farm-loan act, I desire to submit a letter from the Farm Loan Board correcting a statement that has become current about the earnings of these banks. This letter was addressed to Guy Huston, of Chicago, president of the American Association of Joint Stock Land Banks, and in effect says that the statement that any joint-stock land bank has made 30½ per cent is false, and that a correct statement of earnings of the particular bank referred to would have been but 9½ per cent per annum, a great difference. I submit this letter from the Farm Loan Board, because this seems to be the only effectual way of dissipating the prejudice created by the first and erroneous statement.

I read:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
FARM LOAN BUREAU,
February 28, 1920.

Mr. GUY HUSTON,
President American Association of Joint-Stock Land Banks, Chicago, Ill.

DEAR SIR: The Secretary of your association has to-day stated to the Farm Loan Board that an incorrect statement as to the earnings of your institution, in which it was quoted as earning 30½ per cent per annum, is being widely circulated in a campaign against joint-stock land banks, and he stated further that the fact that the Federal farm-loan act imposes no limitation upon joint-stock land banks, as to the amount and purposes of loans, or the vocation of the borrower, is being widely circulated in the same campaign. He has asked us to give you a statement on these points, with leave to give publicity to such statement. We willingly comply.

It is probable that the statement as to your earnings grew out of the misinterpretation of a memorandum issued from this office in which that figure was given as covering your earnings for a period of 22 months. Subsequently, this statement was supplemented by the following memorandum, dated January 8, 1920:

"With reference to memorandum, dated June 18, 1919, showing earnings of the First Joint-Stock Land Bank of Chicago as at the close of business May 31, 1919, the following information is respectfully submitted.

"On page 1 of the above-mentioned memorandum the average amount of capital stock invested in this bank for the period from organization to May 31, 1919, was shown to be $299,148.15. This amount is correct, as shown by the records of this bureau, such records being compiled from certificates of the First Joint Stock Land Bank of Chicago. Since preparing the above-mentioned memorandum, however, it has been called to my attention that these certificates were not made at the time the funds were actually collected on account of this stock subscription, but at some subsequent date prior to the issuance of bonds against such stock, and that the average capital investment on May 31, 1919, was actually $354,340.

"Earnings of this institution at that time were shown to be $61,208.60, which would represent 17.3 per cent on the average investment for the period from organization to May 31, 1919, or about 9½ per cent per annum on average capital invested.

"Respectfully submitted,

"H. HISE,
"Chief Land Bank Examiner."

The above memorandum correctly states your earning as reported to this office and verified by examination of your institution.

In reference to the amount of loan, the board has made a specific ruling as follows:

"Maximum loan to one borrower: No loan to a single borrower made by any joint-stock land bank in excess of 15 per cent of its capital and surplus will be approved as security for a bond issue, and in no case will such approval be given of any loan in excess of $50,000."

As to the purpose of loan, the board's position was defined in a circular, from which the following is a quotation:

"PURPOSE OF THE LOAN.

"Joint-stock land banks are also exempted from the specific limitation imposed upon Federal land banks, in reference to the purposes for which loans may be made.

"The general purposes of the act, however, are so clearly defined in the title, 'To provide capital for agricultural development,' and this purpose is so generally understood and accepted, that the board feels it is inconsistent with the purposes of the act and sound public policy that loans should be made by joint-stock land banks, except for the purposes enumerated in the act or other purposes related to agricultural development.

"You are, therefore, requested to confine your loans to such purposes and advised that the board can not approve loans which are made for the purpose of speculation or other purposes entirely foreign to agricultural production."

In justice to the joint-stock land banks it should be further stated that these suggestions of the board have been cheerfully accepted, and we think very nearly universally complied with; and the legislative committee of your association recently went on record before the Banking and Currency Committee of the United States Senate as approving these limitations and favoring their incorporation in the farm-loan act.

You are at liberty to give such publicity as you may desire to this statement.

Respectfully, yours,

W. W. FLANNAGAN,
Secretary Farm Loan Board.

I am disappointed to find that some Members of Congress view the farm-loan act as a sort of glorified "poor law" for the relief of paupers, and to view the duties of the Farm Loan Board as being for the most part those of dispensing small charity to small farmers. On this point let me read an utterance made some time ago by a former Secretary of the United States Treasury. He said:

The American farmer is not a pauper seeking alms. Neither is he a ward of the Government to be treated as an irresponsible child.

Up to the time of the passage of the farm-loan act the system of farm credits in operation in this country was exceedingly cumbersome. It was so cumbersome that it would not furnish the kind of service the farmer required at any price. That is, it could not furnish loans on the long-term amortization plan. Also the entire field of farm credits was without anything more than the most primitive—and therefore futile—regulation as to rates of interest and commission charges.

After an exhaustive study of the needs of the country and after another exhaustive study of the credit system of European countries, Congress decided to adequately finance agriculture as a great underlying industry essential to the life of the Nation.

Congress did not contemplate any petty remedies. It did not contemplate charity for the small farmers. It did not contemplate a special privilege for the big farmers.

But Congress did contemplate establishing a practical system of rural credits by which the farmer would be enabled to secure as a right—not as a favor—adequate funds at reasonable rates.

Some of those who now are fighting the Federal and joint-stock land banks forget what were the conditions which prevailed before the passage of the farm-loan act. To get this matter before us in brief form I shall read from a widely known farm paper published by the present Secretary of Agriculture, E. T. Meredith. The paper I read from is Successful Farming, and the article I read was written by W. G. McAdoo, former Secretary of the Treasury. It is as follows:

THE FEDERAL FARM LOAN ACT—ARE THE PROPOSED CHANGES CONTRARY TO THE FARMERS' INTERESTS?

[By W. G. McAdoo, formerly Secretary of the Treasury.]

The attacks now being made in the courts and in the Congress of the United States on the farm-loan act, and the great system of agricultural credit banks thereby created, indicate a purpose on the part of the majority leaders to yield to the pressure and influence of the farm mortgage brokers and to destroy or so cripple the Federal land banks and the joint-stock land banks that the farmers of the country will again be put at the mercy of usurers and mortgage sharks.

A suit was recently brought at Kansas City, Mo., attacking the constitutionality of the farm-loan act. Judge Van Valkenburg, at Kansas City, decided in favor of the constitutionality of the farm-loan law. An appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, where the case was recently argued. If the Supreme Court should sustain the constitutionality of the farm-loan act, then the only danger to the farm-loan system is from Congress.

Prior to 1913 there was a severe money stringency at crop-moving seasons. The farmers suffered severely from these annual money squeezes. Inability to get sufficient credit on reasonable terms to harvest their crops and to hold them after harvest for a reasonable time so that they could market them gradually and get the benefit of fair prices resulted each year in the enforced dumping of the crops on the market in a short period of time, with the result that prices fell frequently below the cost of production, entailing grave losses and hardships upon the farmers. Credit was largely controlled by a powerful group in New York commonly referred to as "Wall Street." Doubtless every farmer remembers that in the fall of 1913, the Treasury Department for the first time in its history disregarded "Wall Street" and made direct deposit of Government money in banks in the crop-moving centers throughout the country on condition that the same be lent to farmers for crop-moving purposes at reasonable rates. This broke up the annual crop-moving squeeze, and since 1913 nothing has been heard about tight money and the difficulty of moving the crops.

But this was not enough. The administration realized that unless remedial credit legislation was promptly enacted what the Treasury had gained in breaking the selfish control of credit would be lost. Therefore the Federal reserve act was passed, and while it created a great system of commercial credit, it made provision only for the essential short-time credit needed by the farmer. It put the farmer's six months' notes, given for agricultural purposes such as growing crops or carrying his matured crops when in the form of staple products, upon the same favorable basis as the notes of merchants and other business men when given for commercial purposes.

The farmer's notes of this character were made eligible for rediscount in Federal reserve banks just as were the business man's notes. What does this mean? It means that every national bank can now lend money to the farmer for agricultural purposes or upon the security of staple agricultural products, with full knowledge that it can rediscount such notes in Federal reserve banks upon the same favorable terms that it can rediscount the merchant's paper. This makes the farmer's paper just as desirable to a national bank as the merchant's paper, and opens up to the farmer a vast field of essential short-time credit.

PROVISION FOR LONG-TIME LOANS.

But this was not enough. The farmer also needed a system of agricultural credit under which he could borrow on a mortgage on his farm for a long term of years and at low interest rates and be relieved of high charges for commissions, attorney's fees, and other exactions which, in times past, have made the cost of money borrowed on mortgage, where he was able to get it at all, so high that he could ill afford to bear it. The farmer could rarely borrow on mortgage for a longer period than five years. Frequently he could borrow for a much shorter time only. He had to submit to arbitrary valuations of his property, which were not infrequently lower than was justified, and he had to take the money upon any terms the lender imposed upon him. The small farmer who wanted to borrow on mortgage, $1,000 or less, found it very difficult to get it on any terms. There was little or no credit on farm mortgage for the small borrower.

The need of mortgage credit to the farmer is very great, because he can not make permanent improvements on his land, or buy machinery, or raise cattle or fruit trees or other crops which take a long time to mature, or clear his land, or tile it, or lime it, and get returns from the additional investment unless he has a long-time loan. It became necessary, therefore, to create a farm-mortgage system which would give the farmer, first, the long-time mortgage loan covering a period of as much as 40 years and repayable on the amortization plan, namely, in annual installments of, say, 1 per cent; second, a low rate of interest, which would be uniform throughout the United States, so that farmers everywhere would share equally in the benefits of the system. This could be accomplished only by the creation of land banks with power to sell a standard form of bonds based upon the security of the farm mortgages they purchased from the farmer. By making these bonds safe and attractive to investors the land banks would be able to command a constant supply of money by sale of their bonds and thus be able to lend upon the security of the farm mortgage.

It was essential that the mortgages given by the farmer and the bonds issued by the banks upon the security thereof should be exempt from all United States, State, and local taxation. Without this exemption, it would be impossible to sell the bonds of the banks at such reasonable rates of interest that the banks in turn could lend money to the farmers on mortgages at a reasonable rate of interest. Consequently, the Congress of the United States, upon the recommendation of the President, passed the Federal farm loan act in July, 1916. Under this law the country has been divided into 12 districts and a Federal land bank has been established in each. These Federal land banks are not permitted to lend more than $10,000 to a single borrower, and they can not lend except upon the cooperative plan through a farm loan association which the farmers have to organize. It was necessary, therefore, to provide another class of banks which could make loans to farmers desiring to borrow in excess of $10,000. Therefore, the act provides for the organization of what is called joint-stock land banks. These banks are permitted to lend direct to a single borrower in any amount up to $50,000. The joint-stock land banks, like the Federal land banks, issue their bonds against the security of the farm mortgages they take. The joint-stock land banks are required to lend on the long time amortization plan at rates of interest regulated by the Federal farm loan board at Washington, just as in the case of the Federal land banks. The entire system is under the supervision and control of the farm loan board established in the Treasury Department at Washington. Thus a great system of agricultural credit is created, the short time loans being supplied by the Federal reserve system and the long time amortization mortgage loans by the Federal farm loan system.

THEIR NEED IS APPARENT.

Although the Federal land banks have been in operation but little more than two years, they have made loans to farmers throughout the United States aggregating $285,000,000 at 5 and 5½ per cent interest, plus 1 per cent per annum for amortization, so that at maturity the principal will have been paid in full if the interest and amortization charges shall have been regularly paid as they became due.

The joint stock land banks have made direct loans to farmers amounting to something like $41,000,000, at low rates of interest and on the amortization plan. It is evident from the manner in which the farmers are making use of the system that it is serving a genuine need. All of the Federal land banks are now established on a profitable basis, and this farm credit system, conceived in the spirit of helpfulness and cooperation, if not destroyed, can perform a notable service for American agriculture.

The provision that the bonds issued by the Federal and joint stock land banks and secured by farm mortgages shall be exempt from taxation, and that the rates of interest shall be regulated by the Farm Loan Board and be uniform in all the States, makes it possible for the farmer having good security, even though he lives in a sparsely settled State, to secure credit on just as reasonable terms as the farmer who lives in the most populous and settled State.

But those private money lenders and brokers who for years have fattened at the expense of the American farmer have fought bitterly this tax-exemption feature, because they are now forced into competition with the land bank system and compelled to lend money on reasonable terms. Threats that the tax exemption on farm mortgages and land bank bonds would be knocked out by the present Congress have been confidently made by the farm-mortage brokers of America. The attacks recently made by two of the leaders of the House of Representatives, and by one of the leaders of the Senate, should serve as a warning to every farmer and citizen interested in the maintenance and success of the land bank system that they must resist the attempts of these selfish interests if they want the farm-loan system to be preserved.

Representative J. W. FORDNEY, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House, and Representative MCFADDEN, a member of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House, have made speeches recently in opposition to the tax-exemption clause, and these speeches are being widely circulated by the farm-mortgage brokers of America.

Senator SMOOT has introduced a bill in the Senate to force the liquidation of the joint-stock land banks, and Mr. MCFADDEN has introduced a similar bill in the House of Representatives. If the joint-stock land banks are thus destroyed and the tax exemption on farm mortgages and land-bank bonds is repealed, the farm-mortgage brokers and private money lenders will again have a monopoly of the field of long-time agricultural credit, and the farmers of the country know what that will mean in high-interest rates, commissions, attorneys' fees, and other charges on the original loan and large commissions on each renewal if the farmer succeeds in getting a renewal. The cost of money to the farmer will be increased and all the old abuses will be restored; the mortgage bankers will not grant the long-time amortization loans which the farmer can gradually pay off so that the principal of the debt will be liquidated at maturity. Farmers will have to take short-time loans on such terms as the farm-mortgage brokers and lenders choose to make. In other words, the old system of farm loans with its insufficiency of credit, its usurious rates of interest, its high commissions, and injustices leading only too frequently to the tragedy of foreclosure and loss of everything will be restored.

FAIR PLAY FOR FARMERS.

Why should farmers not have the benefit of exemption from taxation on farm mortgages and the bonds issued by the land banks against these mortgages? What is a mortgage anyway? It is merely an evidence of indebtedness. Why should the Government of the United States tax the evidence of the farmers' indebtedness? What is the bond of the land bank but an evidence of indebtedness issued on the security of the mortgage of the farmer and by means of which the bank is enabled to get the necessary money from investors to lend to the farmer on his mortgage? If a tax is imposed on the Federal and joint-stock land bank bonds, who will pay it? The borrowing farmers, of course. They will pay the higher interest rates which the bonds will have to carry, if the tax exemption is removed, because the banks will have to charge the farmers a higher rate of interest on their mortgages. If the farmer has paid taxes on his mortgaged farm and on his income as well, why should he be asked to pay taxes on his debt? The mortgage on his farm and the bond issued by the land bank are both mere evidences of indebtedness, resting upon the land upon which the farmer pays taxes.

Why should this tax exemption, which makes the land-bank system successful and enables it to give the farmer sufficient agricultural credit on long time and at reasonable rates of interest, provoke the hostility of leaders in the Congress when a similar tax exemption has been granted in favor of rich and powerful national banks? We have heard no complaints about this tax exemption. No one challenges it or complains of it. But if the farmers of the United States are given a similar exemption, then it becomes an "outrageous" thing.

The national banks of the United States own all the stock in the 12 Federal reserve banks, which have an aggregate capital of more than $86,000,000. These national banks are permitted to receive 6 per cent preferred dividends on their Federal reserve bank stock, and, in addition, every dollar of that stock and the income therefrom is exempt from all Federal, State, and municipal taxation. All State and municipal bonds issued throughout the Nation are given full exemption from Federal, State, and local taxation. There are millions of these securities in the hands of the wealthy classes. Why should they have the benefit of exemptions which withdraw hundreds of thousands of dollars of their income from all Federal, State, and local taxes? Certainly a tax exemption which will permit the farmer to get credit on reasonable terms is no more heinous than a tax exemption in favor of the stock holdings of the national banks in the Federal reserve banks and in favor of wealthy people who invest their money in State and municipal and county bonds, the income of which can not be taxed one cent by Federal, State, or local governments.

In order to establish successfully the great commercial credit system represented by the Federal reserve act and the great agricultural credit system represented by the Federal farm loan act, I think that the Congress was justified in granting exemptions from taxation of the stock held by the national banks in the Federal reserve banks and of the farm mortgages and bonds of the Federal and joint-stock land banks; but if the exemptions from taxation in favor of the agricultural credit system are to be repealed, then with equal justification the exemptions from taxation in favor of the commercial credit system should be repealed.

Apparently, in the eyes of these selfish interests, the farmer is entitled to no consideration; and it is equally apparent that in their eyes capital and wealth are entitled to every consideration.

The agricultural class, upon whose prosperity and welfare the life of the people of the United States depends, will not now consent to see this great land bank system destroyed for the benefit of those who for years have taken advantage of the farmer's necessities by selling him credit at extortionate rates of interest and on extremely hard and unsatisfactory terms.

I do not say that there should be no amendments to or changes of the farm-loan act. The system is new and the test of experience will undoubtedly show that beneficial amendments of the law may from time to time be made. For instance, I think it would be wise to amend the law so that joint-stock land banks shall not be permitted to make loans on farm lands, except to farmers who will actually engage in the cultivation of the soil and for live stock, equipment, improvements, etc., just as in the case of the Federal land banks. I also think it would be wise to limit the loans which a joint-stock land bank may make to any one borrower to not more than $50,000; this, however, is already covered by a regulation of the Federal Farm Loan Board and may be sufficient for the purpose. These amendments are necessary to prevent the funds of the joint-stock land banks from being used for the buying up of farm lands with money borrowed from the banks by those who will not improve or cultivate it but merely hold it for an advance in values. Our new and admirable agricultural credit system must not be prostituted to speculative ends.

The Federal farm loan system must be preserved. The tax exemption on the mortgages given by the farmers to the Federal land banks and the joint-stock land banks and upon the bonds issued by these banks must be continued so that the great basic industry of agriculture, upon which rests the prosperity of all, will not be burdened unnecessarily. The business of food production is fundamental. No one must be permitted to collect one cent of unjust tribute from it.

The farmers of the United States and all citizens interested in the welfare of the Nation must assert themselves vigorously against any effort on the part of selfish interests in or out of Congress to destroy this great land-bank system which furnishes for the first time in the history of America, adequate agricultural credit to the farmers at reasonable rates and on just terms.

The Federal farm-loan act was the farmer's declaration of independence against usury and insufficient credit, as well as against unjust exactions of private money lenders and brokers.

Mr. Speaker, we have a joint-stock land bank in Wisconsin, and it is adapted to our peculiar needs. The Bankers' Joint Stock Land Bank of Milwaukee is performing a valuable service by supplying the capital we need for the development of the northern part of Wisconsin. We have nine millions of acres of hardwood cut-over lands in the northern counties of my State—9,000,000 acres of good farming land, adapted to dairy farming; 9,000,000 acres of undeveloped land that is as fertile and that will be as productive as the land in the southern counties of Wisconsin, where we have developed the dairy industry until now it produces milk, butter, and cheese valued at $200,000,000 a year.

Mr. Speaker, I want to see the northern part of Wisconsin as fully developed as southern Wisconsin. We can not develop these lands without the aid of outside capital. And that is why I do not want anything done to cut off our supply of outside money. That is why I do not want any action taken by Congress that will deprive us of the services of the joint-stock land bank. The men who control and operate the Bankers' Joint Stock Land Bank of Milwaukee have brought to Wisconsin to be used in agricultural development a total of more than $10,000,000. Of this amount approximately $5,000,000 has been made available within the last two years by the organization and operation of the joint-stock land bank.

I submit these facts and have engaged in this discussion that the character of the service performed by joint-stock land banks may be known and understood.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ANDREW J. HICKEY,

OF INDIANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 9, 1920,

On joint resolution (H. J. Res. 327) terminating the state of war between the Imperial German Government and the United States.

Mr. HICKEY. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the passage of this resolution. It will establish peace and at the same time repeal all war legislation. This legislation was passed in the stress and excitement of war and ought not to be continued now that peace has actually come. Congress by joint resolution approved April 6, 1917, declared that a state of war existed and had existed for some time between the United States Government and the Imperial German Government. After prosecuting the war to a successful conclusion, an armistice was signed on November 11, 1918, between the allied Governments and the Central Powers. Since that date hostilities between this Government and the Government of Germany have ceased, and to all intents and purposes these nations are at peace. But owing to the inability of the President and the Senate of the United States to agree with respect to a League of Nations, the country has continued to be in a state of war with the Government of Germany. This condition of affairs has become intolerable.

The league covenant was made part of the peace treaty, and this is the reason why its ratification has been delayed. The provisions of the treaty are fairly acceptable to the United States. The treaty has been ratified by many of the allied nations and by Germany. Our failure to ratify the treaty because of the league covenant places this country in the anomalous position of being at war with Germany when, in fact, we have been at peace with Germany since the signing of the armistice. My information is that while we are technically at war we are supplying Germany with many things she needs; we are receiving substantial commerce from her. But this commerce with Germany is being carried on contrary to the laws in force at this time; it is being carried on knowing that the trading-with-the-enemy act and other legislation in the nature of war legislation prohibits such commerce, but with the knowledge and tacit consent of the Government.

This is an unfortunate situation. The war measures vest in the President extraordinary powers and the powers so vested have in certain cases been used to punish certain people who offended the administration, while others guilty of like offenses have gone unpunished. This may be the situation with respect to those who are now carrying on with the consent and knowledge of the Government commerce with the Central Powers. Something may arise whereby they may come under the displeasure of the administration, and if they do they will be subject to the penalties and punishments provided by the drastic war measures now in full force. I may add, too, that some of our commerce with the Central Powers is carried on through foreign countries, mostly through British channels. The laws now in force, as I have stated, provide severe penalties for the very things the Government permits to be done. If this resolution becomes a law, it will end this situation.

The country is weary of war and of war laws and is earnestly anxious that peace relations be resumed. The so-called war power conferred upon the President vested him with more absolute, arbitrary power than has ever been lodged in any monarch in modern times. The President apparently seems not at all disposed to surrender any of these powers, but rather is constantly asking for other and more drastic laws.

Peace was established between the Central Powers and the United States November 11, 1918, nearly 17 months ago. The President submitted certain terms to the Central Powers advising those powers that the Allies, including the United States, were willing to deal with them upon certain conditions and submitted or suggested a basis for peace. The Central Powers accepted the terms as submitted by the President in what is known as his 14 points and his other communications dealing with the question of peace. An armistice was agreed to and signed with the understanding between the high contracting parties that the terms to be agreed to would be in harmony with the proposals made by the Allies through the medium of the President. After the armistice had been entered into, and in due time, the allied nations met at Versailles for the purpose of preparing a treaty of peace. The peace conference opened in December, 1918, and continued in session until June 28, 1919. The President constituted himself the representative of this Government to attend this conference and acted in behalf of his Government, and, accompanied by upward of 1,500 secretaries, counselors, servants, and attendants, he proceeded to the peace conference.

At Paris he received the homage that in ancient days were paid to monarchs visiting a foreign court. Under these pleasing and auspicious conditions he entered upon his duties as the peace envoy of the great republican democracy of America.

The President soon learned that the proposals made by him before the signing of the armistice could not, and would not, be carried out by the Allies, our associates in the war; that secret treaties and secret engagements had been entered into by the allied nations before and during the war; that it was the purpose of the allied powers to fulfill the obligations they had made to each other in the way of secret treaties and engagements. He therefore cast about to devise a plan that might, as he thought, be substituted instead of the solemn promise, embodied in the 14 points and other promises made and which became a part of the terms of the armistice. There was prepared by Gen. Smuts, of the British Army, and submitted to the peace conference by the President, a plan to form a combination of the allied nations and other nations that would accept the terms imposed by these nations that is known as the League of Nations. There is no doubt that the President sincerely and honestly believed this league plan would be of great benefit and aid in settling future disputes that might arise among nations. He therefore concluded to make this league plan an integral part of the treaty of peace. The allied nations encouraged this idea; they were not concerned about altruistic and idealistic things; they sought spoils in the way of territory and indemnities, and so they strongly approved the idealistic though impractical, unworkable, and impossible plan of the President. This league plan was written into the first draft of the treaty. It surrendered to the allied Governments, through the league plan, certain rights that no nation could surrender and retain its sovereignty, and it gave to the members of the league the power to regulate our coastwise trade, to regulate our immigration laws, determine the size of our Army and Navy; in fact, to surrender to a foreign supergovernment to be created by the league the things that are and have been held most sacred by the citizens of this great Republic.

The President, all aglow with the spirit of kindness and love for the world, and in utter disregard of the interests of the United States, returned home and disclosed to a limited extent the nature of the work that was being done in the conference at Versailles. Up to this time the work had been carried on with the greatest secrecy—not a word, not a line, had come to the American people with regard to the way the rights and interest of the greatest Republic that time has ever known were being traded away by their self-appointed representative at the conference table. The President, as I have stated, gave a glimpse of what was taking place and the kind of a contract he was making for his country. He first held a conference with the Foreign Relations Committees of the Senate and the House, when he outlined his plan for a League of Nations.

Members of the committees were astounded, and in polite language so advised the President; they pointed out as well as they could with the limited information at hand the evils that would come to this country should it enter into so unequal an engagement. The President was not convinced, and before leaving the country for the peace conference made known that notwithstanding the objections of the Senators, who by the Constitution have equal power with himself in the making of treaties, that notwithstanding the objections of the American people he would so interweave and intertwine the league covenant proposed into the treaty that they could not be separated, and I suppose trusted that a war-weary Nation would be forced to accept the treaty, surrender its most sacred rights, abandon its priceless traditions for the precious boon of peace. This was the President's attitude before he returned to Europe. The President returned to his duties in France and, in justice to him, carried into effect his proposals with respect to the league. With the greatest ingenuity, he and his coworkers contrived to have it so related to the treaty itself and so interwoven into the language of the treaty that it could not be separated therefrom.

We are now not only asked to accept this league plan but, in addition, to deliver over to the machinery of the league the free will of this country, and to the Governments that concealed from our Government the secret treaties they made before we entered the war and other treaties made during the progress of the war after we entered. All of which were concealed from us.

It is obvious to all that by becoming a party to the league we no longer adhere to the traditional policy of our country—a policy established by Washington and never departed from down to this good hour. The proponents of the league in this country are the first Americans to advocate an abandonment of the policy of strictly confining our international activities to our own affairs.

Washington, in his Farewell Address, delivered in September, 1796, in a most fervent and convincing appeal, urged this policy. I quote from his address, as follows:

> Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence (I conjure you to believe me, fellow citizens) the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government.
> The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign nations, is in extending our commercial relations to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop. Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence, she must be engaged in frequent controversies the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities. Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course.
> Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice? It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world.
> Taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments on a respective defensive posture, we may safely trust to alliances for extraordinary emergencies.
> Constantly keeping in view that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another, that it must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character, that by such acceptance it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not giving more, there can be no greater error than to expect or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. It is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought to discard.

Thomas Jefferson was also a strong advocate of this policy. I quote from his letter written to his friend, Mr. Gerry, in 1779:

> I am for free commerce with all nations and political connections with none; I am not for linking ourselves by new treaties with the quarrels of Europe, or entering the field of slaughter to preserve their balance, or to join the confederacy of kings to war against the principles of liberty. The first object of my heart is my own country.

Thomas Jefferson also on the same question wrote President Monroe, June, 1823, and said:

> Do what is right, leaving the people of Europe to act their follies and crimes among themselves, while we pursue in good faith the paths of peace and prosperity.

James Monroe, when President of the United States, in a message to Congress, December 2, 1823, said:

> The citizens of the United States cherish sentiments the most friendly in favor of the liberty and happiness of their fellow men on that side of the Atlantic. In the wars of the European powers in matters relating to themselves we have never been a part, nor does it comport with our policy to do so.

John Quincy Adams, when President of the United States, in in a message to Congress, March 15, 1826, dealing with this same question, said:

> Reasoning upon the state of things, from the sound and judicious principles of Washington, must we not say that the period which he predicted was not far off has arrived that America has a set of primary interests which have none or a remote relation to Europe; that the interference of Europe therefore in those concerned should be spontaneously withheld by her upon the same principles that we have never interfered with hers.

Andrew Jackson, when President of the United States, in a message to Congress dated December 4, 1842, said:

> Our best wishes at all times, our good offices when required, will be offered to promote the domestic tranquillity and foreign peace of all nations with whom we have any intercourse. Any intervention in their affairs further than this, even by an expression of official opinion, is contrary to our principles of international politics and will always be avoided.

President Johnson, dealing with questions affecting our foreign relations in a message on December 4, 1865, said:

Under any circumstances our great extent of territory, variety of climate, producing almost anything that is necessary for the wants and even the comforts of man, make us singularly independent of the warring policy of foreign powers and protect us against every temptation to entangling alliances while * * * strength that comes from harmony will be our best security against nations who feel power and forget right.

President Grover Cleveland said:

The genius of our institutions, the needs of our people in their home life, and the attention which is demanded for the settlement and the development of the resources of our vast territory dictate the scrupulous avoidance of any departure from that foreign policy commended by the history, the traditions, and the prosperity of our Republic. It is the policy of independence, favored by our position, and defended by our known love of justice and by our own power. It is the policy of peace suitable to our interests. It is the policy of Monroe and of Washington and Jefferson: "Peace, commerce, and honest friendship with all nations; entangling alliance with none."

President Wilson, in a speech delivered at Des Moines on February 1, 1916, had this to say:

There are actually men in this country who are preaching war, who are preaching the duty of the United States to do what it never would before—seek entanglement in the controversies which have arisen on the other side of the water, abandon its habitual and traditional policy, and deliberately engage in the conflict which is now engulfing the rest of the world. I do not know what the standard of citizenship of these gentlemen may be. I only know that I, for one, can not subscribe to those sentiments.

If time would permit I could show by the statements of every great American, from Washington to the meeting of the peace conference in France, that the thing that is sought to be accomplished by becoming a member of the League of Nations was the thing that all warned against. Of course, the fundamental question involved concerns the independence of the United States. If the proposed League of Nations is to safeguard liberty and maintain peace without taking from us our sovereignty we should give it honest, thoughtful consideration. Americans have never before faced such a situation or anything resembling it. Those in authority are pursuing a course so radically different from anything that was ever done before or even dreamed of that it behooves every well-wisher of the Nation, from President Wilson to the newest voter, to pause and take careful inventory before groping into unknown territory with strange ground underfoot and unfamiliar skies overhead.

The power vested in the assembly and council would give them authority to call upon the United States to send troops to any part of the world whenever, in their opinion, the necessity required it; it would also vest in these administrative bodies power to deal with the most vital interests of the Republic; it would take from Congress the power, now expressly conferred by the Constitution, of declaring war and providing means for national defense, and would vest this power in an alien assembly, to be used according to the whims of the league members. It would confer on the council the authority to determine the funds we should contribute to the support of war, should it come, the number of troops we should furnish, and what part of the loss we should pay. It could regulate our labor situation and determine our immigration laws; in fact, there seems to be no limitations on the power of the council. It is vested with legislative, executive, and judicial functions, to be exercised at its will.

It is contended by the advocates of the League of Nations and by the adherents of the President that Congress has no authority to terminate the war. It is conceded that the power to declare war is lodged in Congress. The Constitution clearly gives this power to Congress; the treaty-making power is vested in the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The President initiates the making of the treaty and the Senate accepts, modifies, amends, or rejects the treaty initiated, prepared, and submitted by the President. These two governmental functions lodged in different branches of the Government being clearly defined by the Constitution, the question may be asked, Has the President authority without the sanction of Congress to engage in war? There are many instances when this has been done, and the legality of the act, while questioned, has not been denied. It may be said to be a usurpation of power, to be bad governmental policy, for the President to encroach upon the functions of another branch of the Government; nevertheless, the right has been exercised. Mr. Wilson landed troops at Vera Cruz during his first term, sent an Army under Gen. Pershing into Mexico, called to his aid in prosecuting this war State troops as well as Federal troops, and carried on this war for months, though it ended unsuccessfully. This war was conducted without consulting Congress and without the approval of Congress. The President without the advice or consent of the Senate concluded a peace with the Government, or the pretense of a government, of Mexico. This peace was a complete surrender of American rights; it was made in secrecy without the advice or consent of the treaty-making branch of the Government between the President and Carranza. The acts of the President were not questioned by Congress and the bills made by this war were paid and the President's act approved by his party and the Congress, in which his party predominated.

There are other instances where the President of the United States has exercised war powers without being granted specific authority by Congress to do so. There is no doubt that the Executive might bring about a state of war by his acts of omission or commission and that the country would be compelled to defend its integrity and national honor without any formal declaration of war.

This being so, does it not follow that Congress, being named in the Constitution as the war-making part of the Government, having the right to vote the necessary funds to carry on war, can also terminate war? The fact that it has the power to declare war and the exclusive power to furnish the means to carry on the war by implication gives it the right by formal action to declare that the thing it begun and carried to completion has ended. I do not see how there can be any escape from this conclusion; if it were not so the country might be placed in this position: A war might be under way when a President was elected and ended before he took office, and the President so elected and taking office on March 4 of any year could continue such a war, or technically so, for four years after the war had actually come to a close, thus keeping the country in a state of chaos. Such a thing is unthinkable.

I concede that a treaty of peace would have been much more satisfactory than this resolution, if it could have been made, but this seems out of the question at this time. The covenant of the League of Nations is in the treaty submitted to the Senate by the President, and the Senate has refused to ratify the treaty with the league as prepared by the President. The President refuses to change the covenant of the league in any particular that will change its substance so that it will safeguard American rights. In these circumstances the Senate was in duty bound as the representatives of the American people to reject the treaty and refuse to ratify the same. I believe the country approves the action taken by the Senate. The question therefore is this: Is there a constitutional way to establish peace without a treaty? If there is, I favor that way. I earnestly desire to have peace. The country is hungering for peace. One hundred and ten million American people wish the repeal of the drastic war laws now in force. They wish to get back to normal. They long to become free again. They have had enough of war. They have had enough of war laws. This brings us to a consideration of the legality of the resolution under consideration. It is well in dealing with this question to consider it from the standpoint of international law. The highest authorities on this subject have agreed that war may be terminated by a treaty of peace, by conquest, or by cessation of hostilities.

It is a matter of common knowledge known to the world that the armies of the German Empire have been disbanded, that the armies of the Allies have been disbanded to a very great extent, that the German Government with which we went to war has been overthrown, that a large part of our Army has been brought back from Europe and disbanded, that there is no desire on the part of our Government to resume fighting with the German Government, that the Allies signed the treaty of peace with Germany and resumed friendly relations with Germany. Then on what theory can we be said to be at war? The only theory is that a formal treaty has not been entered into between this Government and the German Government. Peace has technically come by a cessation of hostilities. No one can successfully dispute the right of Congress to formally declare this fact. No one can deny to Congress the right to repeal the war laws and place this country on a peace basis. This is what will be accomplished by this resolution if enacted into law; it will be a legislative expression that the war has ended. It will state the real wish of the American people for peace. It is not and does not interfere in any way with the treaty-making branch of the Government; it is a purely legislative act. It will be a means of bringing about peace without entangling our affairs with the affairs of Europe. This is what the country wants; I sincerely believe that the country is opposed to the treaty of peace as submitted by the President; it would mean only trouble and future distress for the country. We must all agree that as our own masters we have fared tolerably well. From a few sparsely settled States on the Atlantic seaboard we have grown in wealth and power until we stand before the world as the best that the ages have produced, and we must be as jealous of surrendering to the blandishments offered by the gifted statesmen of Europe in the form of the league as we must be determined in correcting evils at home.

The United States is the mightiest force in the world; all nations desire her friendship; she towers far above any other nation in the world. Her moral influence has been and is a potent factor which is felt by all other nations; her freedom from all entanglements has given her a prestige which she could not otherwise enjoy. All nations know her to be disinterested. By remaining free to act on her own initiative she will do more to restore the world to normal than she can possibly accomplish as one of the group of nations under the name of the League of Nations. In view of what I have stated I am pleased to say that it is my purpose to support this resolution by my vote.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN Q. TILSON,
OF CONNECTICUT,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Friday, April 9, 1920.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, one of the most difficult and perplexing problems now demanding solution is the separation from the pay roll of several thousand Government employees who rushed into the several executive departments for one reason or another during the war. It was supposed that this unusual and extraordinary force of employees would be required only during the continuance of the war, and that soon after the war ceased there might be a return to something approximating the normal. Thus far those who so believed have been doomed to disappointment.

However difficult the task may be, all who think must agree that it must be done with all possible expedition. To carry on indefinitely the swollen Federal pay rolls of war times is not only unnecessary and expensive but is positively subversive of the most elementary principles of sound government. Every Bolshevist, every communist, every socialist, will favor the support of as many people as possible by salaries from the Public Treasury, because such a policy leads directly toward the adoption of their theories. But to those who believe in the principle of individual initiative, a fair field with no favor, with the right to enjoy the fruits of one's own honest toil and frugality, such a doctrine is most repugnant.

How can a great number of war employees be speedily and safely reduced without danger of impairing the efficiency of the public service? There are many and serious obstacles in the way. Old human nature looms large in the path, coupled with habit and inertia. What has been for even a brief period becomes, in the view of the one most concerned, not only a habit, but a vested right. His family and friends incline to the same view of it. Every possible or plausible reason is advanced and every influence brought to bear to keep him in his place. Instance the morning following any material reduction of employees in any bureau here in Washington, when the offices of Senators and Representatives will be besieged by those whose services have been dispensed with.

Human nature also applies with full force in the case of most section, division, and bureau chiefs. Each one very naturally wishes to maintain the relative importance of his own office, and this can not be done if it be conceded that the work can be done with a less force. It is entirely creditable to him to be enthusiastic in regard to his work, and seeing, with singleness of purpose, only his own corner of the universe, he does not understand why his very important work should be disturbed while all the other activities of the Government, more or less useless, from his viewpoint, are continued.

The heads of departments, in the very nature of things, must rely in great measure upon their subordinate chiefs, and thus the entire department is magnified. It is a brave head of a department who is willing to take the ax and the pruning knife and go forth to put his own premises in proper condition.

The net result is that very little assistance is given by those in position to know most about the matter in hand.

Congress has made a genuine effort to deal effectively with the problem through the Committee on Appropriations and some of the other appropriating committees. While the Republicans now control the committees, it is only fair to say that some of the Democrats on these committees have worked just as hard and as earnestly as the majority members to make a start toward reducing the great, swollen war force of employees still on the Government pay rolls.

The great and apparently insuperable difficulty is the lack of cooperation and the apparent lack of desire on the part of the executive branch of the Government to cooperate with Congress in an honest effort to reduce the abnormal expense of the Government.

No one desires to cripple any department. Everyone is willing to appropriate sufficient funds to maintain at an efficient standard the public service. Nevertheless it is well known and generally understood that far too much money is now being expended in keeping up unnecessary, abnormal department and field establishments, brought into existence or abnormally increased under stress of war. Now that we are well along in the second year since the war ceased, it is time to consider seriously how the necessary reduction can be accomplished.

The present administration has signally failed to seriously tackle the problem within the several departments where it could best be done. Congress is doing something by cutting appropriations, but without the bona fide cooperation of the executive branch of the Government Congress must cut more or less blindly, being always restrained by the fear of doing injury to some important public service.

In the midst of the present somewhat discouraging situation there appears one hopeful promise for the future. Unless all present indications fail, an entirely new administration will control the executive departments after March 4, 1921. No man should be permitted to hold a portfolio in that administration who is not pledged in advance to a policy of the most drastic reduction in the number and personnel of the governmental activities now being carried on, nor should any bureau or subordinate chief be retained who is unwilling to cooperate loyally with the head of the department in trying to restore at least prewar efficiency, without continuing indefinitely the burden of war-time establishments.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN W. HARRELD,
OF OKLAHOMA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Friday, April 9, 1920.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. Speaker, I believe I speak correctly when I say that I am the only Member of this House who was elected upon a platform in opposition to the League of Nations unless properly amended or altered so as to Americanize it. That constituency favors peace, regardless of the fate of the league, and I would be derelict in carrying out the solemn instruction of that constituency if I did not at this time lift my voice in favor of this resolution, which carries peace on its wings. I shall not attempt an extended argument.

I had not thought to inject myself into this discussion, because I realize that there are men here at whose feet I should sit for a long time before essaying to array my judgment against theirs, and I had been content to listen to their words of wisdom; but when my colleague from the State of Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] addressed you and essayed to put that great State in the attitude of opposing this resolution and to leave the impression that that State was against this resolution and favored the League of Nations instead, without change or reservation, then I remembered that even I was elected to this great body from a Democratic district in that State by Democratic votes, if you please, as well as Republican votes, upon the direct issue that the people of that district and that State want peace, without regard to the League of Nations.

I remembered that the people spoke in no uncertain tones at that election, and commissioned me to come here and lift up my voice for peace, the League of Nations notwithstanding. I remembered that two great Democratic Senators from that State had voted in the Senate for peace regardless of the league. Then why should I not be true to the commission the people had conferred upon me and raise my voice, which I feel sure is the voice of my State, in contradiction of that position on his part, and in support of a resolution which is at least one step toward the goal of peace, which at least will be an expression of this body in favor of that peace and an expression of indignation at the powers that be who have deliberately stood in the way of peace?

Yesterday we were told on this floor by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] that this resolution was a bastard, and to-day the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] so designates it under a more polite title. There is one thing you can say about a bastard. It is always a living thing—it is not a dead one—and some leagues of nations I know are dead ones. It is a known fact that an illegitimate child is almost always a virile personage, abnormally so at times. Some of the world's greatest statesmen have been illegitimates. So let them call this resolution a bastard if they so desire. That does not alter the fact that it is a lusty chap, and one that the Republican Congress will be proud to own. That much can not be said of the League of Nations. It was conceived in iniquity. It was born in the decadent atmosphere of decaying dynasties. It was left on the doorstep of Congress by its godmother, like Moses of old was left by Miriam in the bulrushes, and like Moses it was reared in secret; secretly nurtured by its godmother who now proposes to put it on the throne of this country as the godmother of Moses sought to impose him upon the people of Egypt.

But Congress does not propose to allow this thing that is foreign to our institutions and doctrines to be nurtured in secret and forced upon us. We propose now and here to say to its erstwhile godmother, we will kick it off our doorstep even as the United States Senate has already done. We will do what the Constitution does not prohibit us from doing. I am one of those who believe that Congress has power to do that which it is not forbidden to do by the Constitution, either specifically or by implication. The power to make treaties is with the President, but the power to declare peace is not forbidden to Congress.

Just as the framers of the Constitution substituted the word "declare" for the word "make," when it conferred power on Congress to declare war, so now we take the position that the President may "make" war and "make" peace, but Congress has the power to "declare" war and to "declare" peace, and that is what we propose to do.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN B. JOHNSTON,
OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 9, 1920.

Mr. JOHNSTON of New York. Mr. Speaker, it is with extreme regret that I find myself compelled to vote against this resolution. I had hoped on this question—not of national, but of world-wide moment—I could be in harmony with the majority of the committee to which this House refers all questions affecting the relations of our country with the rest of the world. I regret most profoundly that a disposition has become general to treat this—the greatest crisis which our country has ever confronted—as though it were an issue to be decided on party lines. I am a partisan and a strong partisan. I believe that in all matters relating to the domestic concerns of this country parties are agencies absolutely essential to effective operation of this Government. But matters affecting our relations with the rest of the world should be considered, I believe, entirely as matters of conscience. Of course, divisions of opinion will arise on international matters, as on all other questions; but such divisions should never be suffered to run along party lines. For when any question comes to be considered as a party issue, the judgment of partisans must inevitably be affected, if not controlled, by the position of their organizations. And on a matter involving the relations of this country with foreign nations nothing should be allowed to affect the judgment or action of a Representative in Congress except the very highest sense of duty to his country; of duty not as a party platform or caucus has prescribed it, but as Almighty God has revealed it by the light of conscience.

I deem it necessary to say all this in order that the spirit which governs what remains for me to say may be clearly understood.

If this were a resolution merely proclaiming peace with Germany and all the world, I should vote for it without any hesitation. I believe that the undisputed power of Congress to declare war involves and necessarily includes an equally clear right to declare war at an end. But it by no means follows that Congress has any right whatever to interfere in the negotiations of treaties. Confusion of thought on this subject is general, and it arises from misapprehension as to the real character of a treaty.

A treaty is by no means necessary to conclude a war, any more than a declaration of war is necessary to begin one. The great war between Japan and Russia in our own time began when Japanese sailors, without any warning, sank Russian ships, and by that action practically determined the result of the conflict. And some of the greatest wars ever raged were brought to an end without the conclusion of any treaty between the belligerents. This war has been ended, in fact, so far as we are concerned, these many months, although no treaty formally declaring it at an end has been adopted. War, it must be remembered, is a fact, not a phrase. A state of war exists when one nation invades another, seizes its territory, kills and takes captive its inhabitants, or attempts to do any of these things. When none of these conditions prevail there is no war.

No country is seeking now to disturb our security, injure our citizens, or interfere with our commerce. We are not, therefore, actually at war. But as we have recently been engaged in hostilities against Germany—if we are satisfied that she is not now intending to attack us—there is no reason why this House should not publicly declare the fact that a state of war no longer exists between the two countries. Such a declaration, however, would not be a treaty. It would, therefore, be in no sense an attempt by this body to usurp or invade the treaty-making power.

A treaty is necessary to establish peace only when one belligerent country exacts from the other some concession of territory, payment of money, or other action, as a condition on which the war is to be terminated. The agreement to accept that condition and the promise to fulfill it constitute the treaty. If there be nothing we desire Germany to do—no condition that we want to impose on her—a simple resolution declaring peace to have been restored would not, in my judgment, be open to any criticism or objection. I certainly should vote for it. But this is not the pending resolution. By its terms we are demanding that Germany shall do certain things as a condition of peace. And that is attempting to make a treaty—only it is attempting to do it by indirection.

This resolution, in the last analysis, attempts to appropriate certain features of a treaty recently entered into and now in force between Germany and certain other powers, and to prescribe these as conditions on which we will make peace. This, clearly, is assuming to ourselves the whole treaty-making power, while the Constitution excludes us from any part whatever in it. If this country is unwilling to make peace except upon conditions, it remains with the President alone to propose the conditions, and if they be accepted by the enemy, then it rests with the Senate to ratify or reject the proposed treaty. With these conditions we have no constitutional power whatever to interfere.

Deeply as I desire to cast a vote which might tend in some degree to obliterate party distinctions in considering this proposal, yet the right to vote on any subject in this body is conferred upon me by the Constitution which has established the Government. That Constitution it is my sworn and my first duty to defend. And, therefore, I must vote "no" on the pending resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ALVAN T. FULLER,
OF MASSACHUSETTS.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 9, 1920.

Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, Congress is now trying to make itself the organ of intercourse between the United States and Germany. It has no such right or function as it is now presuming to exercise. Every man in the House knows that fact perfectly well. The Republicans of the House are now trying to assume for themselves powers which they must know they have no constitutional right to exercise. They should read what Alexander Hamilton wrote on June 29, 1793, as follows:

> The legislative department is not the organ of intercourse between the United States and foreign nations. It is charged neither with making nor interpreting treaties. It is, therefore, not naturally that member of the Government which is to pronounce the existing condition of the Nation with regard to foreign powers.

The Republicans who are supporting this peace resolution have been advised by their lawyers and logicians that since the legislative branch has the power to declare war it, therefore, can with equal authority declare peace. That is a fallacy. By that same process of reasoning Congress might by resolution do away with the executive and judiciary departments altogether.

It has power to create offices and abolish them; why not then, by resolution, to administer them? It has power to establish courts; why not then, by resolution, to preside in them and interpret the law? It has power to raise and support armies; why not then, by resolution, to supersede the Commander in Chief and direct their operation? Congressmen in their eagerness to respond to the party lash and to discredit the treaty are playing desperate politics and forget that this is a Government of enumerated and delegated powers. The foreign relations of the United States are exclusively under the control of the President. It is true that his appointments are subject to confirmation by the Senate and that treaties negotiated by him must be approved by them, but the initiative in all respects is his, and Congress has no more right to intrude upon them than it has to make an appropriation or deliver a judicial decision.

The people of the United States have paid a great price for victory. They are in very truth crying for the bread of peace and the politicians would give them a stone. I would cut off my right hand before I would support a resolution which in substance puts the House on record as indorsing the action of the treaty wreckers in the Senate. These men in the Senate may feel as Senator BORAH did, namely, that he would be opposed to the peace treaty even if Jesus wrote it himself. Personally I do not feel that way about it; but, on the other hand, believe the people want a league to enforce peace, and I do not think they are particularly interested in the phraseology of it.

This peace resolution is a sugar-coated pill prescribed by Dr. LODGE to be taken by all regular Republicans before thinking. It is painless as well as senseless and will in effect put the stamp of approval of the House of Representatives on the action of the treaty wreckers in the Senate. If you are a Republican and you are sick it will make you well, and if you are well it will make you better.

Would to God it might cure the Republican Party of the sleeping sickness that has kept it from doing anything constructive since they captured control of the House and Senate, except to criticize the Democrats. How about the reforms Republicans were to put into effect when they came into control? Where is the budget? What have they done about the taxes? How have they reduced the high cost of living?

A joint resolution of both Houses or a single resolution by either is no more than an academic expression of opinion. Peace is not so made. Doubtless Mr. Wilson will have an honest pleasure in repeating for the instruction of Congress the convincing and ironic remarks made by Richard Olney, Secretary of State, in regard to certain expressions of opinion by Congress about the foreign policy of the United States. It is in the power and it may be in the pleasure of Congress, for partisan or political reasons, to utter the thoughts that arise in it in regard to foreign relations. In point of efficacy such resolutions are mere foam and vapor.

For my own part I believe the time will come when men will be as ashamed of rigging the President because of his foreign policy and of opposing the League to Enforce Peace as those partisan politicians were who fought and criticized Abraham Lincoln.

I am a Republican. I believe a Republican is to be the next President of the United States, but I can not forget the obligation we owe to the men who fought and won the war to make it what we claimed it was then, namely, a war to end all wars.

I am proud to indorse the President's foreign policy and his efforts to make a league to preserve peace, although I do not find myself in accord with him on domestic and economic questions. And in considering this question, while I do so as a Republican, I thank God I am an American first and a Republican afterwards, rather than that I should consider this important question from the standpoint of personal or party advantage.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES A. FREAR,

OF WISCONSIN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 9, 1920.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, the resolution before us says a state of war declared by Congress April 7, 1917, between the United States and Germany is at an end, that trade relations may be resumed, and that specified drastic war laws are hereby repealed.

Seventeen months after the armistice was signed our Government still finds itself tied hand and foot, with 60 war-time laws remaining on the statute books—laws which specifically recited they were to terminate with the ending of the war. An anomalous situation is presented by the failure of the peace treaty that came to us linked up with a League of Nations pact. The proposals brought back from Versailles by the President and the international obligations that he insisted should be assumed by this country through the league in settling Old World differences need not be discussed here.

That league pact was debated before the Senate for many months, and after it was amended and Americanized to meet the approval of a large majority of the upper branch of Congress, President Wilson repudiated the document, refused to approve the treaty, and has locked horns with the coordinate treaty-making power of the Government, the Senate. If the contention of a few constitutional sharps is sound, that Congress is now helpless to act; that a Congress that has declared war, that furnished all the sinews of war, that can remove the President himself, if need be, under its constitutional powers—if that Congress can not announce to the world a self-evident fact when the war is over, we are indeed a helpless body, not responsive to common knowledge nor to the people whom we represent and who demand some action.

The treaty, the League of Nations, 60 war-time laws, and every reminder of the world's greatest tragedy still remain with us and, according to such construction, will remain unsettled until an agreement is reached in the distant future between the Executive and the Senate. Meanwhile war-time legislation continues to fetter business and prevents the country from returning to normal conditions, because theoretically war exists, when in fact it does not exist. This absurdity leaves over 100,000,000 of American people and countless millions in the world at large dependent upon the judgment or whim of one man before any resumption of peace relations can be had, notwithstanding the Kaiser's government with which we were at war has been overthrown and a different government substituted, which has tried for a year and over to negotiate peace terms with us.

The framers of our Constitution when placing the treaty-making power primarily with the President never intended to remove from the American Congress the power to stop war or to say to the world that war is ended. The European war terminated nearly a year and a half ago, and, responding to an overwhelming demand that drastic war-time legislation be repealed, this resolution should be passed. Any other course invites condemnation of a Congress that declared war early in 1917 and is now called upon to say that that war is ended.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN W. RAINEY,

OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, March 3, 1920,

On the resolution (S. J. Res. 156) that authority be, and hereby is, given to the Secretary of War to use such Army transports as may be available to bring back to the United States from Danzig, Poland, such residents of the United States of Polish origin as enlisted in the Polish Army and who were engaged in the war on the side of the allied and associated powers.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, when the history of the World War is written, it will contain no brighter pages than those devoted to the Polish Army in France. It consisted of about 108,000 men, drawn from all over the world, for the Pole, like the Irish, is ubiquitous, and wherever civilization exists there you will find both. The same cause, the tyranny of foreign oppressors whose claim to the right to rule Poland or Ireland has been found only in the might to do so, has heretofore made the Pole and the Irish wanderers in every corner of the habitable globe. A brighter day has dawned for Poland, and freedom can not much longer be denied to Ireland, even by the nation that would have hung George Washington as a traitor; that during the World War, through its propaganda, preached the right of self-determination for all peoples; and at this very hour is repeating its own history of broken promises by planting the machine gun, the tank, and 200,000 soldiers in Ireland, and thereby, and thereby only, robbing a liberty-loving people of the right to rule themselves. What the Irish in Ireland are enduring to-day arouses the heart-felt sympathy of every true Pole, and conversely the attainment of Poland's freedom has immeasurably strengthened the determination of Irishmen and all lovers of liberty throughout the world that Ireland, too, must be free and independent.

The first city in this country in which Mr. Paderewski made an appeal for recruits to the Polish Army was, I am proud to say, Chicago. We had in Chicago Poles who, because of being over age or on account of physical disabilities, were unable to get into the American Army. We had other Poles who, because they had been born on German or Austrian soil, would not be accepted by the American Army. These men did not have to go to war, but these were the very men Mr. Paderewski appealed to, and these were the men, gathered throughout this country, nearly 25,000 of them, who fought in the Polish Army in France under Gen. Joseph Haller until the armistice.

And now about 12,000 of these men are awaiting the passage of this resolution which will entitle them to return to this country on American transports. That this resolution ought to pass, there can be no question in the mind of any Member who has been acquainted with the Poles and has known them as I have in Chicago. For, Mr. Speaker, the Pole, transplanted to the United States, makes the kind of American citizen this country needs and should welcome. The Pole is appreciative of the opportunities that this country offers, and he has already demonstrated in my own city his right to be, in turn, appreciated for his sterling qualities. His children, educated in this country, compare most favorably with the sons and daughters of any other great race that contributes to our country's greatness. They are found in every profession and calling, and they reflect credit not only on themselves but also on America. Those members of this House who have first-hand knowledge of the Poles will gladly indorse my views on this resolution.

These 12,000 men have wives, children, brothers, sisters, and other relatives in this country who are anxiously looking forward to their return. That return is already overdelayed. Let us speed the date of the happy return; let us serve them who, through no fault of their own, or because of no wish of theirs, being denied the privilege of directly serving under the Stars and Stripes, journeyed over 3,000 miles, at no expense to this Government, to serve us indirectly in the Polish Army in France; and let our votes in favor of this resolution testify to our pride in the glorious record of that Polish Army and indicate in a measure the hearty welcome that awaits the soldiers of the Polish Army in France when they return to the hospitable shores of these United States of America.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 10, 1920,

On the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 327) terminating the state of war between the Imperial German Government and the United States.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I desire briefly to make a few observations on the peace resolution passed by the House last evening and to state why I voted for it. I am not a constitutional lawyer, a curbstone lawyer, or any other sort of a lawyer, and my notion is, with all good will to the lawyer, that the country would not suffer seriously if there were fewer of the various varieties of that profession here. I am, therefore, in possession only of the limited amount of cross-roads common sense with which the good Lord endowed me plus some experience gained in the school of hard knocks. If, therefore, I split wide open the Constitution by voting to end this terrible war, I will not be held as highly accountable as gentlemen learned in the law and old pals of the Constitution.

One thing that puzzles me is that these great constitutional authorities argue as fervently and as heated on this floor on one side that the peace resolution is constitutional as the gentlemen on the other side that it is a flagrant violation of the Constitution. It looks to me like the same practice obtains here as in the courts. There is always an attorney for the plaintiff and an attorney for the defendant, providing, of course, there is a fee in sight. There may be exceptions in both cases, I admit. And so it is largely with the peace resolution. I think political vantage and disadvantage animated at least some both for and against the resolution.

Without doubt some gentlemen honestly believe that Congress—and by that I mean both the House and Senate—has a constitutional right to terminate war, since it has the undoubted constitutional right to declare war. Without doubt many gentlemen honestly believe that that finality rests solely with the Senate and the President of the United States. My poor judgment is that the Constitution fixes this authority in the Senate and the President, but since they refuse, or have failed to function, something must be done. And since these same great and wise gentlemen have argued both sides of other constitutional questions heretofore and were not always sustained by the highest tribunal of the land—the Supreme Court—for one I decided to cast aside constitutional convictions, not being absolutely sure which was right and which was wrong, and vote for what I believe the people most fervently desire—peace—and let the constitutionality of the resolution be determined by others better qualified to decide than I know I am and possibly other Members of this body.

The people are tired and disgusted with the jockeying and delay in the adoption of a treaty of peace at the other end of the Capitol. The United States is not a military Nation now, and I trust that it never will be. We do not war for conquest. We were forced into the war with Germany—we did not seek it. I voted for the declaration of war, although I hate war, because there was no escape. I thank God the war was won and the Kaiser and his cohorts were driven from power, and I hope the world was made safe for democracy by the blood and sacrifice of the more than 4,000,000 brave American soldiers and the loyal support and sacrifices of a hundred million American citizens. But the war ended on the day the armistice was signed, 17 months ago. The people of the United States are more anxious to get back to normal peace conditions and be relieved of the drastic war legislation than they are that the Republican Party or the Democratic Party should win at the November election.

Mr. Speaker, I fail to see why a peace treaty can not be adopted and should not have been adopted months ago, even though the League of Nations fails. I fail to see any umbilical connection between the peace treaty and the League of Nations. If there is, give the people a chance and I think they will perform the necessary surgery. Give us one dose at a time and let each tub stand on its own bottom. I am in favor of the principles of a League of Nations, but why should the people and business be kept in turmoil and doubt for months and months while long-winded, hard-headed, gentlemen spar and jockey for political advantage? I think some of them, at least, will be muzzled and hobbled, when the people go into the booth to vote, as they should be.

I hope that the country will not be misled by the vote on the peace resolution yesterday to believe that more Republicans in Congress are in favor of a peace treaty than are Democrats. I think if there is any difference that the exact opposite is true, although the vote would not so indicate. My honest opinion is that if the President of the United States were a Republican this resolution would have never been introduced in the House or voted upon. I also believe that if the President and a majority in the Senate were of the same political faith, a peace treaty would have been agreed upon long ago. I believe a majority of the American people believe as I do, and I will therefore not further refer to the animus of the controversy which is patent to all. If it is true, then, that political reasons have delayed the ratification of a peace treaty, the President was right two years ago in his appeal for a friendly Congress, even though it proved to be a most unfortunate appeal and demonstrates that right does not always win.

I would like here to say that in my humble opinion the historian will link the names of George Washington, Abraham Lincoln, and Woodrow Wilson as the three greatest Americans to this date in the history of our Government. If those who doubt will read history they will find that the Father of his Country and the great Lincoln were vilified and criticized even more severely than the man who now occupies the White House, and who has all but sacrificed his life in his devotion to his country during the most critical period of American history. He may have made mistakes, as did even Washington and Lincoln—only the Divine One is infallible—but Wilson's place in history is secure and his achievements are imperishable.

And so, Mr. Speaker, still desiring to retain my party loyalty and with some doubts as to the constitutionality of my vote, and with even graver doubts as to the sincerity of those responsible for this resolution, I decided to cast my vote with the Republicans, hypocrites, and sinners as a protest against the dallying and dangerous methods of those who claim the right to terminate a war, which every man, woman, and child knows was ended on November 11, 1918, and as an earnest that the people are impatient with whoever is charged with the responsibility of ending the war with Germany and are anxious to resume the duties and privileges of a peaceful nation and people. If by my vote I have helped to crack the Constitution I might add that the old Liberty Bell, too, is cracked, but all good Americans still think a mighty sight of it. I know that my vote to end the war will not cause me the sleepless nights that my vote did three years ago now to declare war. If I erred in my judgment and vote, there will at least be no doubts in the mind of anyone where I stand on this question. Let us have peace with the world, if possible, and less bickerings among ourselves.

The Peace Resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. T. W. SIMS,

OF TENNESSEE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 9, 1920,

On the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 327) terminating the state of war between the Imperial German Government and the United States.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I have always wanted to believe that no partisan political purpose or advantage was considered, or to be considered, in connection with the consideration of the League of Nations or a league of nations or as to the desirability of having some kind of an international tribunal or agency by which and through which wars between nations could at least, in a large measure, be prevented.

Peace treaties looking to the perpetuation of peace or the prevention of wars between two nations may and no doubt will tend to prevent wars between the two nations parties to the treaty. Treaties of arbitration between one or more nations can and will tend to prevent wars between the nations parties thereto. Many such treaties have been made and many are in existence now between the United States and other nations. Notable examples of such treaties are those negotiated by Mr. Bryan while he was Secretary of State. But in order to prevent all wars, or practically all wars, such a treaty must embrace all the great nations of the world. Practically all nations must subscribe to and be bound in a joint effort to make war impossible as between all the nations of the earth. Manifestly, all nations becoming parties to such a treaty must do so voluntarily without compulsion or constraint and must earnestly and ardently promote and desire the full realization of the purposes of such a treaty.

But it must be remembered that a treaty to which all the nations of the world are to become parties is of necessity much more difficult to secure and perfect than a treaty between two or even three or four nations to the same tenor and effect.

The horrors of the late great World War were so terrible and so appalling that the minds of all the peoples of the world naturally turned to the thought of some great international treaty, ultimately to embrace all the nations of the world, looking to the prevention of wars altogether. Such an offer had never before been made. It was perfectly apparent that nothing less than the whole-hearted, unreserved cooperation of all the great nations of the world was necessary to accomplish the object sought. During the latter part of the month of September and the earlier part of the month of October, 1918, when Germany put out feelers as to an armistice a spirit of criticism was manifested toward the President as to any attempt he might make to secure peace by negotiation and a demand was made upon him to agree to nothing less than unconditional surrender on the part of Germany.

Finally when the terms of the armistice were made public, on the 11th day of November, 1918, by the President they were found to be nothing less, in effect, than unconditional surrender so far as Germany was concerned. But the moment that it was learned that the President contemplated going to France and taking part in person in the negotiations of a peace treaty violent criticism of such a course of action was made by many leading Republican Senators. It is true that no substantial reasons were forthcoming in support of such criticism.

But it seemed that for first one reason and then another there were a number of Republican Senators who were displeased with anything and everything the President did or tried to do. No sooner had the story come from Paris as to the tentative terms of the proposal for a League of Nations than the most violent criticism and denunciation of the proposed League of Nations was uttered by a large number of Senators, among whom were many of the Republican leaders. It was self-evident that it was intended by these Senators to discredit the President with the Allies as much as possible and thus to cripple his influence with them. Some of them went so far as to sign a statement and publish it to the world that they would not vote to ratify the treaty if it contained the League of Nations. Thirty-seven Senators signed this statement, which was called the "round robin," which number was more than one-third of the Senators, a sufficient number to defeat the ratification of the treaty if it contained the League of Nations. This was done during the last days of the Sixty-fifth Congress, and no doubt its purpose was to further discredit and further impair the influence of the President with our allies for the purpose of preventing any agreement by the Allies to any provision of the treaty proposed by the President that did not in advance have the approval and the "advice and consent" of the signers of the so-called "round robin." This was all done before any final agreement was reached as to the provisions and terms of the League of Nations. These Senators in support of their action had made detailed statements of their objections to the tentative draft of the league, and when the President returned to Paris he secured such changes in the covenant as in substance removed all the objectionable parts of the covenant that had been given out by these objecting Senators, so that the covenant as it finally appeared in the signed treaty contained none of the provisions of the covenant upon which the specific objections of the signers of the "round robin" had been based.

No doubt the President believed that he had removed all objections to the covenant that the objecting Senators specifically set out, and there is no doubt that such was his intention and purpose. But it seemed that no sooner did the President get one ground of objection removed than other grounds were conjured up as a basis for other and further objections. The tenor and temper of the objectors took the form of charges and denunciations calculated to, and no doubt did, stir up a feeling of bitterness and resentment toward the President. This manifestation of malignant hatred of the President must have been due to the bitter disappointment felt by the "round robinites" in failing to so discredit the President with our allies as to prevent the adoption of the League of Nations as a part and parcel of the general German peace treaty, and that rather than have the covenant included in the treaty, for which the whole world would credit the President, they decided to defeat the ratification of the entire peace treaty; but in doing so they wanted, if possible, to deceive the people into believing that the President is the whole cause of the defeat of treaty ratification. In pursuance of this purpose the pending resolution was introduced, fully believing that the President will veto the resolution and that the veto will be sustained. It is believed by the majority party, both here and in the Senate, that they can make their partisan followers believe that they have done all they could, both by ratification of the treaty and then by joint resolution, to bring about a state of peace, and that the President is altogether to blame for the failure of both methods to bring about peace, which is so much desired by everybody.

Mr. Speaker, I can not see how anybody, however biased and however partisan he may be, can, after a full examination of the record, come to the conclusion that the Republicans in the Senate are really sincere in desiring the ratification of the treaty, either with the so-called Lodge reservations or without them.

Mr. Speaker, the vote on the ratification of the treaty with the Lodge reservations on November 19, 1919, was as follows:

The roll call resulted—yeas 41, nays 51, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the resolution of ratification the yeas are 41 and the nays 51. The resolution not having received the constitutional two-thirds, it is rejected.

It will thus be seen that the following Democrats voted for ratification, to wit: GORE, MYERS, OWEN, POMERENE, SHIELDS, SMITH of Georgia, and WALSH of Massachusetts. Seven in all.

The ratification of the treaty with the Lodge reservations having failed, the following further proceedings were had by the Senate on November 19, 1919, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution submitted by the Senator from Alabama.

The Secretary read as follows:

"Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate do advise and consent to the ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany concluded at Versailles on the 28th day of June, 1919."

Mr. UNDERWOOD and Mr. LODGE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

The roll call was concluded.

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 53, as follows:

So the resolution of ratification offered by Mr. UNDERWOOD was rejected.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order——

Mr. LODGE. One moment. I yielded to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and did not make the point of order as I might then have made it, but I desire now to make a motion in connection with the treaty.

I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate rejected the resolution of ratification moved by the Senator from Alabama, and pending that motion I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and, having been taken, resulted—yeas 48, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—48.

So Mr. LODGE's motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I now renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business.

Mr. FLETCHER. I make the point of order that the business next in order would be to communicate to the President the various resolutions and action thereon relative to the treaty.

Mr. LODGE. That order is not necessary. It was so held by the Senate in the case of the Chamberlain-Bayard treaty, which was rejected as this has been.

Mr. FLETCHER. I observe that nearly all the precedents are to the contrary.

Mr. LODGE. It has been done many times, but it was held in the case of that treaty that it was not necessary, and it is not necessary. I am sure the President will take official notice of the action of the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like a ruling of the Chair on the point of order as made, anyway.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Well, the Chair overrules the point of order.

It will be seen, Mr. Speaker, that on motion of Senator UNDERWOOD, on November 19, 1919, to ratify the treaty without any reservations after the motion to ratify with the Lodge reservations had failed, that there were 38 votes for ratification, all Democrats but one, Senator MCCUMBER, and that there were only 6 Democrats who voted against ratification without any reservations, to wit, GORE, REED, SHIELDS, SMITH of Georgia, THOMAS, and WALSH of Massachusetts.

It further appears that Senator LODGE moved to reconsider the Underwood motion and to lay that motion on the table, and that every Republican, except Senator MCCUMBER, voted for the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table, and two Democrats also voted for the motion to lay on the table, Senators REED and SHIELDS. Every Senator, including the so-called mild reservationists, knew that when he voted to lay the motion to reconsider on the table that he made it impossible to further consider the treaty during the remainder of the Sixty-sixth Congress without a two-thirds vote for suspension of the rules in order to take the treaty from the table. How can any Senator who voted to lay the motion to reconsider on the table expect anyone to believe that he sincerely wanted to ratify the treaty with the Lodge reservations? If he had been sincere, would he not have wanted the treaty to remain in such a situation as would enable the Senate by two-thirds majority vote to again try to secure the ratification of the treaty with the Lodge reservations? tI will be seen that only 53 Senators, including Republicans and Democrats, voted for ratification with the Lodge reservations. So it appears that the vote to ratify with Lodge reservations was not sufficient to take the treaty from the table for further consideration. The press reports carried an item to the effect that Senator LODGE said the treaty was dead.

Mr. Speaker, it further appears that Senator FLETCHER made the point of order that the business next in order was to communicate to the President the action of the Senate on the treaty and that Senator LODGE insisted that such an order was not necessary, that he was sure the President would take official notice of the action of the Senate. Senator LODGE seemed to be anxious to retain the physical possession of the treaty, and for what reason seems sufficiently to appear in the concurrent resolution that he immediately had sent to the desk and read, as follows:

That the said state of war between Germany and the United States is hereby declared to be at an end.

We all know that a concurrent resolution does not require the approval of the President, but becomes valid and effective simply by a majority vote of both Houses; but a joint resolution, like the one now pending, requires the approval of the President in order to become effective, or else it must pass over his veto by a two-thirds vote of both Houses. Now, I ask why was the Lodge concurrent resolution not acted on and passed? It could be passed by a simple majority vote of both Houses and could not be blocked by the veto of the President.

Does anybody believe for a moment that Senator LODGE had not sought and obtained the ablest legal advice before introducing his concurrent resolution at the very moment the Senate refused to ratify the treaty either with or without reservations, and after his motion to table his own motion to reconsider had been laid on the table, and after he had stated, in opposing Senator FLETCHER's point of order that the treaty should, by order of the Senate, be returned to the President, that it was unnecessary to make such an order; that the President would take official notice of the proceedings of the Senate touching its action on the treaty? Now, I ask, why was not that concurrent resolution acted on by both Houses long ago? Why wait from November 19, 1919, until April 9, 1920, and then bring in a joint resolution that does require the signature of the President in order to be valid or else its enactment by a two-thirds majority of both Houses over the veto of the President? The majority in this House and the Senate have not the slightest doubt that a concurrent resolution declaring the war has ended can pass and will pass both Houses by a decided majority and will be valid and legal without the approval of the President.

Mr. Speaker, I can not escape the conclusion, based upon the record action of the Republican leadership in both the Senate and House, that they really do not want to end the state of war but want to make the people believe that the reason it does not end legally and technically is because the President will not accept the Lodge nullifying reservations to the treaty and then vetoes a joint resolution declaring the war has ended. Your action simply means that you had rather put the blame on the President and have neither a ratification of the treaty nor the ending of the war by resolution than to end the war by either process. As a further argument that compels me to accept this conclusion I cite the action of the Senate leader and his Republican followers in the action taken by the Senate on the 19th of March, 1920.

Mr. Speaker, I call your attention to the fact that in the vote for ratification of the treaty of the 19th of November, 1919, only 7 Democrats voted for ratification with the Lodge reservations, but that on the vote for the ratification of the treaty on March 19, 1920, 21 Democrats voted for ratification with the Lodge reservations.

The vote on ratification with Lodge reservations on March 19 was as follows:

The roll call having been concluded, it resulted—yeas 49, nays 35, as follows:

It therefore appears that 14 Democrats had been gained for the ratification with Lodge reservations from November 19, 1919, to March 19, 1920, in exactly four months. It will also appear that on this vote only 28 Republicans voted for ratification with Lodge reservations, but it appears that in the vote for ratification of the treaty with the Lodge reservations on November 19, 1919, there were 34 Republican votes for ratification, or 6 more Republican votes for ratification with Lodge reservations on November 19, 1919, than on March 19, 1920.

So it appears that the Lodge reservations ratification vote in these four months lost 6 Republicans and gained 14 Democrats. And, in all reason, Mr. Speaker, does it not seem reasonable that if Senator LODGE really wanted the treaty ratified with his own reservations he would have been tremendously encouraged by the great gain in Democratic votes and would have felt that all he needed to do would be to make another effort; that he would soon be able to ratify the treaty with his own reservations with Democratic votes, and be thus enabled to ratify in spite of the well organized and duly encouraged senatorial "battalion of death"? But how did he act in this delightfully encouraging situation? I will let the RECORD speak for itself:

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be instructed to return to the President the treaty of peace with Germany, signed at Versailles on the 28th day of June, 1919, and respectfully inform the President that the Senate has failed to ratify said treaty, being unable to obtain the constitutional majority therefor."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. LODGE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I desire to inquire whether this is a debatable matter?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the question is debatable.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hope the consideration of the resolution may be deferred for a little more mature consideration. So long as the treaty remains in the Senate there is a possibility of action upon it. When we send it to the White House that possibility is probably at an end. Under those circumstances why not take a day or two in which to consider the matter? Why so precipitately act upon it at this time?

It seems to me that the sincere friends of ratification of a real treaty, those who sincerely desire to make the last effort to bring together the presidential mind and the mind of the Senate, ought to be willing to defer action upon the matter at this time.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have offered this resolution, which has been the customary resolution in most cases where a treaty has been rejected by the Senate, because it seemed to me that after a year devoted to the discussion of the treaty and after the Senate had twice refused by more than a one-third vote to advise and consent to its ratification, the time had come to end it. The hope that we can again take the treaty up and discuss it in the present Senate is a vain one, and we have no right to bring it again before the Senate and interfere with all the public business of the country for another two months. Personally, I have gone as far as I think I am justified in going in the effort to get the treaty ratified. I think, in justice to the country and the business of the country and our public duty, we should officially inform the President of the action of the Senate.

In the first instance I did not present the resolution but withheld it, but I think to keep it here a day or two longer, drag it on and precipitate further debate, would be simply a failure to perform our duty.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, it is possible that the motion as made by the Senator from Massachusetts may be adopted with practical unanimity. What I am asking now is that it may be deferred until to-morrow. It is not important to take the action to-night.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask that the resolution may be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again state the resolution.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be instructed to return to the President the treaty of peace with Germany signed at Versailles on the 28th day of June, 1919, and respectfully inform the President that the Senate has failed to advise and consent to the ratification of the said treaty, being unable to obtain the constitutional majority therefor."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I cite the Chair to the last paragraph of Rule XIV, which reads as follows:

"All resolutions shall lie over one day for consideration, unless by unanimous consent the Senate shall otherwise direct."

I object to the consideration of this resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the resolution is in order.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. Speaker, I beg to call special attention to the fact that when the treaty failed in November, 1919, that while Senator FLETCHER insisted that it was the proper course of procedure to send the treaty back to the President with all the resolutions informing him of the action of the Senate, that Senator LODGE insisted that it was wholly unnecessary, but now see how he acts about the same matter on the 19th of March, 1920. He introduces the resolution himself and insists on sending the treaty back to the President with information of the action of the Senate; the very thing that Senator FLETCHER insisted should be done under exactly the same conditions on November 19, 1919. I also call attention to the pleading of Senator HITCHCOCK to permit the treaty to remain in the Senate so that the Senate could act on it at its will and pleasure. But Senator LODGE had seen that if the treaty remained in the Senate, where it could again be considered without let or hindrance of the President, that there was the greatest danger of its being ratified, Lodge reservations and all, by further increase in Democratic votes. Of course, the Senator could not bear the thought of having the treaty ratified with his death-dealing reservations by Democratic votes. So he reverses his own position and urges the passage of his resolution to send the treaty back to the President so it would be impossible for the treaty to be ratified, even with his own death-head reservations and in spite of the well-organized and well-nurtured "battalion of death." So we find that on the resolution to send the treaty back to the President so that it would not be possible for the Senate again, on its own motion, to take up and ratify the treaty unless the President should again send it back to the Senate, every single Republican voted to send it back to the President, together with five Democrats; that it also included all the members of the "battalion of death" on active duty at that time.

There were 37 votes against sending it back to the President, and every one of them were Democrats. These Democrats wanted to retain the treaty in the Senate so that it could be further considered without the affirmative action of the President. If the 5 Democrats had voted with the 37 Democrats the vote would have been a tie and the resolution would have failed of passage, and the treaty would now be in the Senate subject to ratification with the Lodge reservations, but all the Republicans that voted with the five Democrats said by their votes that "we do not want to give ourselves any further chance to do what we proclaim publicly that we want to do. So we will send the treaty back to the President, hoping that he will not send it back, and then we will go to the country and tell the people that the President is too stubborn to send the treaty back to us and is therefore to blame for not permitting the treaty to be ratified by the possible further increase in Democratic votes for ratification, Lodge reservations and all." Now, I ask, how can anyone expect that the people are going to believe that there is any sincerity back of this resolution or back of the pretended desire of the Republicans in the Senate, who have denied themselves all opportunity to further act in the treaty without the initiative of the so much hated and despised President who will live in history for thousands of years after the memory of these pigmies of hate and malice have faded from the pages of history and have passed into well-deserved oblivion?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RICHARD F. McKINIRY,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 9, 1920.

Mr. McKINIRY. Mr. Speaker, I have voted against the rule proposed for the consideration of House joint resolution No. 327, a resolution declaring that the war with Germany is at an end, because that rule is a harsh, arbitrary exercise of the power of the majority of this House to stifle the free expression of the opinion of the individual Members of the House. Under the terms of that rule no amendment can be offered to this important legislation.

Notwithstanding that fact and also notwithstanding the fact that this resolution, in my opinion, is a clumsy, incoherent, and inadequate method of ending the greatest war in all history, I shall vote in favor of the resolution. I would have preferred to vote for this resolution only after it had been amended, but I believe it expresses in substance the real thought of the people of the United States at this time.

I know also that the action sought to be brought about by this resolution more properly belongs to the President of the United States and to the Senate of the United States, but more than a reasonable length of time has been given to those two branches of our Government to exercise the jurisdiction which more properly belongs to them on this subject, and the time has come when, if the House of Representatives has any power in the premises, then it should exercise it. There is, of course, a preliminary question whether or not the House of Representatives has any power. We can not solve that question. It belongs to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States to say whether or not the adoption of this resolution is an unconstitutional act. In no other way can we be satisfied that the House of Representatives has not the power. The mere declaration by a number of the Members of the House, no matter how deep and profound their knowledge of constitutional law may be, is not an answer to the country on this point. If it is deemed that we have the power, then there is no escape from the duty pointed out to the House of Representatives as the direct representatives of the people to bring about an end to the insufferable condition of affairs arising from the failure of the President and the Senate to agree on a treaty ending the war.

We have not sought and are not seeking now a separate peace, nor are we deserting those countries which were associated with us in the World War. That might be said if this resolution were being considered a year ago in the House of Representatives, but now the plain facts are to the contrary. Is France in danger? Is Belgium in danger? Is England in danger? Is any one of those associated allies in danger? No! Germany now lies prostrate, weak, its military and naval power destroyed, confronted with internal war, and not in a position now or in the near future to raise a strong hand against any nation. If it is said that this resolution endangers the League of Nations, then it might be answered that perhaps, after all, the people of this country have no desire to enter the present League of Nations which makes England the dominating nation of the world, a League of Nations which has not formally recognized the constitutional limitations of the American Government, and a league that has yet to demonstrate whether it will or will not bring real self-determination to the weak and the small nations of the earth.

On the termination of the great World War there is no doubt that the people of this country generally favored the entry of the United States into a league of nations which would have as its purpose the ending of war, the reduction of armament, and the general advance of civilization. There is also no doubt that while the people of this country desired to cooperate with a league of nations, they by no means desired to surrender for such a league the policies which made this a great Republic, nor is there such necessity.

The people of this country were content that the duly constituted treaty-making branches of our Government, under the Constitution, should plan and adopt such a treaty, but after more than a year of discussions, debate, and recriminations no treaty, with or without a league of nations embodied in it, has been formally adopted. It is very evident that the treaty-making machinery of this country has broken down under a great and unusual task. What, then, is to be done? A deadlock exists between the President, who, as such, is charged with the duty of initiating and originating a treaty, and the Senate, which is charged with the duty of assenting to such treaty.

The continuation of the present status of this country as regards the Governments of Germany and Austria is impossible. Not only does commerce and trade require the resumption of relations with the rest of the world on a peace basis, but the people of the United States are irritated and harassed by legislation cheerfully endured by them as necessary war-time legislation, but now unendurable when, as every citizen knows, this country is actually at peace.

The people, through their Representatives in Congress, cheerfully gave to the Executive every possible means of conducting the war, and now that the war is ended there is no necessity of continuing the harsh and strict legislation demanded by those emergency conditions. There is no doubt that the people of the country desire a return to conditions of peace. There is no doubt that war measures should not continue when we are actually at peace. The spirit and intelligence of our people can never countenance the fictitious and technical state of war now existing as an excuse for the continuance of war-time restrictions.

And now, under these circumstances, a resolution is presented in the House of Representatives declaring the war at an end and terminating all war legislation, and requiring the Government of Germany to notify the President of the United States that it has declared the termination of the war with the United States and that it waives any claim or benefit against the United States or its citizens that Germany would not have a right to assert had the United States ratified the treaty of Versailles. This resolution also has a clause penalizing the Government of Germany and its citizens in case it fails to declare that it has terminated the war with the United States, and has several clauses unimportant when compared with the main features of the resolution. This resolution squarely presents to each Representative whether or not he recognizes the fact that the war is at an end; secondly, whether or not he desires to end war-time legislation.

The first question presented is whether or not this resolution is a treaty. If it is a treaty, then the Houes of Representatives is assuming unconstitutional power. The declaration of the ending of a war is not a treaty, since a treaty is an agreement between two nations. There is no agreement here between this country and Germany; secondly, there is no constitutional prohibition against Congress declaring the end of the war. It does not usurp the prerogative of the Executive in so doing, because in no place in the Constitution is the Executive given the exclusive right to terminate a war. Only by implication from his power over treaties can the Executive be deemed empowered to end hostilities.

That whole question has never been clearly determined. If this resolution brings about its solution it will serve a great purpose.

The termination of legislation enacted for the period of the war is plainly within the powers of Congress. Therefore the only doubtful question in this resolution as to its constitutionality is the third section, forbidding the citizens of this country to trade with Germany until such time as the German Government has notified the President of the United States that it has fulfilled the conditions of this resolution. Congress has the right to make legislation contingent on a fact to be ascertained and announced by the President. This principle was announced by the Supreme Court of the United States which, under the Constitution, has the power and duty of interpreting the Constitution. It has precedents in the embargo acts of 1809, 1810, and in the act of Congress relating to the annexation of Texas in 1845.

I personally still believe in and hope to see the establishment of a League of Nations. I hope to see such a League of Nations established as will permit the United States to become a member without impairing or undermining any of those great principles of representative government and democracy which have made this country the greatest Republic of all time.

I believe also that the creation of a League of Nations on the plan devised at Versailles is one of the most wonderful advances of civilization in all history, but I further believe that the founders of this country never dreamed at the time of the adoption of the Constitution that the treaty-making power devolved by them on the President and Senate would ever be used for the purpose of forming a federation of the nations of the entire world, of which federation this Republic would be an integral part. There is no doubt that the United States, in entering the League of Nations as now proposed, would yield some of its sovereignty. I believe that the real spirit of our institutions should require the submission of such a treaty to the people directly, because it does alter fundamentally the independent existence and freedom of action of our country.

The adoption of this resolution of peace in no wise interferes with the entry of this country into the League of Nations, whether it enters that league by a treaty made by the President and ratified by the Senate or by means of a treaty ratified by the people directly. The League of Nations, by its own constitution, is open at all times to new members, and for that reason I can see no room for criticism of this resolution as a resolution hostile to the membership of the United States in the League of Nations. The question of the right or of the expediency of the United States becoming a member of the League of Nations is so important that, in my opinion, it should be absolutely determined only when the majority of the citizens of this country desire that end.

This is a Government of the people; never should the representatives of the people change the fundamental law of the land except in answer to the clear voice and command of the people.

Despite its defects, I shall vote for this resolution. Its consideration transcends all partisan party policies. It clears the road leading to normal peaceful prosperity.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES R. EVANS, OF NEVADA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 9, 1920.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Mr. Speaker, while favoring the amendment offered by Mr. KITCHIN to recommit as improving the proposed legislation, still to support this measure of peace my mind is set.

We equipped and sent across the sea a superb army of more than 2,000,000 men, with double that number prepared to follow and carry on our principles for humanity and for peace. No nation has, nor will they ever achieve, this solid, radiant record. Our Army and our Navy were ready; our Nation expected victory of level justice, which would speedily come through indomitable courage armed with righteous resolve, but bungling statesmanship intervened with the high-sounding word "armistice." There should have been no temporary cessation by mutual agreement of hostilities instead of the powerful peace our preparations justified. We are not at actual—only technical—war with the Imperial German Government. That Government is gone, perished, its successor struggling for light which shines from a Republic. It is our country's wish for universal peace to include all men who forever renounce monarchy. There can be no harm in this resolution and much good will ensue from its adoption. We want peace without politics, if possible, but lasting and honorable peace.

This measure declares nothing more; its modesty recommends it to the world. A peace agreement now will aid in removing reminders of war. We wish to continue our present charitable intentions to all nations. Our actions prove honest purpose in all dealings with them, but we do not bind ourselves by blanket liability nor enter agreements without knowing all the responsibility for ourselves. Our Nation is not ready to sign a contract calling for enlisting boys, uniforming, training, and arming them to answer a hurry call from the War Department or elsewhere to enforce orders of one or more foreign nations without first having the legitimate declaration of Congress. We continue our high moral plane of action in foreign affairs, always certain that it is America bound only by our conscience and our honor with even justice in all foreign relations.

Where is harm coming to us from passing this resolution with amendment? It indorses that which our Nation has always wished, enduring peace. Why assume that a treaty of peace, combined with a covenant to enforce peace, can ever be consummated? We want peace composed of plain statements, which all will understand. This bill extracts a treaty of peace from covenant complexity. Thus it becomes our duty to advance peace while clearing the way for consideration of agreement with all nations of the world participating in the dignity of a covenant. Accepting the higher definition of covenant as the one most fitting where human life is so vitally concerned, we first indorse the way; afterwards we will with wise judgment consider a covenant.

Our Nation has looked with confidence for relief from war-time measures, cheerfully borne during war, until now we suffer from hope deferred. We are not fully convinced, with conflicting citations of previous action, but hold out our hands containing the Golden Rule, while our country with sublime faith looks to Congress.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EVERETTE B. HOWARD,
OF OKLAHOMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 9, 1920.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, in accordance possibly with every Member of this House I am more than anxious that we shall have peace, a real peace, and a lasting peace at the earliest possible moment. It was to secure a real peace and a lasting peace that we were forced to enter the World War in April, 1917. It was for these things that we made great sacrifices during the dark and bloody days from that time until the signing of the armistice on November 11, 1918. But, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion the passage of this resolution does not mean peace, and certainly not the lasting peace we desire. At best it is only a makeshift, calculated to bring no good to this country or to its citizens, but is, in my humble opinion, only a partisan effort to shift the responsibility of duty nonperformed from the shoulders of a partisan United States Senate—a large number of whose partisan Members signed a "round robin" against its ratification while it was yet in the making—to those who are standing firmly in behalf of a real and lasting peace. In my opinion, it is one of the most desperate and most dangerous pieces of partisan legislation ever attempted upon the people of the United States. It is an attempt to, for political purposes, ride down, set aside, and destroy the Constitution of the United States, the greatest Constitution ever written for the government of man, the bulwark upon which our freedom has rested for more than a hundred years, and through which we have built up the greatest Nation ever known in the history of the world.

It is the history of nations that when the people disregard and set aside their constitution decay and decline of those nations begin, and it is a sad reflection upon our Government in this enlightened age that any man or set of men would become so daring in their efforts for political preferment as to in any way even suggest the overriding of our Constitution, as is suggested in the attempt to pass this resolution.

Consequently, knowing that such a resolution is unconstitutional, in that it does not conform to the constitutional provision for making peace as is provided by Article II, section 2, of the Constitution, which is as follows:

He—

shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur.

I can not bring myself to forget the Constitution and support this resolution. I can not support it for the reason that the record of the Constitutional Convention of 1787 sets out that an attempt was made to clothe the Congress with the power which is now suggested in this resolution by giving it a right to make peace, which right was denied to it at that time by a unanimous vote of the framers of the Constitution.

I can not support this resolution in view of the fact that the history of our Government discloses that it has been the uniform construction on behalf of the Government since our Constitution was formed that the power to make treaties is vested in the President and the United States Senate and that relative to same the House of Representatives has no jurisdiction.

But, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, even if Congress had the power to pass such resolution, it would be both unwise and dangerous. It is but an effort to make a separate peace with an enemy nation, and would alienate the friendship of the 45 nations which have just signed the peace treaty, consequently would not bring to our citizenship the things which they hope for in a declaration of peace, but would destroy our prestige and our war achievements.

The passage of such a resolution would commit us and our country to an abandonment of their effort to secure a method of settling disputes by arbitration, an abandonment of all methods by which we could secure the reduction of armament of the nations of the world, and an abandonment of our earnest desire and hope for the abolition of secret treaties—three fundamental and needed principles for which the world has so long craved, for which 50,000 American boys gave their lives, for which 236,000 of our boys were wounded on the battle fields of France, and for which principles we are to-day staggering under the load of taxation to raise the money with which to repay the $30,000,000,000 which we expended in war activities and loans.

The passage of this resolution, to my mind, would be an abandonment of the $500,000,000 worth of alien property seized under the authority of Congress, and would forever wipe out the opportunity for American citizens to recover on indemnity claims against the German Government, amounting to more than a billion dollars. In short, the passage of this resolution would accomplish nothing. It will not aid the regularly constituted treaty-making authorities to arrive at a conclusion, but will, in my opinion, delay and hamper our opportunities for peace; it would tend to confuse and retard the efforts for peace, rather than aid and promote.

A peace should be made at once; in fact, should have been made many months ago. The Constitution places the responsibility. Those upon whom this responsibility rests should rise to the occasion and perform the duties which the Constitution imposes upon them.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. KING SWOPE,

OF KENTUCKY.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 9, 1920.

On joint resolution (H. J. Res. 327) terminating the state of war between the Imperial German Government and the United States.

Mr. SWOPE. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this peace resolution and am going to vote for it, but before going into a discussion of the provisions of this resolution let us analyze the conditions under which it becomes necessary for the House of Representatives to present a separate peace resolution.

On the 11th of November, 1918, actual war with the Central Powers ceased and has not been resumed. After the signing of the armistice our representatives went to Versailles to take part in the preparation of a peace treaty. Of our representatives, the President was without doubt the spokesman and central figure.

When they returned they brought not only a treaty but a League of Nations, and instead of being two separate documents they were so interwoven and intertwined as to constitute one document. The quite obvious purpose was to compel the American people to accept the League of Nations in order to have a peace treaty.

Everyone was tired of war and wanted peace, but when this League of Nations was carefully examined it was discovered that it proposed to tie us up in a supergovernment which was to be set up above the United States and which gave England and her colonies six votes while the United States was to have only one vote.

It also pledged the United States to help preserve the "territorial integrity and political independence of all members of the league." Now, what does that mean? It means that we would be entangled in practically every war on the earth, and we have the President's word in substance to that effect.

In speaking to the Roumanian and Serbian delegations he said, in part:

If the world should be troubled again, if the conditions which we all regard as fundamental are challenged, the guaranty which will be given you will pledge that the United States will send its Army and fleet across the ocean.

Lloyd-George, the British premier, in presenting the league to the British Parliament, said:

Had it been in existence in 1914 it would have been difficult for Germany to make war; and if they had, America would have been in the first day instead of two years afterwards.

And yet this is the article 10 which President Wilson declared was the heart of the league. Instead of being a heart it is a veritable war breeder.

Something like 100 years ago England, France, Austria, Germany, and Russia formed the greatest alliance in the history of the world to promote peace, and inside of 10 years they were fighting among themselves. Europe, since the dawn of creation, has been the stage upon which war almost continuously has played. From 1812 to 1914 there were 106 European wars, and we were not involved in a single one of them. Had we signed the league covenant as it was proposed before reservations, the very minute a war started over the "political independence" or "territorial integrity" of any of the European members of the league we would be forced into it also.

Now, some people who never did any military service and who had no sons, brothers, or husbands in the service may urge this country to involve itself in all foreign wars for so-called altruistic purposes, but I have been unable to find a single soldier who wants to go back at a later date to fight for the League of Nations. I have been unable to hear of a single mother or father who is in favor of having his or her boy drafted to go to Europe and help preserve the "territorial integrity and political independence" of the various members of the league.

WITHDRAWAL.

This league also failed to provide any way for this or any other Government to withdraw from it. After the President was notified of that fact he secured a provision which permitted a Government to withdraw only upon two years' notice, provided it had performed all of its obligations, which was practically no better, because a nation might be destroyed in two years; and, moreover, the language of the covenant failed to state who should be the judge as to whether or not the country desiring to withdraw had performed all of its obligations. Suppose the United States should join and then decide to withdraw. Would we want England and her six votes and the other countries of Europe voting to keep us in against our will, simply because they believed we had not performed all our obligations, perchance because we might decline to sacrifice our boys to maintain the territorial integrity of Roumania or Serbia?

Such a proposition and covenant are contrary to all American ideals and destructive of our rights for which our forefathers shed their blood in every battle from Lexington to Yorktown. After this Nation has been absolutely free from England 144 years, and during that time developed into the greatest Nation on earth, our President has proposed to tie us up again in an alliance on the terms just mentioned.

AMENDMENTS OFFERED.

Fortunately, when he laid this proposition before the United States Senate all the Republican Senators, aided by a few Democratic Senators, who loved the United States more than they love the President, said we will not permit this country to become a party to such a dangerous and un-American compact; but we will revise it with reservations which maintain the complete independence and sovereignty of the United States, which will equalize the voting power of the different members of the league, which state that the United States alone shall be the judge as to whether we have performed all the obligations necessary before withdrawing from the league, and which will relieve the United States from any obligation whatever to send her soldiers or sailors to die for the "political independence" or "territorial integrity" of any foreign country. And a majority of the Senate adopted these reservations. These reservations were adopted by an average majority of 28 votes on each reservation. Then, the President said we had to accept the League of Nations without any changes or we could not have peace at all, and directed every Democratic Senator he could control to vote against it, and they did, and that is how it was defeated, although there was a majority of 14 in favor of ratifying with reservations and the vote shows it. Twenty-eight Republican Senators and 21 Democratic Senators voted for the League of Nations and peace treaty after it had been amended with reservations, and 23 Democrats and only 12 Republicans voted against it. So a two-thirds vote necessary to adoption failed.

A DEADLOCK.

Our Constitution provides that the President "shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur." The President refused the advice of a majority of the Senate and, as a result, was unable to get its consent. As a result thereof we have a deadlock between the President and the Senate; and as long as this deadlock prevails the United States will technically be at war, and all war-time legislation will remain in force unless we, the members of the House of Representatives, acting within our powers, relieve this situation. With the purpose of terminating the state of war and permitting the resumption of foreign trade, the House of Representatives has before it to-day House joint resolution No. 327, and practically every Democratic member of this body is trying to defeat this great measure. They are admitting that the Republican members will pass it, yet they tell us that the President will veto it. To you, my Democratic friends, I say, without the least spirit of bitter partisanship, you can vote against this resolution if you feel like it, but we are going to pass it over your protest, and if the President vetoes it, I still believe that there will remain enough patriots to pass it over his veto. The only reason our Democratic friends can offer for voting against this peace resolution is they think it is unconstitutional. Let us now read it and see if it is unconstitutional, and, if so, wherein it is unconstitutional.

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 327) terminating the state of war declared to exist April 6, 1917, between the Imperial German Government and the United States, permitting on conditions the resumption of reciprocal trade with Germany, and for other purposes.

Whereas the President of the United States, in the performance of his constitutional duty to give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, has advised the Congress that the war with the Imperial German Government has ended:

Resolved, etc., That the state of war declared to exist between the Imperial German Government and the United States by the joint resolution of Congress approved April 6, 1917, is hereby declared at an end.

SEC. 2. That in the interpretation of any provision relating to the date of the termination of the present war or of the present or existing emergency in any acts of Congress, joint resolutions, or proclamations of the President containing provisions contingent upon the date of the termination of the war or of the present or existing emergency, the date when this resolution becomes effective shall be construed and treated as the date of the termination of the war or of the present or existing emergency, notwithstanding any provision in any act of Congress or joint resolution providing any other mode of determining the date of the termination of the war or of the present or existing emergency.

SEC. 3. That with a view to secure reciprocal trade with the German Government and its nationals, and for this purpose, it is hereby provided that unless within 45 days from the date when this resolution becomes effective the German Government shall duly notify the President of the United States that it has declared a termination of the war with the United States and that it waives and renounces on behalf of itself and its nationals any claim, demand, right, or benefit against the United States or its nationals that it or they would not have had the right to assert had the United States ratified the treaty of Versailles, the President of the United States shall have the power, and it shall be his duty, to proclaim the fact that the German Government has not given the notification hereinbefore mentioned and thereupon and until the President shall have proclaimed the receipt of such notification, commercial intercourse between the United States and Germany and the making of loans or credits, and the furnishing of financial assistance or supplies to the German Government or the inhabitants of Germany, directly or indirectly, by the Government or the inhabitants of the United States shall, except with the license of the President, be prohibited.

SEC. 4. That whoever shall willfully violate the foregoing prohibition whenever the same shall be in force shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or, if a natural person, imprisoned for not more than two years, or both; and the officer, director, or agent of any corporation who knowingly participates in such violation shall be punished by a like fine, imprisonment, or both, and any property, funds, securities, papers, or other articles or documents, or any vessel, together with her tackle, apparel, furniture, and equipment, concerned in such violation, shall be forfeited to the United States.

SEC. 5. That nothing herein contained shall be construed as a waiver by the United States of any rights, privileges, indemnities, reparations, or advantages, to which the United States has become entitled under the terms of the armistice signed November 11, 1918, or which were acquired by or are in the possession of the United States by reason of its participation in the war, or otherwise; and all fines, forfeitures, penalties, and seizures imposed or made by the United States are hereby ratified, confirmed, and maintained.

Now, what is unconstitutional about that? The opponents of this resolution, as I have just stated, claim it is unconstitutional, because they say the House of Representatives does not possess the treaty-making power. In other words, they base their whole argument upon the false assumption that this resolution constitutes a treaty. If it is simply a resolution formally and officially declaring a condition known already to exist and prescribing the conditions upon which commerce can be resumed, it is not a treaty and is constitutional, and we are clearly within our rights. Let us see what a treaty is. A treaty is defined as a compact between two or more sovereign States. The requisites of a valid treaty are (1) competent sovereign States; (2) expression of agreement; (3) agreements signified by agents; (4) it must be ratified. Do all of these elements appear in the resolution? They do not. Then, certainly it is not a treaty. But now the opponents of this resolution ask why pass it if it is not a treaty, because they claim a treaty is the proper way to terminate a war. In answer to that argument I would cite them to Oppenheim on International Law, who states that war may be terminated in three different ways:

(1) Abstain from further acts of war and glide into peaceful relations without expressly making peace through a special treaty; (2) belligerents may formally establish the condition of a peace through a special treaty of peace; (3) a belligerent may end the war through subjugation of his adversary. (Oppenheim, International Law, vol. 2, p. 322.)

In view of the fact that the President and the Senate have failed to agree upon a treaty of peace as contemplated in the second method of terminating a war as just read, it is the plain duty and right of Congress to declare that the condition as described in paragraph (1) by Oppenheim has arrived, and to give official recognition to the fact that war has terminated. This is not the first time this kind of resolution has passed the House. As brought out by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TEMPLE], the House of Representatives passed a similar resolution just prior to the admission of the State of Texas to the Union. Before Texas became a State of our Union it was an independent Republic, known as the Republic of Texas, and the United States made several treaties with the Republic of Texas. When the Republic of Texas sought admission to the Union, a treaty of annexation was prepared, and then, just as to-day, a joint resolution was offered which relieved the situation, and although it was not a treaty it accomplished the same end. I will offer section 2 of that old resolution just to show the great similarity between it and the resolution we have to-day. It provided, in part, as follows:

SEC. 2. And be it further resolved, That the foregoing consent of Congress is given upon the following conditions and with the following guaranty, to wit: First, said State to be formed subject to the adjustment by this government of all questions of boundary that may arise with other governments; and the constitution thereof, with the proper evidence of its adoption by the people of said Republic of Texas, shall be transmitted to the President of the United States to be laid before Congress on or before the 1st day of January, 1846.

That joint resolution prescribed the conditions under which another republic might be admitted to the Union and required notice by the President of the Republic of Texas to that effect, just as section 3 of the resolution we are discussing to-day prescribes the conditions under which commercial relations might be resumed with Germany. The Constitution expressly provides that Congress shall have the power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations," and that is all section 3 of the joint resolution does. It provides for the resumption of trade with Germany upon certain conditions. This is not unprecedented. In 1809 and 1810 the House passed two similar resolutions which permitted us to trade with England and France only when those countries conformed to conditions set out in the resolutions and their compliance therewith proclaimed by the President. Thomas Jefferson, whom our Democratic friends proclaim the father of their party, was President at the time and he signed the act of 1809, and Madison, commonly referred to as "the father of the Constitution," was President in 1810, and he signed the act of 1810, and neither of these great leaders raised the objection that they were unconstitutional, so it seems a little late for our Democratic friends to advance that objection.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, this resolution simply places this country in a normal status of peace. It repeals all extraordinary war powers, reestablishes reciprocal trade with Germany, and gives the people and honest business a chance to proceed in a condition of certainty. I see no valid reason why we should technically be at war 17 months after war actually ended, and therefore I am glad to support this joint resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM W. HASTINGS,

OF OKLAHOMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 9, 1920.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, the joint resolution under discussion, instead of being called a peace resolution, should be called a political resolution. It was introduced for political purposes and it is being debated for no other reasons. No one believes that it will finally pass or become a law or be effective. The Republican majority appreciates that the Senate is being criticized from one end of the country to the other for not cooperating with the President in making a treaty of peace. In order to divert attention from the Republican Senate, this political resolution was introduced. Let us consider what it attempts to do.

In the first place, it has a misleading preamble stating that in substance the President has said the war was at an end. It is true the day the armistice was signed, November 11, 1918, the President did appear before Congress and say that hostilities were at an end, but everyone understood, who is capable of understanding anything, that actual hostilities had ceased and that fighting was at an end. Everybody knew that the war had not legally ended, that a treaty of peace would have to be signed, and that it would be some time before such a treaty could be prepared and ratified.

In passing upon the question as to when the Spanish-American War ended, the Supreme Court, in the case of Higo v. United States (194 U. S., 315), held:

A state of war did not in law cease until the ratification in April, 1899, of the treaty of peace—

Although hostilities ended in 1898.

A statement in this joint resolution does not change the facts. The people will not be deceived. The reiteration time after time as to what the President advised Congress on November 11, 1918, will not change matters. The country everywhere understood that the fighting had ceased, which is true. That is what the President meant, and all attempts to prove the contrary will not avail anything.

The Supreme Court only a few months ago, on December 15, 1919, in the case of Hamilton against Kentucky Distilleries Co., held that what the President had done did not announce the legal determination of the war.

Section 1 of the joint resolution before us attempts to fix a date when peace shall begin. It is an attempt to usurp the functions of the President with the concurrence of two-thirds of the Senate.

Section 2 fixes the date of the passage of the resolution as the date of the termination of the war, so far as the repealing of war-time legislation is concerned. Attention is invited to the fact that it does not repeal legislation, and this point can not be too strongly emphasized. Of course, the Republicans are in the majority in both branches of Congress. They have all the committees of the House. They could introduce section 2 as a separate, independent resolution or as a separate bill, and could repeal all of the emergency legislation complained of. They would have the assistance of the Democrats, who are in favor of such a repeal. It may be upon consideration that some of the legislation should be amended or modified in certain particulars. The Democrats are willing to join with the Republicans in enacting legislation repealing the so-called war legislation. The majority appreciate that they are being criticized throughout the country for not enacting this repealing legislation. They want it embodied in an unconstitutional resolution that will never become a law in order to go before the country in an attempt to deceive the people. They are being criticized for not enacting this legislation when they promised to pass reconstructive legislation. They have conceived the idea that if they can embody it as a section in this joint resolution, which has no chance of passing, they can go before the people and argue that they passed it and the President vetoed it. Of course, the people will not be deceived, because they know that if the Republicans were sincere and in earnest about the repealing of this war-time legislation they could and would introduce a bill for this purpose. They have the committees and can get consideration of it. They must answer to the people as to why they have not done so. They can not embody it as a section in an unconstitutional joint resolution. The Democrats favor the repeal of this legislation and offered a motion to recommit, as follows, which the Republicans voted against:

That House joint resolution No. 327 be recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Affairs with instructions to the committee to report the same to the House forthwith with the following amendment:

Strike out all the preamble and all after the enacting clause and insert following the enacting clause the following:

"That all acts and joint resolutions of Congress which have been passed since April 6, 1917, and which by their terms are to be effective only for the period of the war, or for the present or existing emergency, or until a treaty of peace should be ratified, or until the proclamation by the President of the ratification of a treaty of peace, are hereby repealed; and all such acts and resolutions which by their terms are to be effective only during and for a specified period after such war, or such present or existing emergency, or the ratification of such treaty, or the proclamation by the President of the ratification of such treaty are hereby repealed, which repeal shall be effective at the end of the specified period, such specified period being construed as beginning on the date of the final passage of this resolution."

This would be a constitutional resolution. It would be effective. It could pass, if separately introduced. The Republicans voted against it, which shows that the repeal of this legislation is not what they want. They are trying to get some political benefit.

Section 3 provides for the negotiation of a treaty of peace by means of this joint resolution with the Imperial German Government, taking the power away from the President and the Senate. It requires the German Government to consent to the conditions named therein within 45 days from the passage of the resolution.

Section 4 makes it a criminal offense, punishable with a fine of $10,000, for violating the provisions of section 3.

Section 5 provides that the resolution shall not be a waiver of any of the rights of the United States to indemnities and is an attempt to ratify the action of the United States in all fines, forfeitures, penalties, and seizures imposed. No one seriously contends that Congress has the constitutional authority to pass such a joint resolution. Everybody knows that this is an attempt to make a treaty with the German Government and to disregard our allies. It has never before been attempted by the House of Representatives.

Article II, section 2, of the Constitution provides:

He (the President) shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur.

When this provision was up for consideration in the Constitutional Convention on September 7, 1787, an effort was made to amend it by adding, after the word "Senate," the words "and House of Representatives," as the following record shows:

The fourth section, to wit, "The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall have power to make treaties," etc., was then taken up.

Mr. Wilson moved to add, after the word "Senate," the words "and House of Representatives." As treaties, he said, are to have the operation of laws, they ought to have the sanction of laws also. The circumstance of secrecy in the business of treaties formed the only objection; but this, he thought, so far as it was inconsistent with obtaining the legislative sanction, was outweighed by the necessity of the latter.

Mr. Sherman thought the only question that could be made was whether the power could be safely trusted to the Senate. He thought it could and that the necessity of secrecy in the case of treaties forbade a reference of them to the whole Legislature.

Mr. Fitzsimmons seconded the motion of Mr. Wilson; and, on the question—ayes 1, noes 10.

Mr. Hamilton, in discussing the treaty-making power of the Constitution in the Federalist, 75, said:

Though this provision has been assailed on different grounds with no small degree of vehemence, I scruple not to declare my firm persuasion that it is one of the best digested and one of the most unexceptionable parts of the plan.

Another source of objection is derived from the small number of persons by whom a treaty may be made. Of those who espouse this objection a part are of opinion that the House of Representatives ought to have been associated in the business.

The remarks made in a former number will apply with conclusive force against the admission of the House of Representatives to a share in the formation of treaties. The fluctuating and, taking its future increase into account, the multitudinous composition of that body forbid us to expect in it those qualities which are essential to the proper execution of such a trust.

Accurate and comprehensive knowledge of foreign politics; a steady and systematic adherence to the same views; a nice and uniform sensibility to national character; decision, secrecy, and dispatch are incompatible with the genius of a body so variable and so numerous. The very complication of the business, by introducing a necessity of the concurrence of so many different bodies, would of itself afford a solid objection. The greater frequency of the calls upon the House of Representatives and the greater length of time which it would often be necessary to keep them together when convened, to obtain their sanction in the progressive stages of a treaty would be a source of so great inconvenience and expense as alone ought to condemn the project.

President Washington, in a message to the House of Representatives, March 30, 1796, discussing this question, said:

Having been a member of the general convention and knowing the principles on which the Constitution was formed, I have never entertained but one opinion on this subject, and from the first establishment of the Government to this moment my conduct has exemplified that opinion, that the power of making treaties is exclusively vested in the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur.

In response to the message of President Washington April 7, 1796, the House passed the following resolution by a vote of 54 to 36:

Resolved, That it being declared by the second section of the second article of the Constitution, "That the President shall have the power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur," the House of Representatives do not claim any agency in making treaties, etc.

A treaty is an agreement between two sovereign nations. It is no more and no less. Section 3 of this joint resolution attempts to make an agreement by joint resolution. Every authority on constitutional law states that this can not be done. None can be cited in favor of it.

Webster defines a treaty as "An agreement between two or more independent States."

A treaty may be defined to be a compact between nation and nation. (Tucker on the Constitution.)

Treaty is international compact. The root of the word indicates negotiation between two or more. In itself, treaty is a bargain, not law. (Tucker.)

A treaty is primarily a contract between two or more independent nations and is so regarded by writers on public law. (Whitney v. Robertson, 124 U. S., 194. Head Money Cases, 112 U. S.)

Congress is given the authority "to declare war" in Article I, section 8, clause 11. This is contained in the section enumerating the powers of Congress. When this matter was up before the constitutional convention for consideration, an amendment was offered to add the words "and peace," after "to declare war." This would have given to Congress the power to declare war and to make peace, had it not been unanimously voted down. It can be seen from this that the authority to make peace was attempted to be conferred upon Congress by the constitutional convention, but it was rejected after being thoroughly considered.

The following is a record of the proceedings of the Constitutional Convention on August 17, 1787:

FRIDAY, AUGUST 17, 1787.

On the clause, "to make war."

On the motion to insert "declare," in place of "make," it was agreed to: Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia—ayes, 8; New Hampshire—no, 1; Massachusetts, absent.

Mr. Pinckney's motion to strike out the whole clause was disagreed to, without call of States.

Mr. Butler moved to give the Legislature the power of peace, as they were to have that of war.

Mr. Gerry seconds him. Eight Senators may possibly exercise the power, if vested in that body, and 14 if all should be present, and may consequently give up part of the United States. The Senate are more liable to be corrupted by an enemy than the whole Legislature.

On the motion for adding "and peace," after "war," it was unanimously negatived.

Adjourned.

In commenting upon this action in his work on the Constitution, Mr. Joseph Story said:

In the convention, in the first draft of the Constitution the power was given merely "to make war." It was subsequently, and not without some struggle, altered to its present form. It was proposed to add the power "to make peace"; but this was unanimously rejected upon the plain ground that it more properly belonged to the treaty-making power. The experience of Congress, under the Confederation, of the difficulties attendant upon vesting the treaty-making power in a large legislative body, was too deeply felt to justify the hazard of another experiment.

Mr. John Randolph Tucker, an eminent constitutional authority, in a report made to Congress, among other things said:

The status of war created by Congress may be determined by a status of peace created by treaty. Congress can not create the status of peace by repealing its declaration of war, because the former requires the concurrence of two wills, the latter but the action of one.

It has been the uniform construction that all peace treaties are to be negotiated by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Republicans in support of this political resolution do not attempt to justify its constitutionality, but they argue that it would be sweeping asde technicalities such as the Constitution. Each Member of Congress took an oath to support and defend the Constitution, and I will not for personal, political, or public advantage violate my oath and support a measure the constitutionality of which no one attempts to defend.

It is argued that 17 months have elapsed since the armistice was signed and that a treaty of peace ought to be concluded. I know that the people are for peace. I am for peace. Action upon the treaty ought to have been had months ago. The people have been impatient with the long-drawn-out debate in the Senate, but if the Senate does not do its duty, or if the President and the Senate do not come to an agreement, that does not clothe Congress with constitutional power to make peace. I am sure that every school child throughout the country clearly understands this. Because the Senate or the President do not do their duty, it does not confer a power upon the House that it would not otherwise possess.

This is an attempt to make politics for the coming election. The Republicans know that the resolution will not pass. They know it is unconstitutional, but it can not be called into question unless it does pass. They know, therefore, that they will not be held up to ridicule, but they hope to use it as political camouflage to deceive some of the people of the country. They want to make them believe that the President had come before Congress and said that the war had ended, hoping that the people will not follow such argument and place a proper construction upon it. The President meant that hostilities had actually ceased.

In the debate upon the resolution the covenant of the League of Nations has been drawn into it, but the essential things have not been mentioned. Again, the majority side has hurrahed a great deal when certain Members criticized the President when they arose to address the House. These same Members of Congress were notoriously against the prosecution of the war, voted against all war legislation, and called into question the constitutionality of all war legislation. The President needs no defense at the hands of any Member of his party. He has made a record for service that has not been excelled, if equaled, by any former President. There has been no man that has been able to state the ideals of the people of the country with such precision as President Wilson. He will go down in history as one of the greatest Presidents of this country. He will not only be remembered as one of our greatest Presidents, but as the leading citizen of the world.

During this discussion no man on behalf of the majority pointed out or emphasized the three salient features of the covenant of the League of Nations. First, it provides a method of settling disputes between nations. The citizens of every county and State and of every civilized country throughout the world have a method for settling their disputes by an appeal to some tribunal, and it is an unanswerable argument that nations should submit international disputes to the decision of an impartial tribunal rather than go to war. If the covenant had no other provision it would favorably commend itself to every father and mother who sent their boy across the sea to fight for the liberty of the world. Second, it contains a provision for disarmament. One nation keeps a large standing army and a big navy. Another nation is compelled to compete with it and to raise as large or larger army and a more expensive navy. We are called upon this year to spend more for the Army and the Navy than our entire expense of running the Government before the war.

Universal military training is being urged upon Congress. What better way to escape universal military training and to keep from paying heavy taxes than a provision for disarmament for all the nations signing the covenant? This is a practical way out of it. It is a sensible way out of it. I have no doubt but what the people of this country fully appreciate its importance, but the majority throughout the discussion of the covenant point to the minor questions without taking into consideration the larger questions involved. Third, another important provision of the covenant that is not referred to by our friends on the other side is the one against making secret treaties. Everybody knows that secret alliances have been the principal cause of a large majority of wars since the beginning of history. Nobody believes that this last war would have been entered into but for the secret agreement between Germany, Austria-Hungary, and the other Central Powers.

Instead of calling attention to the important things that the covenant contains, our opponents haggle over the minor matters. For instance, the Republicans become very much excited over the Shantung affair. This is the first time that anybody has been solicitous for China. Germany went into that country with our acquiescence in 1898. China was forced to make certain concessions and to enter into certain agreements giving Germany preferential rights. Germany held these rights until the war came on. Japan went into China and by military force drove Germany out, and China agreed to the substitution of Japan for Germany. The United States had nothing to do with it. It was before we entered the war, and France and England acquiesced in it. Under the circumstances, how could President Wilson do anything to eliminate that provision of the treaty that China agreed to with Japan. Should he have left the peace table because he could not get this provision omitted, which had been agreed upon by China herself?

It has been stated in general debate that we want to Americanize the treaty. This is a high-sounding phrase. It appeals to the ear of any audience. What does Americanize mean? Do not embarrass too many of our Republican friends when they are discussing it. They prefer to use the word "Americanize" rather than go into details. It suits their argument better. Perhaps if you were to ask them they would say that it does not protect our domestic affairs, but when you look at the covenant it is noted that the covenant specifically provides that only international disputes are referred to the council and that domestic questions are reserved, and that the council would have no jurisdiction over them. This is made clear by articles 1, 11, 13, 14, and 15 of the League of Nations covenant. Article 15 provides.

If the dispute between the parties is claimed by one of them and is found by the council to arise out of a matter which by international law is solely within the domestic jurisdiction of that party, the council shall so report and shall make no recommendation as to its settlement.

There is not a line in the covenant that indicates the League of Nations is to have any jurisdiction over domestic questions.

Again, it is argued that we want to Americanize the League of Nations covenant in order to protect the Monroe doctrine. The Monroe doctrine is referred to in the covenant and especially excepted, as follows:

Nothing in this covenant shall be deemed to affect the validity of international engagements, such as treaties of arbitration or regional understandings like the Monroe doctrine, for securing the maintenance of peace. (Art. 21.)

A number of the more important South American countries have already signed the treaty and are members of the league. Finally, it is argued that we have only one vote and that England has six votes. To an audience that does not follow a speaker this is an appealing argument. However, there can be no decision by the council upon any point that would bind the United States that is not unanimous, including the vote of our Government. Wherever it is stated in the covenant that anything may be decided by less than a unanimous vote it is only where a recommendation is made or a report is made. Finally, it is argued that article 10 is a great stumbling block. The only authority to declare war is placed in Congress, and article 10 does not authorize the President or the council to declare war, but the covenant specifically provides:

The council shall advise upon the means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled.

In other words, the council will report back to their several Governments and then the constituted authorities of such Governments will decide what shall be done. In other words, if there is a recommendation to declare war it would be reported to Congress. There is no other method for declaring war. The covenant does not supersede our Constitution.

It is not my purpose to make a lengthy argument upon the covenant of the League of Nations. I think the responsibility is upon the Senate to take some action upon the treaty with Germany, and if in the judgment of two-thirds of the Senate the present treaty with the covenant is not satisfactory, differences should be compromised until a modified treaty can be agreed upon. The fact that the Senate and the President have not agreed upon the matter does not give the House any jurisdiction. There have been any number of treaties of various kinds negotiated by the executive branch of the Government that have either been rejected or amended or held up for years, but the House was not given any jurisdiction over them by such action. Suppose the Senate were to refuse to confirm an ambassador or a postmaster or a member of the Supreme Court, such a course would not give the House jurisdiction over the confirmation of any of them.

By the Constitution the House is given jurisdiction in originating legislation of certain kinds. If the House failed to do so, it would not give the Senate jurisdiction. All appropriation bills must originate in the House. If the House declined to orginate an appropriation, it does not give the Senate or the Executive jurisdiction.

When the President returned from Europe in February, 1919, he conferred with the members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee with reference to some criticisms of the covenant of the League of Nations, and upon going back to Versailles amendments were added for the purpose of meeting all of these criticisms. As is well known throughout the country, President Wilson incurred the enmity of the Republicans in the Senate by not placing some of them upon the commission to negotiate the treaty of peace and a fight was started upon him. Nothing he did met with their approval. Before the election in 1918 they were applauding him, and in their campaign speeches claimed that they were upholding the President's hands and assisting him in every way to win the war. They made the statement so much that they believed it. The record will show, however, that all through the war, on practically every bill that had for its purpose the vigorous prosecution of same, the Republicans haggled and criticized and presented amendments to weaken the measures. However, when the bills came up for final vote they usually protected themselves politically by voting for them.

A League of Nations has been advocated by prominent men of both parties for a number of years. Senator LODGE has warmly indorsed it. Ex-President Roosevelt was one of its leading advocates. No one has more strongly supported it than ex-President Taft, and ex-Senator Root, ex-Attorney General Wickersham; and thousands of other prominent Republicans in every State of the Union have favored a League of Nations of the world as a preventive of war. The objections to the present league are personal and partisan. If President Wilson had brought back with him the Ten Commandments, personal and partisan critics would have sought first to criticize and then to amend.

Everybody appreciates that differences had to be composed at the peace table. The same was true in every constitutional convention. No constitution was ever adopted, no treaty was ever entered into, and no act of Congress was ever passed where some objection could not be found to the language used.

The Supreme Court has been construing the Constitution for more than 100 years, as well as the constitutionality of practically every act of Congress. Is it any wonder, then, that persons unfriendly to the league should find objections to the phraseology of the covenant. There has been no act of Congress of any consequence passed since I have been a Member of the House that I would not have amended its phraseology if I could.

Washington was opposed and criticized while he was President. The English language was exhausted in criticism of Lincoln, as shown by an excerpt from the speech of Senator Sherman, February 25, 1863, as follows:

We do no good to our cause, no good to our country by constant crimination of the President, by arraigning him here, as I have heard him arraigned, as a tyrant and an imbecile. * * * If we allow his authority to be subdued and overrun, we destroy the authority of the Government of the United States.

Within the past year every effort has been made to lessen the esteem and confidence of the people of our country in President Wilson. He is not only the great leader of America, but he is the spiritual leader of the world. The scurrilous attacks made upon him for partisan advantage or from personal motives will not detract from the future estimate of him.

When the war ended so gloriously, the United States occupied a more commanding position among the nations of the earth than ever before in our history. If the treaty had been promptly ratified, an era of prosperity such as had never been experienced would have set in. We were financially stronger than any other nation. We had more raw material and we could have easily expanded our trade in every market in the world, so as to have been the dominant factor. Much of this advantage has been lost through partisan criticism.

The unrest throughout the world, including our own country, is in a large measure due to unsettled conditions. If the peace treaty had been ratified promptly, conditions throughout the country would have been settled and everyone would have returned to their usual occupations. As a result, production would have increased and normal conditions would have been restored. Instead, delays have been encountered. Intemperate criticisms of the President have been indulged in, and faultfinding for partisan purposes with every act of every Government official has had the effect of prejudicing the people more or less against their own officials and their own Government, and has resulted in the people losing confidence in their public servants. We need a return to normal conditions, increased production, a restoration of confidence, and a respect for law.

I am going to vote for the motion to recommit, because I favor the repeal of this war-time legislation, but I am not going to vote for a joint resolution which attempts to make a treaty of peace with Germany, as everybody knows it is unconstitutional and no one seriously attempts to defend it.

The Republicans argue that they are for peace and that the country is for peace and that, therefore, we ought to pass this resolution. Does this give the House constitutional power to act? So far as fighting is concerned, we have been at peace since November 11, 1918. Actual hostilities ceased then and everybody throughout the country is yearning and longing for a legal peace. The people want action on the treaty expedited. They do not want an unending debate. I can not too strongly emphasize that this resolution was introduced for political purposes, as our opponens know that it will not become a law. Therefore, the constitutionality of it can not be tested. It was introduced so as to save the majority party in the Senate from condemnation by the American people. The Senate has had the peace treaty for six or eight months, and it is the duty of that body to compromise their differences in such a way that it can be ratified.

The Republican Members of the House make the additional claim that section 2 of this resolution repeals war-time legislation, in order to excuse themselves for their inaction. Since May 19, 1919, they have not introduced and pressed to final passage the necessary legislation to repeal these war measures.

Finally, let me call attention to the rule introduced for the consideration of this most important resolution—important in that it has never been attempted to negotiate peace by joint resolution—important because it is clearly unconstitutional—important because it is an abandonment of our allies by attempting to make a separate treaty of peace. This rule permits debate until 5 o'clock upon the succeeding day. However, the thing that I want to call attention to and emphasize is that it does not permit an amendment to be made. No amendment can be offered and none can be voted upon. Therefore, we are compelled to vote either for or against the resolution. I feel sure that the people throughout the country are not aware that practically every day such a rule is being introduced in the House, and that the House is being run by gag rule instead of under the general rules of the House as adopted. A few years ago there was a revolt against so-called Cannonism, but there was never a time in the history of the House of Representatives where so many gag rules were introduced as during the present session of Congress. The people are ready to believe that the House of Representatives is a deliberative body and that the Members are permitted to offer and debate amendments. However, no amendment could have been offered to this resolution, the most important that has been introduced since the foundation of our Government. No amendment could have been discussed or voted upon. The resolution was agreed to by the Republican steering committee and presented to the Rules Committee. As a result the rule was brought in to consider it.

To recapitulate: First, the preamble to this resolution is misleading. Second, the resolution is unconstitutional, as shown by the records of the constitutional convention and the authorities cited. Third, we favor the repealing of war and emergency legislation and will support a motion to recommit to this effect.

Fourth, the resolution is unprecedented in that no treaty of peace was ever before attempted to be negotiated between the United States and any foreign Government by joint resolution. Fifth, it would be construed as an abandonment of our allies in making and enforcing the terms of peace. What would the people of the United States have said if either France or Great Britain had entered into a separate peace with Germany?

Holding, as I do, that it is not within the constitutional power of the House of Representatives to pass this joint resolution, I shall vote against it, although favoring the repeal of war and emergency legislation.

The Peace Resolution Terminating the War.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FREDERICK C. HICKS,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 9, 1920.

On the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 327) terminating the state of war between the Imperial German Government and the United States.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, the war with Germany is over, and America to-day is concerned with facts, not theories; with conditions, not technicalities. The armistice was signed November 11, 1918, and on that day, forever memorable in the annals of civilization, the President, in announcing the happy event, stated to the Congress of the United States that—

> The war thus comes to an end, for having accepted these terms of armistice it will be impossible for the German command to renew it. We know, too, that the object of the war is attained, the object upon which all free men had set their hearts, and attained with a sweeping completeness which even now we do not realize.

On December 2, 1918, the President referred to "the great processes by which the war was pushed irresistibly forward to the final triumph," and on July 10, 1919, in presenting the peace treaty to the Senate, he said, "The war came to an end in November, eight months ago."

With positive declarations such as these from the Commander in Chief can anyone question for a moment that the war is not over? With our former enemy not only vanquished but disintegrated, with our victorious soldiers and sailors demobilized and again pursuing the paths of peace, is there a single person who can argue that we are still waging war on Germany? And yet from the remarks of those who oppose this resolution it would seem that they yet hear the roar of cannon and the patter of bullets along the old battle line.

When America drew the sword in this conflict in defense of the principles of freedom, it was a patriotic, unselfish, unpartisan America which answered the challenge from across the seas. In that spirit the war was carried forward by our people, and in that spirit our boys triumphed on land and water. It should be in that same spirit, without prejudice and without partisanship, that we sheath the sword of victory. Republicans and Democrats vied with each other on the floor of this Congress in their zeal for the Nation's honor; Republicans and Democrats should know no party lines now in gathering the fruits of their endeavors. As Americans we declared war; as Americans we should establish peace.

We are to-day considering a resolution "terminating the state of war declared to exist between the Imperial German Government and the United States." It has but one purpose; its passage will accomplish but one object—peace. It is simply a declaration of the truth that the war is over. It will give a legal status to existing peace conditions and make a technical state of affairs correspond to actual facts. Our Democratic colleagues recoil at the suggestion that Congress, which by joint resolution on April 6, 1917, declared that a state of war existed, can not now by a joint resolution declare that the war has ended. They urge that only by a formal treaty of peace, in the consummation of which the President and Senate alone are concerned, can peace be established. Can it be possible that they are more concerned with political expediency than with the national welfare, more submissive to the will of their party leader than to the voice of the people of the United States?

What are the facts? It has been seventeen months since hostilities ceased. Nine months ago a treaty of peace was submitted to the Senate, and yet, despite the long interval of time which has elapsed since the signing of the armistice, we are technically at war, with all the war emergency legislation still in operation.

I will not enter into a discussion of the controversy between the President and the Senate over the peace treaty, but in passing let me say that while I feel that some method of settling international disputes should be inaugurated in place of the arbitrament of arms, I can not subscribe to the League of Nations adopted at the Paris conference unless that covenant embodies reservations for the protection of American rights and American principles. And if the President resubmits for ratification the Versailles treaty, or any other treaty of similar character, I trust the Senate will insist on reservations which will safeguard the United States from entangling alliances and which will make clear and definite the responsibilities to be assumed by the Nation under its provisions.

Had the treaty been ratified without the proposed reservations—reservations solely and essentially in the interest of American sovereignty—the United States would have been committed to the maintenance of the political integrity and geographical boundary lines of every nation in the world. We would have been dragged into every European quarrel whether we willed it or not.

We would have surrendered to the council of the league the right to decide when and how and where our sons should fight and die, and American boys would have laid down their lives in the snows of Siberia, in the deserts of Asia, and under the tropical suns of the Equator, at the dictation of a power superior to the Constitution itself. We would have intrusted the custody of America's national ideals and the destinies of her people to men of alien customs, languages, and habits, whose prejudices and commercial jealousies have kept Europe in a turmoil for a thousand years. We would have been swept irresistibly into Old World currents and feuds. We would have been internationalists instead of nationalists, and upon the shoulders of America would have been placed the burdens and calamities of the earth. The opponents of the reservations said that unless America accepted this league as it was written it would break the heart of Europe. Heed not the breaking of the heart of Europe; look you first as to whether or not it would break the heart of America and American mothers, whose sons would have been called upon to enter every conflict springing up anywhere in the world.

We Republicans are accused of making the League of Nations a political issue. I regret and deny that accusation, for a great question such as this should be above politics and broader than party lines; but if we are charged with being partisans we must meet the issue, and I for one will accept that challenge whenever it is made and answer it by declaring that now, as in the past, here and elsewhere, the Republican Party willingly, deliberately, and proudly champions the cause of Americanism against all opponents, whether those opponents be within or without the borders of our national domain.

We desire to extend a helping hand to others and to have a humanitarian interest in our sister nations, but to subscribe to any doctrine which will give to any covenant a higher place than our own Constitution and which will place any flag, no matter what its symbol, above the Stars and Stripes, is a denial of the potency of our Constitution and a negation of the supremacy of our own flag.

How much more are we to be called upon to do for Europe? Is there no limit? Our soldiers stopped the onrush of the Germans at the Marne, broke their attack at Chateau-Thierry, rolled them back at the Argonne while our sailors were sinking their submarines and rendering German aggression harmless on the deep. Our armies rescued our allies, our food fed them, and our money maintained them. We left 60,000 dead in France, and brought to our own land another 60,000 brave men, blind, crippled, and diseased. We accumulated a debt of $23,000,000,000. We fought for ourselves, yes; but we fought for our allies also, and without our aid I hesitate to predict what the outcome of the war would have been. Are we to be called upon without the sanction of the people of the United States, speaking through their constituted representatives, to send our boys again and again into the trenches in lands where we have no interest, where we have no obligations, and where no American principles are involved? I say no.

Calling to the colors the sons of this Republic belongs to the people of this Nation alone and must not be delegated to any power for them to command at will. Our first obligation is to the mothers and fathers and the young men of this country. If it is selfishness to act for America above all other nations, then I am selfish, for I feel the time has come for us to look within our own Republic and not beyond the seas. We have responsibilities to our own people, who are entitled to our first consideration. Many problems of great moment at home demand our attention and should receive our first care.

The Declaration of Independence, a declaration of the principle of our independence, new, yet embodying the fundamentals of national life, which, constant as the eternal stars, was the guide of our destiny in the beginning, shall be the guide of our Nation in its onward sweep of progress and power for all the years to come. Independence—freedom in thought and action—concedes no surrender, no subservience, to any power on earth.

We hear it frequently said that the United States must do this or that, in regard to the League of Nations. Must is not a proper word to be used by any foreign nation or domestic official to the American people. We recognize neither master nor dictator, and the sovereign will of the people of the United States rises supreme to any authority in the world. We are told that if we refuse to abandon the policies which have brought us to the heights of our prosperity we are "dreamers, living in the forgotten age." If we seek to prevent America from being dragged into every war, we are accused of "seeing with jaundiced eyes." Unless we are willing to repudiate the doctrines of the fathers which gave this country birth and which have prospered it upon its onward course of enlightenment and greatness, we are told that we "lack vision."

Colleagues, I, too, have a vision. Mine is the vision of a Washington, of a Jefferson, of a Hamilton, of a Lincoln, and of a Roosevelt, Americans all, whose voices from their honored graves are beseeching me, as they are beseeching you, my countrymen, to preserve America's independence, imploring us to keep out of Europe's wars and intrigues. We revere other nations, we respect other flags, we sympathize with other races, but, above every other State, above every other banner, above every other race, our love for our own flag and our reverence for the institutions it symbolizes must be supreme in the future as it has been in the past.

What are the facts that confront us to-day? The Senate has declined to acquiesce in an unconditional ratification of the treaty submitted by the President, and the time-worn document has been returned to the Chief Executive unapproved. It is not now before the Senate, and so that body is powerless to act; but let me remind you that the passage of this resolution will not prevent the Senate considering another peace treaty. What we do to-day will in no wise hinder the operation of their treaty-ratifying functions, but the Senate is without authority to negotiate a treaty; only the President has that power, and he evidently has no intention of exercising it. Thus we find ourselves in the position that the President will not act, the Senate can not; so Congress must.

The opponents of this resolution base their arguments on the constitutional restriction that gives to the Senate alone the power of ratifying treaties submitted to it by the President. No one disputes that, but we are not considering a treaty either of peace or of commerce. Here is where the confusion lies. This resolution is an alternative for a treaty and is not in any degree a usurpation of the treaty-making powers of the Senate. It is not a treaty, for it involves only mere recognition of peace on the part of Germany and an admittance and acceptance by her of the indisputable fact that the war has terminated.

It is not a treaty of trade, for it provides merely for a contingency. In the event that Germany does not acquiesce within a stipulated period the President shall proclaim that fact, whereupon commercial intercourse shall cease; that is all. There are ample precedents for this method of procedure. Many acts of Congress provide for our doing certain things in the event other nations do or do not do certain other things. While it is true that these acts have been criticized on the grounds that they were usurpations by Congress of the treaty-ratifying functions of the Senate and because they involved the delegation of legislative power by Congress to the President, the Supreme Court by a decision in 1891, in the case of Field against Clark, determined that Congress had this authority. That question having been adjudicated by the highest tribunal in the land is not open to discussion. Under this resolution the exercise of legislative authority by the President is not authorized; it is therefore not delegated. He is simply required to ascertain a fact, upon the finding of which certain things will follow.

It is not a treaty of commerce, but simply a trade arrangement, and as such is squarely in line with many time-honored precedents. Our Democratic friends maintain that a resolution such as this is beyond the authority of Congress, and is therefore unconstitutional. While a formal treaty of peace is the usual way to terminate war, many cases can be cited in history where this course of procedure was not followed. I contend that not alone by a treaty of peace can war be ended. Let me quote some eminent authorities on international law to show the three methods by which war may be ended:

War may be terminated in three different ways: Belligerents may (1) abstain from further acts of war and glide into peaceful relations without expressly making peace through a special treaty, or (2) belligerents may formally establish the condition of peace through a special treaty of peace, or (3) a belligerent may end the war through subjugation of his adversary. (Oppenheim, International Law, vol. 2, p. 322.)

There are three ways of terminating hostilities between States, namely, (1) by a mere cessation of hostilities of both sides, without any definite understanding supervening; (2) by the conquest and subjugation of one of the contending parties by the other, so that the former is reduced to impotence and submission; (3) by a mutual arrangement embodied in a treaty of peace, whether the honors of war be equal or unequal.

Under the first mode the relationships between the parties remain in a condition of uncertainty, and, owing to the numerous difficulties involved, combatant States have very seldom resorted to this method of withdrawing from the war without arriving at some definite and intelligible decision. (Phillipson, Termination of War and Treaties of Peace, p. 3.)

It is certain that a condition of war can be raised without an authoritative declaration of war, and, on the other hand, the situation of peace may be restored by the long suspension of hostilities without a treaty of peace being made. History is full of such occurrences. What period of suspension of war is necessary to justify the presumption of the restoration of peace has never yet been settled and must in every case be determined with reference to collateral facts and circumstances. (Mr. Seward, Secretary of State, July 22, 1868, Moore's International Law, vol. 7, p. 336.)

The Senate of the United States having refused to ratify the treaty submitted by the President, the customary method of terminating the war status can not be accomplished, and it becomes the plain duty of Congress to declare the admitted fact that the war is ended. There has been a complete suspension of hostilities on both sides without any intention of resuming them. Congress is clearly exercising powers which are within its constitutional rights in recognizing and declaring that the condition described by the writers on international law has now arrived, and that the war is at an end. As by the resolution of April 6, 1917, Congress officially recognized the fact that war had been thrust upon us, so now it becomes the duty of Congress to give official recognition to the fact that the war is ended. To me it seems absurd that Congress, which recognized the existence of war, called to the colors the manhood of the country, marshaled the resources of the Nation, and carried the war forward, can not now terminate that which it initiated and prosecuted to a victorious conclusion. If Congress has not this right, then it follows that the President may keep the country in a state of war indefinitely. Certainly no such power is vested in common sense or can be found delegated to the President by the Constitution.

The first part of the resolution, about which so much discussion centers, is merely the exercise by Congress of the right to repeal that which it itself passed; to terminate that which it began. During the war Congress conferred extraordinary powers upon the President, greater powers than were ever before granted to a Chief Executive. Many of these laws are extremely drastic, and can be justified only as war necessities; but since the war has, in fact, long since ceased, the justification for these laws no longer exists. Laws enacted for the duration of the war are still in force and effect, and many constitutional rights are still suspended, for war technically exists to-day.

Some of the war laws were to be operative only during the war; some were to continue for certain periods after the war in order to give an opportunity to adjust and liquidate business undertaken under war powers and not completed when the war ended; others were to continue in effect for limited periods and various purposes. Each of these laws fixes as the date of the termination of the war the date of the President's proclamation announcing the ratification of the treaty of peace. Section 2 of this resolution proposes, in lieu of the date of the President's proclamation, the date when this resolution becomes effective as the date of the termination of war.

America wants peace. The general welfare of the United States imperatively demands it. Unrest and discontent are universal. Suspicion and distrust are everywhere. Unsound economic conditions prevail, aggravated by the consciousness that peace has not yet come. Business halts and is uncertain of the future. Enterprise and development hesitate, fearing to advance. The people are weary of the exercise of war legislation in times of peace, and demand that these war powers shall be vacated and set aside. Industry, labor, business, and commerce are all impatient to resume a status under the laws and conditions that pertain to peace. My vote will be cast for the resolution, and I hope both branches of Congress will adopt it.

Shall the Democratic Party Keep Us Out of Peace?

"I do not believe there is a single Democratic Senator who would not vote for this resolution of ratification if it were not for the belief of such Senators that the President of the United States desires them to defeat the resolution of ratification now pending and would regard their failure to do so as a refusal to follow his view as party leader." Senator Owen (Democrat) In the United States Senate March 19, 1920.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. IRA G. HERSEY,

OF MAINE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 9, 1920.

On the joint resolution 327, being a joint resolution "terminating the state of war declared to exist April 6, 1917, between the Imperial German Government and the United States; permitting on conditions the resumption of reciprocal trade with Germany, and for other purposes."

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Speaker, 17 months ago the President came before Congress with a message and among other things he said:

* * * The war thus comes to an end * * *. We know only that this tragical war, whose consuming flame swept from one nation to another until all the world was on fire, is at an end. * * *

Seventeen months ago Germany surrendered her arms, signed an armistice and the President at once came before Congress and said:

The war thus comes to an end, * * * for having accepted these terms of the armistice it will be impossible for the German command to renew it.

On October 27 last the President further said:

The war itself is still a fact, when the war is still in suspense as to negotiations for peace, when our troops are still being transported, and when this means of transportation is in urgent need of fuel.

On this 9th day of April, 1920, we are still in a state of war with Germany. Trade relations have not been resumed. Our soldiers have not all been returned from Europe. The business of the Nation has been paralyzed by the failure to ratify a treaty of peace. Over 30 different war emergency acts and laws are still in force. Capital and labor are demanding peace conditions. The whole Nation is sick and tired of the attempt of politicians to use the war powers of the President to perpetuate this administration and to find a political issue for the coming campaign.

Can it be possible that partisan politics would descend to this level or that for the purpose of retaining party supremacy politicians would keep the Nation in a state of war to further the ambitions of any one man or the aspirations of any one party?

If there is any doubt that the President and his party are about to use the war powers under the Constitution to continue this Nation in a state of war with Germany for political advantage, then listen to the facts.

In January, 1919, about two months after the signing of the armistice, the President, self-appointed representative of the American people, went to Paris to attend a peace conference, and returned with what he called a League of Nations, which league he said must be adopted and ratified by the Senate of the United States without change or reservation, and the Senate, which had equal treaty-making powers with the President, after a careful examination of this so-called league, refused to accept it, and 39 Senators, more than enough to defeat it, signed the following resolution as a notice to the President that the country wanted peace, and a treaty of peace and not a future alliance with Europe or an obligation to take part in all future wars of other nations. The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the negotiations on the part of the United States should be immediately directed to the utmost expedition of the urgent business of negotiating peace terms with Germany satisfactory to the United States * * * and that the proposal for a league of nations to insure the permanent peace of the world should be then taken up for careful and serious consideration.

The President returned to Paris and obtained the consent of our allies to so connect and entwine his League of Nations with the treaty of peace that, like the Siamese twins, they could not be separated without the death of both—and he brought this strange instrument of over 500 printed pages to the Senate with the statement in substance that the only way this Nation could have peace with Germany was to accept his League of Nations without change, entwined as a league in 79 different places with the treaty of peace.

After a full discussion of this treaty a majority of the Senate adopted the following reservations to the treaty and League of Nations:

Resolution of ratification.

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany, concluded at Versailles on the 28th day of June, 1919, subject to the following reservations and understandings, which are hereby made a part and condition of this resolution of ratification, which ratification is not to take effect or bind the United States until the said reservations and understandings adopted by the Senate have been accepted as a part and a condition of this resolution of ratification by the allied and associated powers, and a failure on the part of the allied and associated powers to make objection to said reservations and understandings prior to the deposit of ratification by the United States shall be taken as a full and final acceptance of such reservations and understandings by said powers:

1. The United States so understands and construes article 1 that in case of notice of withdrawal from the League of Nations, as provided in said article, the United States shall be the sole judge as to whether all its international obligations and all its obligations under the said covenant have been fulfilled, and notice of withdrawal by the United States may be given by a concurrent resolution of the Congress of the United States.

2. The United States assumes no obligation to preserve the territorial integrity or political independence of any other country by the employment of its military or naval forces, its resources, or any form of economic discrimination, or to interfere in any way in controversies between nations, including all controversies relating to territorial integrity or political independence, whether members of the league or not, under the provisions of article 10, or to employ the military or naval forces of the United States, under any article of the treaty for any purpose, unless in any particular case the Congress, which, under the Constitution, has the sole power to declare war or authorize the employment of the military or naval forces of the United States, shall, in the exercise of full liberty of action, by act or joint resolution so provide.

3. No mandate shall be accepted by the United States under article 22, part 1, or any other provision of the treaty of peace with Germany, except by action of the Congress of the United States.

4. The United States reserves to itself exclusively the right to decide what questions are within its domestic jurisdiction and declares that all domestic and political questions relating wholly or in part to its internal affairs, including immigration, labor, coastwise traffic, the tariff, commerce, the suppression of traffic in women and children and in opium and other dangerous drugs, and all other domestic questions, are solely within the jurisdiction of the United States and are not under this treaty to be submitted in any way either to arbitration or to the consideration of the council or of the assembly of the League of Nations, or any agency thereof, or to the decision or recommendation of any other power.

5. The United States will not submit to arbitration or to inquiry by the assembly or by the council of the League of Nations, provided for in said treaty of peace, any questions which in the judgment of the United States depend upon or relate to its long-established policy, commonly known as the Monroe doctrine; said doctrine is to be interpreted by the United States alone and is hereby declared to be wholly outside the jurisdiction of said League of Nations and entirely unaffected by any provision contained in the said treaty of peace with Germany.

6. The United States withholds its assent to articles 156, 157, and 158, and reserves full liberty of action with respect to any controversy which may arise under said articles.

7. No person is or shall be authorized to represent the United States, nor shall any citizen of the United States be eligible, as a member of any body or agency established or authorized by said treaty of peace with Germany, except pursuant to an act of the Congress of the United States providing for his appointment and defining his powers and duties.

8. The United States understands that the reparation commission will regulate or interfere with exports from the United States to Germany, or from Germany to the United States, only when the United States by act or joint resolution of Congress approves such regulation or interference.

9. The United States shall not be obligated to contribute to any expenses of the League of Nations, or of the secretariat, or of any commission, or committee, or conference, or other agency, organized under the League of Nations or under the treaty or for the purpose of carrying out the treaty provisions, unless and until an appropriation of funds available for such expenses shall have been made by the Congress of the United States: Provided, That the foregoing limitation shall not apply to the United States' proportionate share of the expense of the office force and salary of the secretary general.

10. No plan for the limitation of armaments proposed by the council of the League of Nations under the provisions of article 8 shall be held as binding the United States until the same shall have been accepted by Congress, and the United States reserves the right to increase its armament without the consent of the council whenever the United States is threatened with invasion or engaged in war.

11. The United States reserves the right to permit, in its discretion, the nationals of a covenant-breaking State, as defined in article 16 of the covenant of the League of Nations, residing within the United States or in countries other than such covenant-breaking State, to continue their commercial, financial, and personal relations with the nationals of the United States.

12. Nothing in articles 296, 297, or in any of the annexes thereto, or in any other article, section, or annex of the treaty of peace with Germany, shall, as against citizens of the United States, be taken to mean any confirmation, ratification, or approval of any act otherwise illegal or in contravention of the rights of citizens of the United States.

13. The United States withholds its assent to Part XIII (articles 387 to 427, inclusive) unless Congress by act or joint resolution shall hereafter make provision for representation in the organization established by said Part XIII, and in such event the participation of the United States will be governed and conditioned by the provisions of such act or joint resolution.

14. Until Part I, being the covenant of the League of Nations, shall be so amended as to provide that the United States shall be entitled to cast a number of votes equal to that which any member of the league and its self-governing dominions, colonies, or parts of empire, in the aggregate, shall be entitled to cast, the United States assumes no obligation to be bound, except in cases where Congress has previously given its consent, by any election, decision, report, or finding of the council or assembly in which any member of the league and its self-governing dominions, colonies, or parts of empire in the aggregate have cast more than one vote.

The United States assumes no obligation to be bound by any decision, report, or finding of the council or assembly arising out of any dispute between the United States and any member of the league if such member or any self-governing dominion, colony, empire, or part of empire united with it politically has voted.

15. In consenting to the ratification of the treaty with Germany the United States adheres to the principle of self-determination and to the resolution of sympathy with the aspirations of the Irish people for a government of their own choice adopted by the Senate June 6, 1919, and declared that when such government is attained by Ireland, a consummation it is hoped is at hand, it should promptly be admitted as a member of the League of Nations.

Through Viscount Grey, British ambassador to the United States, the President and the Senate were informed that these reservations were acceptable to our allies, that they would be pleased to have the treaty and League of Nations ratified with these reservations; but the President sent word to his party in the Senate not to accept these reservations but to defeat the treaty, and it was done by Democratic votes, as he had wished.

On March 19, 1920, Senator OWEN in the Senate said of this defeat of the treaty of peace by his party:

I do not believe there is a single Democratic Senator who would not vote for this resolution of ratification if it were not for the belief of such Senators that the President of the United States desires them to defeat the resolution of ratification now pending and would regard their failure to do so as a refusal to follow his view as party leader.

The Republican Party in Congress has exhausted every resource to obtain a treaty of peace to protect American rights. They have now brought before the House of Representatives the following resolution, which is under consideration:

That the state of war declared to exist between the Imperial German Government and the United States by the joint resolution of Congress approved April 6, 1917, is hereby declared at an end.

When this resolution was being considered by the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House, Chairman Cummings, of the Democratic national committee, came to Washington and called together his party leaders in House and Senate and informed them that they must defeat this resolution and stand by the President so as to make the League of Nations an issue in the coming campaign. The rank and file of the Democratic Party submitted, as it always does, to the political decrees of the President, and they have agreed to do all in their power to defeat this resolution of peace and to keep us in a state of war at least until after next election. All this to "save the face" of the President and to furnish an issue for the campaign.

Hitherto when Democrats have been asked why we did not have peace and why the treaty has not been ratified by the Senate they have answered that it was due to the "stubborn man" in the White House. They have said that the Democratic Party was not responsible for what one man does and that they did not intend to follow the President in the coming campaign. Now, when the Democrats in the Senate obey and the Democrats in the House follow his commands—the Democratic leaders say if the Republicans pass this legislation they will stand solidly against it and that the President will veto it, and that we can not get Democratic votes enough to pass it over the veto—they have placed themselves irrevocably by the side of the President and have adopted his issue, "No peace until the League of Nations has been ratified without the dotting of an 'i' or the crossing of a 't.'"

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] is one of those Democrats who has refused to be a "rubber stamp" for the President. Yesterday in the discussion of this resolution he gave the House some facts as to the position of his President and his party. His speech was full of patriotism, courage, and independence, and I want to call the attention of the country to a few things he said. Among other things he said:

No; we will not have peace, except on condition that the League of Nations shall be accepted without reservations just as our President desires.

* * * * * * *

The people will visit upon the public man or the party that takes that obstinate position against their proper desire for peace a punishment which I shall not accept for myself, because I do not intend to deserve it.

* * * * * * *

Where will we be if we do not accept this proposition or some other of similar purport? We will project this issue into the next political campaign. We will distract the public attention from grave domestic questions that need to be solved. We will divert the thought of the people of America away from problems which concern them and enter into the troublesome foreign questions with the certainty that at the end of the campaign we shall be found exactly where we are to-day, hopelessly divided, and a deadlock existing between the President and the Senate.

The people will not tolerate that the war laws be held at their heads like a loaded pistol to force them into accepting the treaty. They claim the right to consider the treaty and the league upon their merits. They resent the attempt to intimidate them and to demand their acceptance of the treaty as the price of relief. Public men and parties which seek thus to impose upon the people will find themselves the mark of hearty disapproval.

I can not agree with those who may argue that we are bound in honor to join in a treaty with the nations associated with us in the war. They entered the war without our leave. We entered it upon our own initiative. We cooperated with them to defeat the common enemy. We went into the war unpledged to our associated nations. We have come out of the war without owing them anything; to the contrary, they are our debtors. The honor of America is not pledged to unite in a common treaty with our associated nations. It is pledged neither expressly nor by implication. The people have not pledged American honor, neither has it been pledged by Congress nor by anyone authorized by the people to speak for them. We entered the war for reasons of our own; we spent our blood and treasure without stint; we have asked neither land nor money, favors nor indemnity; we fought in defense of the civilization of the world. Continued cooperation with the nations associated with us in the war is neither obligated nor compelled. We will hereafter, as I hope, act freely, as heretofore, for the welfare and dignity of America and for the peace and hope of mankind.

The nations associated with us in the war have made peace with Germany. America alone of all the nations retains her war status. We do not abandon our associated nations by terminating the state of war. We do but join them in their status of peace. We do not abandon them to a common enemy. They are at peace and no longer require our support or protection. It is absurd to say that American honor is pledged to stand alone among the nations in a state of war with Germany. If in any sense American honor is under pledge, it is to promote peace, harmony, and good will at home and among the nations of the world.

A morning Washington paper has an item of news in big headlines, entitled "Wilson's sheep will lead the animal parade." I have not examined this item of news to see if there is anything in it as to the gathering of the Democratic hosts to win the next election on the slogan "He will keep us out of peace." William Jennings Bryan says that for his party to stand for the ratification of the League of Nations without reservations protecting American rights would be suicide. The poet Longfellow, in speaking of the duties and obligations of the true citizen, says:

In the world's broad field of battle,
In the bivouac of life,
Be not like dumb, driven cattle!
Be a hero in the strife!

For the Democrats to be "dumb, driven cattle" or "Wilson's sheep" in the coming campaign means according to Bryan suicide. To be a "hero in the strife" one must not commit suicide, as the suicide is not a hero but a coward.

Since the birth of this Nation no political party has ever found itself in such a desperate situation as that which now confronts the "Wilson party." They dare not stand on the record of the last seven years. They desire, above all things, to distract the attention of the people from the great waste, extravagance, and incompetency that has attended the present administration during the past four years. To find an issue something must be done by Democratic leaders to further deceive the people until after the next election. Think for a moment of the actual situation. The party that four years ago obtained a renewal of its lease of power by the slogan, "He will keep us out of war," will now find itself pledged to defend its present cowardly attitude, "He will keep us out of peace."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HANNIBAL L. GODWIN

OF NORTH CAROLINA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 12, 1920.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me by the House to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I desire to state that my sense of duty to my constituents as well as justice to myself suggests the propriety of making a brief statement of my "stewardship," referring to some of the measures I have advocated and accomplished in the past and to what I favor to-day and for the future.

I am serving in my fourteenth year as the Representative from the sixth North Carolina district, and during that time I have been deeply interested in everything that would promote the prosperity and happiness of our people.

I have stood squarely for every relief in which the farmers and business men have been interested. I have favored the greatest possible yield for the least possible cost. I am and have been in favor of equal and exact justice between labor and capital. Their cause has been my cause and I have responded to their every call and helped them to secure much that has brought happiness and comfort to their homes. I have aided in interesting the farmers in such agricultural subjects as the extension of the farm demonstration work, crop rotation, seed selection, the improvement of soils, the growing of winter cover crops, and the crops that gather nitrogen from the air; also the construction of good roads by State and Federal aid. I have helped to secure aids for swamp drainage and thousands of acres of swamp lands have been reclaimed. Swamp drainage and good roads are two handmaidens and both are necessary to build the country.

The Agricultural Department has granted daily requests for the relief of the farmers of the sixth district. I know the head men in every bureau and they have responded when I made known the wishes of our people. I have distributed quantities of forage-crop seeds, such as vetch, clover, alfalfa, grass mixture, and so forth.; also, yearbooks, bulletins, and reports have been sent to every man who has been trying to improve his soil, build up waste places, rotate his crops, and double his yield on the same acreage by the use of better methods.

Every pond, lake, and stream is alive with fish sent from Washington. I have been interested in and aided the boys' and girls' clubs, and the flower seed which I have sent them enabled the girls to have flower gardens at home and at school. I have aided in beautifying the homes, which has done much to make the country and farm life more attractive and profitable.

I have supported measures for the rural carriers and the Rural Free Delivery Service, including the parcels post and the postal savings banks and all other rural benefits, as I am firm in my belief that the people who live in the country are entitled to as many conveniences as those who live in the towns.

I gained the favorable consideration of the Bureau of Soils and the soil-survey work has been carried on in almost every county. These soil-survey maps and reports have done much to advertise and increase the value of our farm lands and they have given information to the farmers in the way of planting and rotating their crops which would be difficult to measure in money value. No section has been neglected; every county has been the object of my labors. The smallest townships and the remotest precincts have come in for a full share of attention. No industry has been favored at the expense of another; neither has one section of my district been built up by tearing down another, and no class of our people has received any privileges over another class, but all alike at all times have received my best efforts.

While I have worked for the country districts, the cities, the towns, and the villages have not been neglected. They have all come in for a full share of benefits. I have secured appropriations for public buildings and sites for more. The question of a new customhouse at Wilmington was not agitated before I entered Congress. Now we have a building that makes the heart of every citizen rejoice.

The improvement of the Cape Fear and other rivers of the district has at all times received my careful attention. I favor cheap freight rates and feel that we must have water transportation to guard them. The 8-foot project in the Upper Cape Fear, with Fayetteville as a distributing and freight-rate basing point, has been one of the objects of my chief endeavors. At the beginning of my service only a few thought this project would ever be accomplished. Now the Government has about completed the work. The improvement of rivers and harbors, the deepening and straightening the channels of streams, securing aids for navigation, and the extension of the inland waterway south along the Atlantic coast have all received my daily efforts and are being carried on to success.

I am not only interested in a general way in behalf of my constituents, but I have made it a rule to attend to the smallest requests made by the humblest individuals. Every letter has received a prompt reply. I have made known to my constituents the progress of public legislation and put forth every effort to ascertain the wishes and sentiments of the people on every public question. I have attended the sessions of the House and voted for the best interests of my people.

I have warm personal friends in both Houses of Congress, and I am familiar with every step involved in accomplishing legislation. I also possess a full knowledge of the labor and the tactics essential to carry on to completion the work now pending involving many matters in the interest of the people which I have in hand for attention, and when all are fully completed they will be worth to the people what no man would dare attempt to figure out in dollars and cents.

THE AMERICAN SOLDIER.

I favor prompt relief for the American soldier. Millions of our boys gave up their homes and the hopes of future years and marched to a ruthless and relentless war. They became the bravest soldiers God ever made. Their names have gone down upon the immortal roll of honor, and we are still living beneath the protecting folds of the Stars and Stripes. Germany had become one of the most vicious and bloodthirsty nations that ever disgraced the pages of history. She was seeking to conquer the world or to engulf it in a sea of blood. She had drawn from the eyes of women and children enough tears to make another sea. She had drawn from the hearts of mankind enough blood to redden every wave of that sea. It became necessary for us to draw the sword of a righteous retribution, and that sword was not sheathed until German Kaiser, Turkish Sultan, and Austrian Emperor were scourged from their blood-soaked thrones and the peace of the world reestablished upon an enduring foundation of liberty and humanity.

Some of our soldiers who went to war will never return. We are weeping for graves that we may never see. Their blood has enriched the soil of France and from the place where their blood was poured out roses and lilies have sprung up and are growing, and their perfume will be for the healing of down-trodden humanity. We have had our sacrifices.

It is and has ever been the inscrutable law of God to blot out the sins of the wicked with the blood of his saints. From Calvary's crimson cross to the battle fields of the Marne and the Somme sacrifice has been the immutable purchase price of progress, while civilization has written every luminous page of its resplendent history in profusions of precious blood. Joan of Arc gave her life to save France. Abraham offered his son Isaac because of his faith in God. Moses suffered the privations of the wilderness to liberate the children of Israel.

Our American boys went to France; from there, through countless lines of battle, with machine guns and cannons in front of them, with poisonous gases enveloping them, with the air filled with death-dealing crafts above them, with exploding mines beneath them—through all these horrors they triumphantly bore the flag of this Republic to liberty and freedom, and I favor any measure that will contribute to their relief or comfort.

I wish to state something of the general legislation which I have helped to enact.

The Federal reserve law, affording America a new currency system, weeding out the miserable makeshift currency law that had grown old, antiquated, and lacking in efficiency, avoiding panics and expanding the volume of currency, enabled the Government to finance the World War and all business institutions still intact.

The income-tax law, requiring the swollen fortunes of the rich to bear their fair share of the burdens of government.

Election of Senators by direct vote; prior to this provision Senatorships were decided by legislatures, now by the sovereign voters.

Abrogation of bossism in Congress; providing for the election of committees instead of the appointment thereof, a reform demanded by every section of the country.

Publicity of campaign expenses; affording the poor man a chance to aspire for office by not giving the rich a monopoly on the same; a curbing of outrageous contributions by special interests.

Corrupt-practices act: Providing against the unlawful use of money in elections; to prevent vote buying; to prevent corrupt election methods, so elections will be clean, honest, open, and free from crooked dealing.

Federal Trade Commission law: To eliminate trusts, combines, and dishonest business men everywhere; a stimulus to honest business, a curb bit in the mouth of dishonest business.

Marine insurance law: Insuring an open sea, an open market; providing for marine insurance to shippers of American products; the resumption of shipping to markets of the world; affording the six and a half million farmers an open and an honest market for their crops; affording 20,000,000 wage earners permanent employment at a living wage. Cotton was selling for 5½ cents a pound after the war began, due to closed seas occasioned by the withdrawal of insurance companies. The enactment of the Government marine-insurance law aided in restoring the price of cotton, wheat, and other products.

Ship purchase act: Enabling Americans to control their own shipping and make certain their markets. Establishing a merchant marine, ships to carry our commerce. Enabling the farmer to have a steady and dependable market for his wheat and his cotton; enabling the business man to prosper and improve; to keep the arteries of commerce open and going; to enable ships to navigate the seas and carry products of mine, field, and forest to the markets of the world. This legislation is important in peace times but doubly important in war times, both to business men and farmers.

Clayton antitrust law: To prosecute the trusts and combinations and those engaged in vicious business methods that oppress the poor; to encourage honest business; honest business will not object; dishonest business will get justice, and no more.

Philippine independence bill: Giving the Filipinos a modified form of independence and giving them a wider scope of local self-government. This will hasten the day of complete independence, which is desirable both to the United States and to the Philippines.

National prohibition: Congress, by a two-thirds vote in both branches, has passed it; three-fourths of the States have ratified it; it is the law of the land.

ACHIEVEMENTS FOR THE FARMERS.

Rural credits law: Cheaper interest, longer tenure—what the farmers desired. I am now working for amendments so loans can be made direct, dispensing with red tape, and rendering loans more easy and simple of acquirement. While the law is not patronized by all, the low rate of interest and long tenure of payment has lowered interest rates in all farm loan companies, thereby benefiting the farmer.

Law to prevent gambling in farm products: This law needs tightening up, so that farmers may be sure of an open and honest market, free from gamblers, who neither sow nor reap; a market free of graft.

Warehouse bill: Enabling farmers to hold their crops properly insured for favorable market conditions.

Grain-grades bill: Classifying and grading grain, thereby securing better conditions and better prices.

Lever agricultural-extension bill: Carrying education to the farmers' sons; improving agricultural conditions.

Good-roads law: Federal aid for improvements to highways of the country. For the benefit of all.

Ferris 640-acre homestead law: Increasing area that homesteader may secure. Aids in opening the West.

Three-year homestead law: Cutting down residence from five to three years, thereby aiding the homesteader.

Second homestead entry for soldiers: Giving soldiers an additional opportunity to secure a home.

Preference right to soldier entrymen: Aiding soldiers to have a second chance to secure a home.

Credit given for time of service in Army as residence on homestead: Aids homesteaders in acquirement of homes by reducing residence on land.

Federal appropriations for agricultural and mechanical colleges where farm boys and girls can learn trades; putting agriculture on a business basis; making agriculture a science; reducing cost of production.

Construction of fertilizer plants to improve the impoverished and run-down soils: Here Government steps in to stamp out monopoly in fertilizer, thereby rendering aid to farmers.

Increased appropriations for agriculture, thus recognizing agriculture as one of the leading industries.

Bureau of Markets: To enable the farmer to have an open and honest market; to avoid waste; to provide better market facilities; to aid farmers in every way.

Bureau of Good Roads: To keep alive road improvement everywhere; to study improved methods of road construction.

Repeal daylight-saving law: It was repealed on the 20th day of August, 1919.

LABOR SUPPORTED.

Establishment of the Department of Labor: Providing for a Cabinet member to represent the wage earners of the country.

Eight-hour day on public works: In the interest of every man who toils.

Children's Bureau: Protecting orphanage of land; demanded by civilization.

Safety of railway employees: Only justice to both employees and dependent ones.

Bureau of Labor Safety: Scientific methods of protecting those engaged in hazardous employment.

Workmen's compensation law: To make certain compensation to dependent ones.

Seamen's law: Requiring decent living facilities and proper protection of life.

Anti-injunction law: Labor's demand.

Increased wage scales on Government work.

The establishment in the Department of Labor of an adjustment service, including (a) Division of Conciliation, (b) United States Employment Service, (c) Bureau of Labor Statistics, (d) Bureau of Immigration, (e) Bureau of Naturalization, (f) Information and Educational Service, (g) Bureau of Industrial Housing and Transportation, (h) war labor policies board, (i) adjusting of labor disputes.

All in the interest of labor; all enacted for its benefit.

AMERICA'S NATURAL RESOURCES KEPT FREE FROM GRAFT.

Aided in stamping out graft in connection with the 70,000,000 acres of public land, the 165,000,000 acres of forest reserves, the 70,000,000 acres of coal land, the 6,000,000 acres of oil land, and the 3,000,000 acres of phosphate land, the 60,000,000 horsepower of hydroelectric energy, and the 31 national monuments and national parks. This property belongs to all the people—all should be interested in its preservation, development, and proper use. The handling of this great estate was both intricate and difficult. Not a breath of scandal, not an acre given away to railroads or frittered away by tax legislation.

Prior to the administration of Secretary Franklin K. Lane America suffered a constant scandal regarding the public domain.

AMERICA'S GREAT ACHIEVEMENT AND EFFICIENCY DURING THE STRESS OF WAR.

1. Raised an Army of 4,000,000 men—the mightiest and most efficient Army of all history.

2. Bridged the Atlantic with American ships and put 2,000,000 men safely across the sea amidst the greatest adversity known to history.

3. Established the greatest Medical Department and reduced the loss of life by disease to a minimum.

4. Established the greatest hospital service.

5. Established the greatest aeroplane service and established the greatest Navy in the world, save and except England alone.

6. Had an Army of the bravest men, the best clothed, the best fed, and the best paid of any army of the 26 nations engaged in the conflict.

7. Loaned $11,000,000,000 to the Allies to aid in the conduct of the war.

8. No panic; no failing, crumbling institutions; money plentiful; business men prosperous; the Treasury safe and sound; American institutions growing and expanding; no scourge among us.

9. The establishment of a war-time espionage law; a law to punish the spy, the agitator, the I. W. W., who, while the boys were dying at the front and were being submarined as they crossed the sea, were disseminating insidious propaganda of the murderous Hun.

10. Increased pay of the private soldier both in war and peace times from $15 to $30 a month. There was not a dissenting vote by either Republican or Democrat when this increase was added as an amendment to the draft law.

RECONSTRUCTION LEGISLATION, BOTH PENDING AND PASSED, INCIDENT TO CLOSING THE WORLD'S GREATEST WAR.

First. Vocational education for the wounded soldiers, so they may learn trades and become independent, self-sustaining citizens. Approximately $22,000,000 has already been appropriated, more to follow. These wounded soldiers shall be protected; they shall be educated; they shall not want.

Second. Pending legislation putting within reach of America's soldiers an opportunity to own and reside in a home they can call their own. I am in favor of extending the Mondell bill to town homes as well as farm homes; also to allow segregated homes as distinguished from soldiers' colony homes; also to let soldiers designate locality and particular homes desired; also to afford an equal chance to men of every State without requiring soldier to abandon his home State to avail himself of the law.

Third. Preference in the civil service and Government employment of all kinds for the soldiers. Will be assistance to soldiers who desire to enter Government service. It gives them a preference in all Government appointments. It is a law.

Fourth. Preference rights extended to all soldiers in acquiring of public lands and homes upon the public domain.

Fifth. Appropriate cash bonuses to the soldiers commensurate with their needs to reestablish them in society and make them as well off as they were before they entered the service. This should be done. It is only justice. Their service has upset all their plans. It is only a just recognition of service faithfully performed.

Sixth. Sweeping away of emergency war-time legislation. Total exemption of farmers from all profiteering laws, as they are not hoarders—not dealers—merely producers and selling in an open market.

Seventh. Repeal of the espionage laws and censorship laws of all kinds simultaneously with the closing of the war; this was necessary during the war, but indefensible in peace times. All patriotic Congressmen and Senators were willing to pass stringent laws to help win the war; all should now join in their repeal.

Eighth. To dispense with all unnecessary boards and Federal control, and allow honest business, labor, society, and the farmers to be free from Federal interference—Federal regulation—and allow the law of supply and demand, honestly administered, to again assert itself and control. If abuses spring up, let them be prosecuted in the courts as other infractions of law. In war times drastic laws were required. In peace the least governed is the best governed.

Ninth. To prosecute and put behind bars gamblers in the necessities of life and hoarders and extortionists of all sorts and kinds. Hoarders, gamblers, profiteers, and extortionists should no longer be tolerated. They extort from the producer and consumer. They breed Bolshevists, anarchists, and law violators.

Tenth. For the enactment of legislation to reduce the high cost of living and the abnormal and unconscionable profits, due to practiced extortion on both producer and consumer; hoarding and profiteering to be prosecuted for breaches of the law.

Eleventh. Restoration and reinstatement on easy terms, without penalty, of lapsed war-risk insurance policies.

Twelfth. Payment of soldiers' insurance in lump sums, as distinguished from monthly installments, at the option of the insured.

Thirteenth. Establishment of educational advantages in all camps, cantonments, forts, arsenals, thereby rendering service in Army and Navy sufficiently attractive to insure an adequate peace-time Army without compulsory military training in peace times.

Fourteenth. Free education to all disabled soldiers without red tape or entrance conditions of any sort; make admission easy and attractive.

Fifteenth. Deportation of alien slackers, as desired by the American Legion.

The Fortifications Appropriation Bill—Opposed to Compulsory Military Training.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WELLS GOODYKOONTZ,

OF WEST VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 10, 1920,

On the bill (H. R. 13555) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to appropriate money for fortifications and other works of national defense, including the big calibered long-range rifles necessary to guard our coast cities, the Philippine and Hawaiian Islands, and the Panama Canal. The greater portion of the fund sought to be appropriated is to cover the cost of completing works heretofore authorized and in process of construction, and for the repair and protection of existing structures.

The bill carries $98,959,888 less than the original estimates, and $47,460,672 less than the revised estimates submitted by the Director of Finance. The bill, when enacted into law, will prevent the further expenditure of appropriations heretofore made and cover into the Treasury on that account $800,534,992.93.

The very active and interesting Member from Texas, Mr. BLANTON, has spoken in favor of a reduction in national expenditures, and, while crediting the majority with a measure of success, has somewhat violently attacked the majority and their leader, Mr. MONDELL, for not making sufficient progress along this line. We must admit that not always have we cut appropriations as severely as they should have been pruned, but this was not the fault of the main body of the majority. The trouble is that when it comes to economy the Democratic Party has only one BLANTON; he is a leader without a follower—a John the Baptist crying in the Democratic wilderness. The minority generally have voted for all motions to increase appropriations and against all motions having as their object the reduction of appropriations.

But we are now considering another measure, one involving appropriations for the national defense. The spokesman for the bill is the chairman of the subcommittee, the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SLEMP]. In this Chamber this afternoon I listened to every word of his splendid address. We have many remarkable men in the House of Representatives. We have at the head of all the committees and of the subcommittees men of preeminent ability, and I have heard many of them speak upon and interrogated as to the measures they were managing upon the floor, but never before have I observed a Member whose wealth of information, accuracy of thought, fairness of dealing, soundness of judgment, and clearness of expression exceeded that of the modest, unassuming, but erudite and polished, gentleman from Virginia.

His struggle for political existence in Virginia—until the last election, when his former political enemies, recognizing his ability and patriotic devotion to his country, declined to oppose him—has been an ever recurring one. He has grappled with some of the ablest Democrats of his time, including the mighty Stuart, late Governor of that Commonwealth, but they each and all went down before him, not because they were unworthy, but for the reason that he and his principles were more worthy.

May it not be that his skill as an astute politician and as a profound statesman can be accounted for in the fact that as a cadet in the Virginia Military Academy, the West Point of the South, at Lexington, at graduation his examination papers showed that he had reached the highest mark ever attained by a student in that renowned institution.

Mr. Chairman, soon after arriving at Washington to take my seat in this body I was presented to the honored and distinguished gentleman who formerly presided with so much grace and dignity and fairness over the deliberations of this House, Mr. ex-Speaker CANNON, who said to me, "Young man, you are entering the greatest school in the world."

Not long afterwards I had the privilege and pleasure of meeting that great leader of men and expert on parliamentary law from Illinois [Mr. MANN], whose comment was, "You have become a Member of the greatest representative body in the world."

Here are men of every school of thought and shade of political opinion. Here are men of almost every profession, trade, and calling. Here are men from every section and community of our broad land and its island possessions, a country of varied industries, interests, and aspirations. Here we find the Representatives of all the sovereign peoples of our great Nation. Truly it is a representative body and made up of "many men of many minds."

The narrow soul and sordid individual, the misanthrope and the pessimist, who questions the ability or impugns the motives of the membership of this body is attacking the people themselves and seeking to undermine the foundations of free government.

This afternoon we were entertaind by the accomplished gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], who exhibited in our presence numerous firearms, such as rifles, shotguns, pistols, and revolvers, and whose knowledge of the mechanism of these implements of war seemed truly remarkable. The truth is that except for the fact that he has such information, coupled with other splendid qualifications, his Yankee constituents would not have sent him here, but having sent him they are smart enough to keep him here so long as he shall desire to stay.

While the gentleman was demonstrating the good points of the revolver my memory reverted to an incident of early boyhood. I had purchased for a small sum, from an auctioneer, a so-called "British bulldog revolver." I think "British" was a misnomer, for down on the metallic part of the revolver was the name of the manufacturer, located at New Haven, Conn. I kept the revolver hid around for a day or so until the folks were away from home and then proceeded to try it out. About the center of the barn door was a plank with a knot in it; standing off about 10 steps I steadied myself, and holding the pistol firmly with both hands, deliberately fired at the knot. The report was deafening and the smoke from the discharge hung low and heavy near the ground; with eagerness I hastened to the door to find out how accurate "she" was, but I could find no trace of the ball. There was an original small hole in the knot and I had begun to flatter myself with the thought that the ball had passed through the center and that I was, therefore, a dead shot, but glancing at a place some 4 feet away I was humiliated to observe the ball half buried in a log. This disgusted me with the old pistol and I soon traded it off.

Another incident of this period of my life was the discovery in the advertising columns of a farm newspaper—there was very little in the paper but advertisements—of a cut resembling a watch, under which it was said, "This solid rolled gold, stem winder and stem setter sent, postage prepaid, for $1." When the article came, much to my chagrin, I found it to be a kind of old brass sundial. I think I got this piece of property from a firm in Massachusetts. New England was not the only section of the country that duped me. One day I received from Chicago a very personal letter from a firm styling itself "Cody & Co.," saying that it had come to their knowledge that I was a prominent man in my community; that they were engaged in the portrait business; that if I would send them a photograph they would make and send me, free of charge, a splendid crayon portrait of myself, their object being to advertise their work. This remarkable proposition appealed to my vanity and the photograph was sent. A few days later receipt of my letter and photograph were duly acknowledged, with the statement that they had put one of their most skillful artists at work, and intimated that on account of my good looks the portrait would be an unsually handsome one. Then followed the suggestion that since this work was being done for me without charge it were only fair that I advance $20 to cover the cost of a suitable frame for the portrait. Upon carefully considering the proposition it gradually dawned upon me that more than likely when they said that I was "a prominent man," I being then only about 16 years of age, they might have been lying to me, and were trying to swindle me. It was only after repeated demands that I was able to secure a return of the photograph, which I highly valued, it being the only one I had.

Perhaps there were many boys on the farms not as green as I, but I expect that there were quite a few equally unsophisticated who were caught by the same devices that entrapped me.

There is now in Chicago a society organized to assist in securing the passage of a law providing for compulsory military training; furthermore, many people in Connecticut—from which State comes the gentleman who has so ably presented to us the merits of the guns, pistols, and revolvers made in that great State—I understand are very much in favor of compulsory military training for our 18-year old boys. While I have the greatest respect for the gentleman, as also for all the ingenuous and thrifty Yankees of New England, yet I feel that I am now too old to have the wool again pulled down over my eyes.

This bill makes no appropriation for small arms. We have on hand millions of such, enough, let us hope, to last the country for many, many years. And I am not very anxious that Massachusetts and Connecticut shall ship any more of their repeating rifles into West Virginia, for if so many of them had not in the past been made and sent there fewer good men would have died with their boots on in my good State.

Mr. Speaker, the propaganda for universal compulsory military training has had no effect upon me nor upon the vast majority of the men in Congress. The people, too, are fast awakening to a full realization of the danger of converting this country into a vast military camp. The doctrine of compulsory military training can only be compared with mental henbane or the deadly nightshade.

The Peace Resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES V. GANLY,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 9, 1920.

Mr. GANLY. Mr. Speaker, I have given to the consideration of this pending resolution declaring the war with Germany at an end the most serious thought. I have approached its consideration not in any partisan spirit, because I am firmly convinced that this question in nowise is affected by party partisanship, but is rather one requiring earnest, conscientious, and sincere patriotism. There should be neither Democratic politics nor Republican politics in a question affecting the vital interests of the Republic; and, although other men in this House and in the other branch of the National Legislature have attempted to limit their consideration to this question along partisan lines, for my part I have endeavored to dismiss from my mind all other questions but what is best for all the people.

I represent a district which I firmly believe is composed of citizens whose patriotism and Americanism is of the highest type. I believe they hold dear the honor and prosperity of our country, and I intend to vote for this resolution because I believe that not only do they wish it, and therefore I should represent their desire, but because it is the first opportunity presented for a real solution of the unrest among the people and of the paralysis of trade due to the failure to negotiate a proper peace treaty. The waging of a successful war required rigid and drastic war legislation, but that necessity has passed, and no representative of the people could be true to their interests if he tolerated for a single day the continuance for war purposes of laws which hamper the individual and curtail his ordinary legal rights and liberties, and which have been a handicap and burden upon normal trade and commerce. This resolution brings an end to uncertainty.

Are all the business activities of this country and the great enterprises of commerce and domestic industry on which the livelihood of every citizen depends, to remain paralyzed and prevented from growth and development while the Senate and Executive of this country are settling their contest of strength in formulating a treaty of peace? How long are the citizens of this country to wait for a full and complete settlement of the questions arising between Germany and the United States and the questions involving the international relations of this country with the whole world? To me, as a representative of my people, are presented the plain questions by this resolution whether I am in favor of declaring the war at an end, whether or not I am in favor of terminating the restrictive legislation which curtailed ordinary liberties of the citizens during the war, whether or not I am in favor of the trade and commerce of this country continuing on its normal, unimpeded progress. To all these questions I have but one answer, and that is that I am in favor of every one of these propositions. If I voted against this resolution simply because as a Democrat I feel that I should vote along party lines, I would in my own opinion be betraying the best interests of my constituents.

One of the greatest evils of our day is the profiteering in commodities and in the staples of life, leading to a tremendous burden on the ordinary people in their cost of living.

To my mind this evil condition is largely due to the failure to settle upon the terms and conditions of peace and to resume normal commercial intercourse with the whole world.

America should lead the world in establishing peace; instead we are lagging behind.

The whole world is seeking peace, our entire country is seeking peace, the constituents whom I represent earnestly desire the resumption of peaceful conditions, and this resolution seeks to bring about that condition. I shall therefore gladly vote for it.

Some question has arisen as to whether or not this resolution is within the constitutional powers of the House of Representatives. I have examined this question with care, and, in my opinion, the Constitution of our country does give this power to the House of Representatives; and I therefore believe that under all the circumstances, which I need not rehearse, because they are so well known to every citizen, that it is the duty of the House of Representatives to use whatever power it does possess to bring to an end the great difficulties, the continuing unrest, and the intolerable burdens incident to the delay of the Senate and of the President to agree upon a treaty.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES A. GALLIVAN,

OF MASSACHUSETTS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 12, 1920.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, March 24, the Committee on Ways and Means of this House held an important session, attended by practically every member of the committee, for the purpose of considering certain suggested beneficial legislation affecting the soldiers and sailors of the World War. The executive committee of the American Legion and various State commanders of this splendid order had been invited to appear before the Ways and Means Committee with any suggestions as to legislation affecting the welfare, physical and financial, of the soldiers and sailors of the World War.

Every State in the Union was represented by an officer of the legion at the hearing, and, as a Representative in Congress from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, I was privileged to address the Ways and Means Committee during its session.

By permission of the House I herewith present to this body the argument made by me at the hearing in favor of a substantial bonus for the ex-service men of America:

STATEMENT OF HON. JAMES A. GALLIVAN, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF MASSACHUSETTS, TO HOUSE COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS, MARCH 24, 1920.

"Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like very much to be heard now.

"The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be glad to hear you now, Mr. GALLIVAN.

"Mr. GALLIVAN. I am so much interested in this legislation that I have left a hospital where I have been confined for seven weeks and have come here from Boston to appear before this committee, and I asked to be heard at this moment because of some questions which were asked of the gentleman who has just preceded me and which, I think, I can answer better than he can, although he did excellently well, and I want to compliment him on the way in which he met some of these questions that were put to him.

"First of all, an effort was made by some member of the committee to show that the American Legion was asking for this legislation. They are not asking for anything of the kind. My good friend from Texas on this committee tried to pin it onto the American Legion and he tried to show that it was a selfish demand from the legion.

"And the gentleman from Ohio answered by saying that, because of numerous bills which had been introduced on the floor of the House—and I think some were introduced in the Senate—these demands came from the people of this country and not from the legion.

"I want to say that I heartily echo what Mr. Bettman said, that the demand for this legislation comes from the country.

"Long before the American Legion had its first session in Paris I introduced a bill, the first bill, if you please, for a bonus; and I have the pleasure and the pride—I would 'point with pride,' as the campaign platforms say, to the fact that I introduced the first bonus bill in Congress.

"And from that day to this I understand that 76 bills have been introduced asking for bonuses or adjusted compensation, or whatever you choose to term it. I can see nothing selfish in it. My excellent friend from Texas [Mr. GARNER] wanted to know whether there was a general newspaper support of it; he said he could not find any such support. I do not know what newspapers he reads. I have in front of me an editorial from the standpat reactionary Republican organ of New England, the Boston Transcript, of March 4. I do not want to read it, because it reflects on us Members of Congress for not having passed legislation of this sort long ago. It is the most enthusiastic thing I have read in favor of this legislation. And the Boston Transcript is probably the most enthusiastic Republican newspaper in the country. And the best editorial that I have read on it comes from the Boston American, which is 80 per cent of the time a regular Democratic paper.

"So, therefore, I could quote to this committee, from my own city, strong editorial indorsements from recognized newspapers with big circulations, heartily indorsing this proposition, which did not originate with the American Legion, but which, if I may be permitted to say it, this committee put up to the legion, the American Legion not having taken any position on the bonus theretofore.

"The question of a bonus has been considered by this committee because of frequent requests from individual Members of Congress who have come here to the chairman, or to individual members of the Ways and Means Committee, and said that they had introduced bills; that they wanted hearings on their bills. And you gentlemen well know that there have been private conferences of the Members of the House who have introduced bills, who wanted to agree on some concrete measures.

"The story went out that the American Legion had not taken a position; and the legion was criticized for not having taken a position; and the legion was accused of having sidestepped the question of bonus.

"And so the legion came to the Nation's Capital, and it has held a meeting, and it has appointed a committee on this legislation, and out of that committee comes this bill which is before you to-day. I want to say, as the first man who introduced a bonus bill, that I am here now to withdraw my bill and to give hearty support to the legion proposition, which is the best thing I have seen of all the bills which have been offered.

"My friend from Texas—and there is no man in the committee or in Congress for whom I have a higher regard—wanted to know this morning something about the individual votes taken on these various titles. Well, it was all right for him to probe into the executive actions of the executive committee of the American Legion. But I know he would object if anybody attempted to probe into the votes taken at the executive sessions of the Ways and Means Committee.

"But as long as it came up, I will give him some information: I will tell him why there was a unanimous vote on titles 1, 2, and 3 of the bill. It was because a majority of the men voting had agreed that they would vote for title 4; and everybody who was in favor of title 4 voted for titles 1, 2, or 3, because of the absolute understanding that where a man did not want to take a land grant, or to borrow money to build a home, but wanted a cash bonus, the men who favored the provisions of titles 1, 2, and 3 would support a proposition for a cash bonus or an adjusted compensation.

"I do not want the committee to be misled, because there was a small minority which voted against title 4; titles 1, 2, and 3 would have been opposed by some if there had not been a general agreement that the entire thing would be agreed to; and it was agreed to unanimously when the vote came on the completed bill.

"Now, I have no special desire to prolong this discussion. The distinguished Congressman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORIN] has also left a sick bed to come here, and he wants to be heard by the committee this afternoon. I would like to emphasize this one fact:

"I want this committee to realize that these men came back from France, after having gone through hell; and they found this country engaged in an orgy of riotous expenditure of war profits. And naturally, after getting into an atmosphere of that kind, they looked around and said, 'What was this war all about? What happened here while we were over there?' And the war is not over yet, because we have not joined the League of Nations, if you please. [Laughter.]

"Now, they want to know where they 'get off'—and I do not blame them.

"As my friend from Ohio said, he is not speaking for himself; and the men at the head of the American Legion are not speaking for themselves; they are speaking for the rank and file.

"I will tell my good friend from Texas that I feel that I voice the sentiment of 220,000 boys in Massachusetts who went into this war, and who went into it whole-heartedly, and who saw it all, and who have come back, and who have seen what happened while they were overseas or on the seas; and they recall the high-sounding phrases that they heard from us Congressmen when the world was at war, when we stood here in the House Chamber, lifting our voices and waving our arms, and shouting that we would never forget them when they came back.

"And we are not trying to pay them, Mr. GARNER, 25 cents on the dollar; we have been paying them 1 cent on the dollar if it comes down to a cash basis.

"I want to say to this committee that I know you have got a problem; you have got a big problem to find out how you are going to raise the money. But I also know that the Ways and Means Committee, since I have been in Congress, has had other big problems——

"The CHAIRMAN (interposing). The bankrupt nations of Europe are expected to pay more than 5 cents on the dollar, are they not?

"Mr. GALLIVAN. We hope so; they owe us a lot of money. [Laughter.]

"I know you have got a problem, but I know what the Ways and Means Committee has always done. If it was not able to do what the distinguished chairman believes that its membership is capable of doing, namely, solve the problem itself, I know what it can do, as it always has done in the past, call the best brains in this country to help it out.

"We were spending $2,000,000,000 every three weeks when the war was on. And the highest figure which has been mentioned in connection with this bonus proposition is $2,000,000,000. We were voting that amount of money every two or three weeks when the war was on; and let me say to you gentlemen that if the war had lasted three or four weeks longer, these questions asked here to-day would not have been asked; you would not have asked where we were going to get a couple of billion dollars; you would have voted $10,000,000,000 to end the war. And it was these men who ended that war——

"The CHAIRMAN (interposing). Will you allow me to interrupt you at this point?

"Mr. GALLIVAN. Certainly.

"The CHAIRMAN. I have heard it stated that when our boys landed over there, about the time that Gen. Haig said that their backs were against the wall, the English Government was converting its munitions factories into the manufacture of bathing suits. [Laughter.] Our boys got there just in time.

"Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes, sir. That is what I want this committee to realize. We sent over 2,000,000, and we had two and a half million more who were prepared to go over there—and millions more, if necessary. And we promised those boys everything when they came back. And now we are trying to forget them. We gave them a $60 tip when they came home; that is all. [Laughter.]

"I do not know that I can add anything, Mr. Chairman. I have not had a chance to make a speech for several weeks because of illness; so that I have grown a little enthusiastic on this bonus question.

"The CHAIRMAN. Well, you have made one that is condensed, and is worth several weeks of ordinary speeches.

"Mr. GALLIVAN. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. [Applause.]"

The Peace Resolution.

"The President under these war measures has as much or more power than any King or Emperor of any civilized country of the present age; and I am in favor of this declaration of peace, the repeal of these oppressive war-time measures, and a restoration of our commercial relations with the nations of the world."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN M. ROBSION,

OF KENTUCKY.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 9, 1920.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, three years ago, after the German Government had blown up many of our ships and murdered hundreds of our people on the high seas, Congress declared a state of war existed between the United States and Germany. About 17 months ago the armistice was signed between the Allies and the German Government. On that day President Wilson appeared before the House and Senate and declared that the war with the Imperial German Government had come to an end.

No treaty of peace has been made between our country and Germany. The Allied Governments and Germany have executed and exchanged formal treaties of peace. Our country alone remains technically at war with Germany. This joint resolution under consideration declares that a state of war no longer exists between our country and Germany. We now declare peace.

Democrats in the House assert that this resolution is unconstitutional; that the President alone has the power to make treaties of peace with the advice and consent of the Senate. I have observed that when our southern Democratic friends find no other means of escape in their opposition to any proposed action of Congress, they claim that such action is unconstitutional. We answer this objection by stating that we are not attempting to make a treaty. We are simply called upon to declare that the state of war which the Congress declared to exist on April 6, 1917, has ended, and to repeal the war measures passed by the Congress to meet war conditions, and to regulate commercial relations between this country and Germany.

THE WAR IS OVER.

Following the declaration of April 6, 1917, we called into the service nearly 5,000,000 men and pledged the entire resources and man power of the Nation to repel the German assaults. Our boys went forth and won a complete and glorious victory on land and sea and in the air and brought imperishable honor and renown to our flag and country. President Wilson's note-writing habit alone prevented them from marching into Berlin and raising the Stars and Stripes over the German capital. By his action we were denied a dictated peace. The German fleet was taken over. The German Army surrendered. We took possession of a large portion of the German territory. The Imperial Government was overthrown and the Kaiser has been ever since an exile sawing wood in Holland. The Germans have set up a new Government. All of the allied nations have executed formal treaties of peace with Germany, and have resumed both political and commercial relations with her. Our grand Army has been demobilized and our Navy placed upon a peace basis. Neither side intends to resume hostilities. The war is certainly over.

THREE WAYS TO TERMINATE A WAR.

The highest authorities on international law agree that there are three ways of terminating a war: First, by a formal treaty of peace; second, by the conquest and subjugation of one of the warring nations; third, the mere cessation of hostilities so long continued that there is apparently no intention of resuming them.

While no formal treaty of peace has been made yet, we have subjugated the German Nation, and there has been such a long cessation of hostilities coupled with other circumstances as to make it clear that there is no intention on the part of Germany or our country to resume the war; so therefore this war has been ended in two of the ways in which a war may be terminated. The Civil War was ended without any formal treaty. History is full of instances where wars were ended without any formal treaty of peace.

WHY SHOULD CONGRESS DECLARE THAT WAR IS OVER?

During the war more than 60 important war measures were passed by Congress. These war measures by their terms were to continue in force until the war ended and the President issued a proclamation of peace. Some of them were to continue in force for a certain stated period of time after the issuance of this proclamation of peace. These war measures gave the President extraordinary powers and disarranged the whole social and industrial life of the Nation. On the whole the President through these war measures had as much or more power than any king or emperor of any civilized country of the present age. He had as much or more power than the Kaiser and all of us who have watched the President feel that he has been and is still as much of an autocrat as Kaiser Bill himself. Because we were at war and the President is the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy we granted to him these extraordinary powers. The Congress and the people were willing to forego their social, political, and industrial rights in order to win this war. These laws were never intended to be operative in peace times and no free people should submit to them in peace times any longer than is reasonably necessary for their repeal. The people of the country and Congress have waited for 17 long months for the President to conclude a formal treaty of peace. I for one believe that no formal treaty of peace is possible until the autocrat who now sits in the White House is swept out of power by the American people and a Republican administration takes charge of the Government.

OPPRESSIVE WAR-TIME MEASURES STILL IN FORCE.

Among the sixty-odd war measures that were passed by Congress is included the Lever food and fuel control act, the national defense act, the espionage act, and similar laws.

Under these drastic laws the President has almost absolute control of all of the industries of this country. He can take over the great industries of the country and place them in charge of bureaus, commissions, and administrators. Since the war is over, to my own knowledge, he has greatly crippled the great coal industry. By the continual meddling of himself, his bureaus, commissions, and administrators, he has put thousands of coal mines out of business. He has disorganized labor and brought about a disturbed condition of the operator and the miner. The coal industry of Kentucky and elsewhere, so far as I have been able to learn, has greatly suffered because of this meddling on the part of the administration. Under this same law the sugar industry of this country has been paralyzed and the price of sugar greatly enhanced. Normal conditions are impossible so long as the great business and commercial industries of the country are controlled and managed by bureaus and commissions located at Washington. The mining industry can not live and prosper until these arbitrary laws are repealed and the operator and the miner are permitted once more to carry on the mining industry of this country, and this is true as to steel, sugar, agriculture, and the other industries of the country. The President should not have the power in peace times to take over the great industries of this country by simply making or entering an Executive order and placing in charge of the business a lot of incompetents.

The war is over, yet because of certain war measures the American people are denied the right of free speech. Under this law an American citizen can not criticize the President or the least of his subordinates, even though the criticism is deserving. This law must be repealed and free speech once more restored in this country. In order to get rid of these oppressive laws and take away from Mr. Wilson the autocratic and despotic powers now being exercised by him, it is necessary for the Congress to declare that the war between this country and Germany is at an end. This resolution does declare the war to be at an end and does repeal these wartime laws and does restore the country to a peace basis.

PRESIDENT WILSON AND HIS PARTY OPPOSE.

The distinguished ex-Speaker and Democrat, Mr. CLARK, has stated that the House should not act upon this resolution because too many cooks spoil the broth. He must have forgotten the fact that President Wilson took about 80 cooks and about fifteen hundred other people to Paris to make the treaty of peace. This great army of people that President Wilson took with him to Paris spent millions of dollars and did spoil the broth. The President brought back his treaty bound up in about 70 different ways with the so-called League of Nations. In this treaty we did not get the promise of a foot of ground nor one dollar in money. We surrendered our Constitution, the Monroe doctrine, and nearly all of the other great rights of this country. In this peace treaty was created a superstate, which had a capital in Europe, a chief ruler to rule over our Nation and the other nations in the league, and a flag that would hang over and above the Stars and Stripes. We simply would become the colony or State of this great superstate made up of the various nations of the world. In other words, we surrender our nationality and independence. President Wilson agreed to give Great Britain six votes to our one in this league. He agreed for us to guarantee the boundary lines and political freedom of every one of these nations, both large and small, in Europe, Asia, Africa, and Australia. He agreed that we should mix up in every quarrel, brawl, and war of the world. He pledged all of our resources and the unborn generations of our boys to fight the battles of nearly all of the countries of the world. He agreed that this League of Nations should have the power to declare war for us and to say how large our Army and Navy should be, and to determine how much money and how many of our splendid boys should be contributed to take care of the countries of the world and to say when and where they should fight. He agrees to give foreign countries power over our foreign immigration and to permit the League of Nations to regulate our commerce and to control the hours and wages for the American workingmen, and thereby put our workingmen on the same footing with all classes of labor throughout the world. Then he said to the American people and to the United States Senate, "You accept this political monstrosity, that was conceived in sin and born in iniquity, without the dotting of an 'i' or the crossing of a 't.'"

If you do not, you can not have peace. I will keep you in war. You can not resume trade relations with the world. I will hold over your heads these oppressive war measures. The American people had repudiated the leadership of President Wilson before he went to Paris. It is generally believed that the President helped to create this League of Nations in the hope that he would become some day the chief ruler of the world.

The Constitution provides that the President may make treaties, with the advice and consent of the Senate. He at no time sought or accepted the advice of the United States Senate. He ignored the advice and warnings of the Senate as well as the American people.

The Senate adopted reservations which Americanize the treaty and protect the rights of our people. The average majority in the Senate on the adoption of these reservations was 28, and on the final vote on ratification with reservations there was a substantial majority but not a two-thirds majority. Twenty-two of the leading Democratic Senators from the North, East, and West voted to ratify the treaty with reservations, but the President held certain southern Democrats in line and defeated ratification, and thereby denied peace to the American people. It is now up to Congress to act and to declare that the war is over, repeal the oppressive war measures, and establish again our commercial relations with the world.

Some Democrats of the House now talk about us violating the Constitution in taking this action. These same Democrats are backing the President and his League of Nations. The President has shown little more regard for the Constitution than if it were a scrap of paper. The covenant of the League of Nations practically destroys the Constitution. Verily these Democrats strain at a gnat and swallow a camel.

IS THE PRESIDENT SEEKING A THIRD TERM?

Mr. Speaker, everyone knows that President Wilson has defeated the peace treaty. He will now, if he can, defeat this resolution for peace by his veto power. He is the champion of the League of Nations and says it must be an issue in the coming campaign, and, of course, no one but himself could be the candidate on this issue. This is worrying many of our Democratic friends. We Republicans welcome Mr. Wilson and his league as the issue from a political standpoint, but every loyal Republican is more interested in the peace and general welfare of the country than he is interested in party advantage or success.

The Senators who voted to ratify the treaty with reservations represent more than two-thirds of the population of the United States. These same States paid several times more taxes and bought several times more bonds than the States paid in taxes or bought bonds whose Senators voted against the ratification of the reservations and who followed President Wilson in his effort to prevent peace. Wherever the people have voted on Mr. Wilson and his league they have lost ingloriously. Mr. Wilson in 1916 had for his slogan, "He kept us out of war." This year he can sing, "He kept us out of peace." A New York dispatch of April 12 has the following:

A former ambassador of the United States and an intimate and personal political friend of President Wilson said to-day: "I saw him in Washington a few days ago. Should the President continue to improve and the Senate persist in its refusal to ratify the League of Nations covenant he will offer himself for a third term with the League of Nations as the paramount issue."

I firmly believe that the President has kept the treaty from being ratified so that he may force himself upon his party for a third-term nomination. If he does, there will be millions of sick Democrats and also millions of jubilant Republicans.

THE REPUBLICANS RESPOND TO THE DEMANDS OF THE PEOPLE.

Some of the Democratic speakers on the floor of the House have declared that the Republicans have brought forward this resolution for political purposes and to embarrass the President. The people want peace. They are entitled to peace. The people want President Wilson shorn of his war-time autocratic powers. The people want these oppressive war-time laws repealed. It is not our purpose to play politics or to embarass the President. It is our purpose and our duty to respond to the needs of this Republic. It is good politics to heed the voice of the people. Mr. Wilson has refused to heed their voice. He has failed and refused for 17 months to give them peace. This resolution no doubt will embarass the President and the Democratic Party, but, Mr. Speaker, the President and his party have not only embarrassed but afflicted the American people for a long time, and I, for one, desire to relieve that embarrassment. If anyone must be embarrassed let it be the President, whose acts and conduct have brought about this condition. This resolution will not prevent the President from making a treaty of peace with Germany. This would have been done more than a year ago but for the so-called League of Nations. This resolution protects us in all of the rights we would have acquired by the treaty of peace. We hold the ships and property belonging to Germany and German citizens.

Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt of the constitutionality of our action here to-day. I welcome the opportunity on this third anniversary of our declaration of war to vote for peace and to repeal these war-time measures and to strip the President of the war-time powers which he is exercising in the time of peace. I could do no less and be true to my conscience and true to the wishes and desires of a very great majority of the American people.

The Peace Resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. W. A. AYRES.

OF KANSAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 9, 1920.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, on last Tuesday I said in a speech that the House of Representatives had no jurisdiction over this so-called peace resolution; that the Constitution does not empower us to consider peace treaties or to interfere with the treaty-making power of the Government, and to the best of my ability at that time I gave my reasons for this position.

In addition to what I said then I want to present further reasons for opposing this resolution.

It is needless to say again that I am just as anxious as anyone for peace and will go just as far as anyone to bring it about without stultifying myself and disgracing my country. I do not hesitate to say the proponents of this resolution know full well the passage of it will not bring peace; but feel they are playing a great game of politics, which may be true. The overwhelming sentiment for the return of the railroads enabled the railroad interests to force through this House a measure in restoring them to private ownership that would not have had any consideration at any other period.

The steering committee of five Members on the other side of the aisle can do most anything with its side of the House and are ready to capitalize the overwhelming sentiment for peace to the extent of jamming through this House a resolution which is pure bunk and camouflage. It is expected so long as they have their hold on that side as they now have they will continue to jam such measures through the House until, in the language of a noted Kansas editor, they bust the jammer and spill the jam.

Suppose those of you who intend to vote for this resolution had told the people in the fall of 1918, just before the election, you intended to try to make a separate peace with Germany. How many of you would have been elected if you had said, "I am not concerned about our Allies, but believe we should make peace with Germany regardless of them, and make it to our own interests, and in any manner we may see fit, just, as set forth in the third section of this resolution, so we secure reciprocal trade with the German Government and its nationals." Great God! has it come to this, that for the sake of making it possible to enable a few money changers and profiteers to trade with an enemy country we will attempt to make a separate peace and abandon the nations with which we were associated during the war? And so eager are we to do this we are ready to do it unlawfully. As the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] said:

By this resolution we say in effect to Germany: The war is over; let bygones be bygones; let us shake hands and call it square; it is all over, and besides we want to trade with you.

I have the greatest admiration for the gentleman from Michigan, who is a Republican with the courage of his convictions, and notwithstanding the frowns of this fearful and mysterious Republican steering committee of five, whose displeasure most every Member on that side of the aisle fears to the extent it is pitiful, he takes the position of a fearless and courageous statesman. He further said:

Now, this is a new and strange attitude for us to take on the Republican side of the Chamber. Only a year or so ago one of the distinguished Republican leaders of this country laid down the correct doctrine, in my judgment, for Republicans and Democrats alike to follow upon the conclusion of the war.

He did not seem to think that it was our place to cut ourselves off from the allied nations and make a separate peace with Germany without terms. Oh, they say we can negotiate a treaty afterwards, but it is a fine thing to give a man a receipt in full and then tell him to come back and settle afterwards. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] Here is what a great Republican statesman uttered only a year or so ago, and he blazed the correct pathway for this country to take at the conclusion of this war. He said:

"The United States occupies, fortunately, a position in which she will be able to speak with a powerful voice."

Oh, this is a powerful voice, this resolution. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

He said:

"We seek no territory; no material gain for our own country. There is no territory by which we could be bribed or influenced; no trade advantage by which we could be tempted."

He could not have even dreamed of this resolution, which recites "in order that we may have reciprocal trade with the German Government." [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Continuing, he said:

"There is no personal profit which can turn us from the one great object. Our sole purpose is to put Germany finally and completely in a position where she can never again attempt to conquer and ruin the world, as she has done in the last four years."

That is what a great Republican statesman said only a few months ago. I stand by every word of it, and commend it to my colleagues on both sides of the Chamber.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. What was the date?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. August, 1918. Again, in order that there should be no question about that or that America should take its proper place in the settlement of this Great War, he went on to say that we must see to it that Belgium must be restored. What does this resolution say about restoring Belgium? Nothing. I can not so soon forget that Belgium threw herself across the path of the world's despoiler and held the lines until France could arrive.

I for one refuse to forget the services which Belgium rendered to mankind. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This great Republican leader and statesman further declared:

"Alsace and Lorraine must be returned.
"Italia Irredenta must go back to Italy.
"Serbia and Roumania must be established in their independence.
"Greece must be more secure.
"The Jugoslovakia and Czechoslovakia must be independent States.
"The Polish people must have an independent Poland.
"The Russian Provinces must be restored.
"Constantinople must be taken away from Turkey.
"Palestine must never be returned to Turkish rule.
"There must be compensation to Belgium, and a partial compensation at least can be found in the disposition of the German colonies, which ought never to be returned to the empire which has so abused all the most ordinary rights of humanity. These in outline are the principal conditions"—

He says:

"What conditions are in this resolution? None."

Continuing—

"which alone will give us a victory worth having, and when we talk about a complete peace, and a just and righteous peace, let it be known to all the world that that is what we mean."

I adopt as my own the language and sentiment of this great leader. Those are the words of a great Republican statesman, the Republican leader of the Senate, HENRY CABOT LODGE. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is the record we have made on this question, and I propose to stand there, and not upon the record that we will make here this afternoon.

Yes; there is another Member of this House on that side of the aisle who from some cause does not fear this mysterious committee of five. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FULLER] said:

This peace resolution is a sugar-coated pill prescribed by Dr. LODGE to be taken by all regular Republicans before thinking. It is painless as well as senseless and will in effect put the stamp of approval of the House of Representatives on the action of the treaty wreckers in the Senate. If you are a Republican and you are sick it will make you well, and if you are well it will make you better.

Would to God it might cure the Republican Party of the sleeping sickness that has kept it from doing anything constructive since they captured control of the House and Senate except to criticize the Democrats. How about the reforms Republicans were to put into effect when they came into control? Where is the budget? What have they done about the taxes? How have they reduced the high cost of living?

A joint resolution of both Houses or a single resolution by either is no more than an academic expression of opinion. Peace is not so made. Doubtless Mr. Wilson will have an honest pleasure in repeating for the instruction of Congress the convincing and ironic remarks made by Richard Olney, Secretary of State, in regard to certain expressions of opinion by Congress about the foreign policy of the United States. It is in the power and it may be in the pleasure of Congress, for partisan or political reasons, to utter the thoughts that arise in it in regard to foreign relations. In point of efficacy such resolutions are mere foam and vapor.

For my own part I believe the time will come when men will be as ashamed of rigging the President because of his foreign policy and of opposing the League to Enforce Peace as those partisan politicians were who fought and criticized Abraham Lincoln.

I am a Republican. I believe a Republican is to be the next President of the United States, but I can not forget the obligation we owe to the men who fought and won the war to make it what we claimed it was then, namely, a war to end all wars.

I am proud to indorse the President's foreign policy and his efforts to make a league to preserve peace, although I do not find myself in accord with him on domestic and economic questions. And in considering this question, while I do so as a Republican, I thank God I am an American first and a Republican afterwards, rather than that I should consider this important question from the standpoint of personal or party advantage.

The framers of this joint resolution attempt to protect this Nation in any benefits it might have by reason of the provisions of the treaty of Versailles, which we have refused to ratify. Can anyone conceive of a more ridiculous and absurd position for a nation to be placed in than to undertake to force a defeated people to agree to waive and renounce on behalf of itself and nationals any claim, demand, right, or benefit against the United States or its nationals that it or they would not have had the right to assert had the United States ratified the treaty of Versailles?

Think of the humiliating position of a powerful nation of fair-minded and generous people, through its lawmaking bodies, demanding of a defeated people to abide by the provisions of an agreement signed by both nations, which we, as one of the contracting parties, refuse to ratify but repudiate. That is exactly what you say in section 3 of this resolution, which you intend to jam through this House. The proponents of this resolution know full well they can not by the passage of same, even with this proviso last stated, protect this Nation in any rights we may have under the Versailles treaty.

This, gentlemen, is what you are doing by the passage of this resolution: You are saying to Germany, "So far as we are concerned you need not pay any attention to article 173 of the treaty of peace, which provides—

"Universal compulsory military service shall be abolished in Germany.
"The German Army may only be constituted and recruited by means of voluntary enlistment.

"Nor, as for that matter, article 228, which provides:

"The German Government shall hand over to the allied and associated powers, or to such one of them as shall so request, all persons accused of having committed an act in violation of the laws and customs of war, who are specified either by name or by the rank, office, or employment which they held under the German authorities.

"Oh, no; you need not bother about this little matter just so you agree to establish reciprocal trade relations.

"You need not pay any attention to that provision of the treaty which you signed, being article 232, which provides, among other things, that, in accordance with your pledges already given as to complete restoration for Belgium, you undertake, in addition to the compensation for damages elsewhere in this part provided for, as a consequence of the violation of the treaty of 1839, to make a reimbursement of all sums which Belgium has borrowed from the allied and associated Governments up to November 11, 1918, together with interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum on such sums, which amounts to $171,780,000, so far as this Nation is concerned. Oh, no; you need not bother about a little matter like this. Reciprocal trade relations are all we want.

"You likewise need not comply with section 4 of annex 3, which provides that you—

"Deliver to the Reparation Commission in respect of each vessel a bill of sale or other document of title evidencing the transfer to the commission of the entire property in the vessel, free from all encumbrances, charges, and liens of all kinds, as the commission may require.
"Take all measures that may be indicated by the Reparation Commission for insuring that the ships themselves shall be placed at its disposal—thus making it unnecessary to take any further steps in the way of findings of prize courts."

And you say to Germany, by the passage of this resolution: "You do not have to comply with the provisions of article 249, wherein you agreed that the total cost of all armies of the allied and associated Governments in occupied German territory, from the date of the signing of the armistice on November 11, 1918; that is, including all expenses of every kind and character, shall be borne by you, and which will amount in all probability to over a hundred millions of dollars to this Nation alone. But this is a small matter when you take into consideration the question of reciprocal trade with you."

On December 2, 1889, a treaty was made between the United States, Great Britain, and Germany, in which Germany was given the control over the islands of Upolu and Savii, and all other islands of the Samoan Group west of longitude 171° west of Greenwich. Article 288 of the treaty of Versailles provides that the special rights and privileges granted to Germany by reason of that treaty are terminated as of the date of August 4, 1914. Of course, upon the passage of this resolution Germany need not consider herself bound to carry out that agreement but can insist upon the provisions of the original treaty of 1899.

And furthermore you say by the adoption of this resolution: "We did not mean what we said in the third paragraph of article 289 of the Versailles treaty which reads:

"The allied and associated powers undertake among themselves not to revive with Germany any conventions or treaties which are not in accordance with the terms of the present treaty."

If that is binding upon the parties who have entered into this contract, then I might ask, Is not it equally as bad faith with our allies and associates to undertake to enter into a separate peace with Germany as it would be to revive any conventions or treaties which are not in accordance with the terms of this treaty?

Such a humiliating position as this must make a red-blooded American feel anything but proud of the American Congress.

You say to Germany, "You are not bound to carry out the provisions of one of the sections of article 296, wherein you contract and agree to be responsible for the payment of such debts due by your nationals to the nationals of powers, including that of the United States." There are millions of dollars due nationals of this Nation from the nationals of Germany. No doubt they will be disappointed when they know they were protected in so far as it was within the power of the Government of Germany to protect them, which she agreed to do, but will not need to do by the provisions of this resolution, and they will find they have to adjust their claims with the nationals of Germany as best they can.

You say, in effect, to the German Government, "You are not bound by section 2 of annex 1 of the treaty, which provides—

"No claim or action shall be made or brought against any allied or associated power or against any person acting on behalf of or under the direction of any legal authority or department of the Government of such a power by Germany or by any German national wherever resident in respect to any act or omission with regard to his property rights or interests during the war or in preparation for the war. Similarly no claim or action shall be made or brought against any person in respect to any act or omission under or in accordance with the exceptional war measures, laws, or regulations of any allied or associated power—but your nationals can at any time, after this resolution becomes a law, bring action to recover from the Alien Property Custodian something like $500,000,000. All we need to do is to put a little more tax on the dear people to make it up, just so we have reciprocal trade relations."

Section 1 of part 13 of the treaty relating to labor contains this paragraph:

The high contracting parties, moved by sentiments of justice and humanity as well as by the desire to secure the permanent peace of the world, agree to the following:

The functions of the international labor office shall include the collection and distribution of information on all subjects relating to the international adjustment of conditions of industrial life and labor, and particularly the examination of subjects which it is proposed to bring before the conference with a view to the conclusion of international conventions and the conduct of such special investigations as may be ordered by the conference.

It will prepare the agenda for the meetings of the conference.

It will carry out the duties required of it by the provisions of this part of the present treaty in connection with international disputes.

It will edit and publish in French and English, and in such other languages as the governing body may think desirable, a periodical paper dealing with problems of industry and employment of international interest.

Generally, in addition to the functions set out in this article, it shall have such other powers and duties as may be assigned to it by the conference.

This, however, is a secondary matter, so far as the steering committee is concerned, as anything intended to better the condition of labor the world over should not be allowed to interfere with establishing reciprocal trade relations with Germany by a joint resolution.

The proponents of this resolution say we can negotiate a treaty which would take care of all these things. As has been said, it is a fine thing to give a man a receipt in full and then tell him to come back some other day and settle.

Section 2 of this joint resolution attempts to repeal war-time legislation, which is such an absurdity it is useless to discuss it.

One of the greatest complaints made against the President at the time he made his second trip to Europe was that he did it without calling Congress in extra session so that many of the objectionable war-time laws might, at an early date, be repealed. You have been in session almost a year, with absolute control of both branches of Congress and not a single one of these obnoxious laws has been repealed. In fact, you have done nothing but appoint smelling committees, some 65 or 75 in number, to investigate the things every schoolboy already knows, and that is that there was untold waste, and no doubt in many instances willful and criminal waste. In doing this you are piling up another big sum of millions of dollars in making these investigations, and in all the reports that have been made there has not been a single committee that has had the courage to designate an individual or a contractor that should be prosecuted. I think there should be prosecutions in some cases, and the chairman of a committee who has not the courage to point out the guilty party or parties has failed to do his duty, and is a useless expense to the Government.

But so long as the two Houses can fritter away the time in making these investigations and reports and debate such resolutions as this one now under consideration, they will not have to pass needed legislation before time to adjourn, and the leaders can go before the people without having passed legislation of any kind that might displease.

This resolution, when messaged to the other end of the Capitol, will furnish that body something to discuss for months, as it has done the peace treaty, and thus delay all matters before them indefinitely. I receive some of the most pitiful letters from my home from Civil War veterans and Civil War widows, wanting to know when their relief can be expected. Early in January there was a bill passed this House giving this relief, and since it has been in the possession of the other branch of Congress there have been over 16,000 old veterans and widows passed to the great beyond. Four thousand three hundred and seventeen in January, 4,808 in February, 5,700 in March, and April, up to date, over 2,000; and if they take the usual time to discuss this new treaty of peace you intend sending over there by this resolution it will be unnecessary for them to pass that pension bill.

I can enumerate many other measures sleeping securely in both Houses of Congress for the relief of the people that are meeting the same fate. This is not what you promised the people in the campaign of 1918. The question is, Can you fool all the people all the time?

Peace Resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN J. BABKA,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 8, 1920.

Mr. BABKA. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this resolution because I believe that it violates the Constitution of the United States in that it is an attempt on the part of Congress to usurp a function of government delegated to the Executive authority of the land. I would remind the gentlemen who say the opposition to this resolution on constitutional grounds is an alibi that it is this Constitution that stands between our Government and anarchy. Destroy it and chaos shall set in all over the land. The surprising thing of it all to me is that those very gentlemen who are always prone to parade the Constitution every time the toiling masses dare to raise their voice for justice and fair treatment; those gentlemen who are always so thoroughly in accord on the question that every protest against repressive legislation is a blow aimed at the Constitution—the surprising thing of it all is that these same gentlemen are ready to forego and abrogate, if necessary, every provision of that same Constitution when it serves their selfish and political purposes to do so. Mr. Speaker, the question of the constitutionality of the action proposed here is not new. It has been decided often and very clearly. The advisability of giving Congress this power was debated at length in the Federal Convention, and finally the proposition was voted down by unanimous vote of the fathers. (Federal Convention, Aug. 17, 1787.) And, Mr. Speaker, there was no misconception on this question on the part of anyone present in that convention. George Washington had no doubts concerning it when it confronted him. In 1796, after the Jay treaty with England was ratified, a treaty which met with much opposition and popular discontent, the House of Representatives made a request of Washington that he furnish it with all papers and information upon which said treaty was ratified. Washington's reply, under date of March 30, 1796, is enlightening as being first-hand information from one who took part in the framing of the Constitution. He wrote:

Having been a member of the general convention and knowing the principles upon which the Constitution was formed, I have entertained but one opinion on this subject; and from the first establishment of the Government to this moment my conduct has exemplified that opinion, that the power of making treaties is exclusively vested in the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, provided two-thirds of the Senators concur.

Thereafter, on the 7th day of April, the House of Representatives passed a resolution in part as follows:

Resolved, That it being declared by the second section of the second article of the Constitution, "That the President shall have the power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur." The House of Representatives do not claim any agency in making treaties, etc.

And from that day till this no Congress has ever asserted otherwise. But the friends of this resolution say, "This is not a treaty, it is a mere declaration of a fact which no one disputes." True, if you would confine it to the first section, which is harmless, futile, and unnecessary, as everyone already recognizes the fact which it seeks to establish. This section by itself would probably meet with very little opposition, but you do not stop there. Section 3 of the resolution attempts to adjust trade relations with Germany; and it goes further than that: It adopts for us all of the benefits we were to have under the treaty of Versailles and compels Germany to say within 45 days after the passage of this resolution whether or not she accepts its provisions. And yet gentlemen are found who argue that this is not a treaty. Is this not an offer of terms which requires a subsequent action on the part of the German Government? And if so, is there anyone who will say that it is a constitutional function of Congress to initiate such a negotiation? Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this question is elementary. While it is true that one party to a dispute may declare war, yet it is also true that once this is done it requires the agreeing of the minds of both parties to that war before peace can again be said to exist between them. One party can not start a fight and withdraw from it and live at peace with its adversary without first in some contractual way adjusting the difficulties that were involved and that follow of necessity. This makes necessary negotiation between our Government and our enemies, and that function is clearly given by our Constitution to the executive department. But, Mr. Speaker, graning that Congress has the power and that peace can be brought about in this way, is this the kind of peace that America desires? Are we now to abandon our late allies and make terms with our late enemy, separate and apart from them?

Are we to abandon Belgium to this heartless brute of a nation without making, as far as human ingenuity can do so, a repetition of her outrage an impossibility? Has Belgium sacrificed herself in vain? Shall we abandon France, who came to our assistance in our infancy; France who for over a century has held back this wave of militarism, that but for her would now have the world at its feet? Have we forgotten the agonizing cry of the defenseless babes in mothers' arms that came ringing in our ears from out of the chilled grave of the Lusitania? Do gentlemen not know that this resolution makes no provision for the payment of damages for this defenseless deed? And what shall we say to those valiant youths who suffered the tortures of hell in the vermin-infested trenches of France in order that American ideals and institutions might be maintained; those gallant men who came home maimed and disfigured; those courageous boys who made the supreme sacrifice and now sleep in Flanders Field, believing that their sacrifices would make others unnecessary? What answer shall we give to them for this base surrender? Do we not owe it to them to rise above petty politics and allow the properly constituted authority of the land determine this grave question? But gentlemen say that section 2 of the resolution justifies its adoption. In fact, all of the argument made in support of it is based on this section, which repeals some of the war-time powers of the Executive, but not all. The most ardent supporters of this measure admit that Congress has no power to make treaties, but justify their position on this section and on their desire to repeal the war-time powers of the Executive. Gentlemen, I agree with you that it is high time that these powers should be repealed, but I am willing to go further than you are; I am going to vote for the motion to recommit with instructions to substitute the motion of Mr. FLOOD to repeal all war-time powers of the Executive. If you are sincere in your statement that your reason for supporting this resolution is your desire to bring to an end these autocratic powers of the Executive, vote for the motion to recommit. By doing so you will be accomplishing your purpose without setting an example of a reckless disregard of the fundamental law of the land. And, after all, your whole purpose would be served by such action. For, granting the legality of the resolution, it can not do more than repeal the war-time powers. It will not bring home a single boy from France; they are already home. It will not save the life or limb of a single American soldier. The fighting ceased on the 11th of November, 1918, and has never been resumed. Your whole intent and purpose will be served by voting for the substitute and at the same time the rights of the Government preserved. Will you do it or will you vote for the resolution, the constitutionality of which, to say the least, is questionable and whose only purpose is to deceive the people into believing that you are giving them something which all of us desire, but which you know we can not give?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JARED Y. SANDERS,

OF LOUISIANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 15, 1920,

On the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 327) terminating the state of war between the Imperial German Government and the United States.

Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I voted for the motion made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] to recommit this resolution to the committee with instructions to report same forthwith with an amendment striking out all that portion of the resolution pertaining to the making of a treaty, and further amending the resolution so as to provide for the immediate repeal of all war-time legislation.

When this motion to recommit was voted down by the majority side of the House I voted against the adoption of the resolution. No man upon this floor is more heartily in favor of restoration of peace than myself. No man is more in favor of the immediate repeal of all the war-time powers lodged in the Executive by Congress for war purposes. I know that if the resolution had been amended as our side sought to amend it it would speedily have become a law, and that all of the war-time legislation would have been repealed.

The Republican Party has been and is in control of both branches of this Congress, and every act of this House is indicated and dictated by its steering committee. They control every committee in the House and control all legislation. The responsibility is theirs for the fact that the American people are cramped in their efforts toward restoration of normal conditions by the restrictive measures made necessary by war, because it was not only within their power but it was also their duty to have brought legislation before the House repealing all war-time legislation for action many months ago, and the Democratic side would have voted solidly for such legislation.

The Democratic side of the House has had no opportunity to act on the repeal of war-time legislation until this resolution was offered, and as soon as it was and as soon as the parliamentary situation would permit our side, acting through the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD], offered the necessary amendment and voted solidly for a measure which would have repealed the war-time legislation and which would have passed the Senate and which would have received Executive sanction.

But, Mr. Speaker, this relief was not to be granted the American people. The steering committee of the Republican majority in this House had ordered otherwise.

I will not discuss at length the constitutional objection to House joint resolution 327. Everyone knows that the House has nothing to do with the declaration of peace or with treaty making. Everyone knows that that function is lodged with the President, acting by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

This resolution was conceived in partisanship and born of Republican necessity. Having so conducted themselves in another branch of Congress as to keep our country in a technical state of war, it became necessary, according to their beclouded judgment, to do something to hoodwink the people. It is unthinkable that the American people can be thus fooled. No one knows better than the authors and the proponents of this resolution its utter futility.

The people have asked for bread and they gave them a stone. The people have asked for relief from war-time legislation and they have refused to grant this relief. The people have demanded the repeal of all the war-time powers lodged in the Executive. The Republicans have refused and neglected to hearken to their demand. And then, in order to befog the issue, they have sought to pass a resolution which by its very verbiage and by the declared intention of its proponents institutes a treaty between this Government and the German Government, and they know that this power is not lodged in the House, but that, to the contrary, it is expressly lodged by the Constitution, that we are sworn to uphold, in the hands of the Executive and the Senate of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, the saddest thing to me about this whole procedure is the fact that gentlemen are willing to thus trample under foot the very mandate of the Constitution, when the danger to America to-day consists in the fact that regard for law is at a low ebb, and the sanctity of the Constitution itself seems to rest but lightly upon the conscience of some. Everyone knows that there is a secret, sinister, organized effort to-day in this land to undermine the faith of the people in the Constitution of the fathers, and that this same effort is directed toward instilling into the minds of the citizenship of America a disregard for the law of the land.

This secret, sinister, insidious propaganda by the enemies of our institutions is either the outgrowth of ignorance or criminality, but when such a sentiment is abroad in the land it is a sad thing for those who love the Constitution, for those who believe in an orderly government by law, to see the chosen representatives of a great party show such an utter disregard for the Constitution, such an utter disregard for the traditions and the institutions of our country.

It should be both your duty and your pride to stand by the provisions of our written Constitution as acted upon and lived up to by the men who have made our country great in the days gone by.

Whenever we, the representatives of the people, by vote and by act, show our contempt for and disregard of the Constitution of our land, how can we exact of others that obedience to its provisions which we ourselves disregard?

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that I will do anything within my power and under the Constitution of the United States to bring a state of settled peace to this land. But I will not do a vain and a useless thing. I will not vote for a lawless resolution which I know to be in violation of that fundamental law which I have taken an oath to uphold.

The Comer Cotton Rider to the Agricultural Appropriation Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. H. GARLAND DUPRÉ,

OF LOUISIANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 15, 1920.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, under leave to print granted me to-day, I herewith append an editorial from the New Orleans Times-Picayune of April 13, 1920, regarding the Comer cotton rider to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which is now in conference between the Senate and House.

The editorial is as follows:

[Editorial from the New Orleans Times-Picayune, Apr. 13, 1920.]

THE COMER "RIDER."

Cotton grower and cotton spinner again have clashed, and Senator COMER, himself one of the Nation's wily spinners, is attempting further to fasten upon our great crop the fetters of a "spinners' contract." Thereupon the cotton trade, representing farmer and cotton banker, cotton factor, and cotton dealer of the exchanges, are up in arms to defend their very reasonable and logical position.

Senator COMER'S assault is in the form of a "rider" to the Agricultural bill, designated as the "Comer rider," which, if adopted, will reduce the volume of tenderable cotton by many hundred thousand bales and will throw that amount of useful, spinnable cotton into the class of low grades, refused admission to the exchanges and deprived of the "hedge" protection which has such great importance in all cotton dealings.

In recent years cotton futures trading has been governed by the Lever bill, which, although to a considerable extent a measure favoring the spinner, has many good points, and has been considered, by the cotton trade generally, as perhaps the best compromise that could be reached to facilitate cotton operations on the exchanges.

To explain the point for laymen we must turn for a moment to the cotton grower and his troubles, many of them climatic, that result from year to year and from spot to spot in slight variations in the length and color and cleanliness of the staple.

Obviously standard grades had to be established and, equally with reason, there had to be a point in the downward graduation at which the cotton would be considered enough inferior to be excluded from tender on contracts. To place this point too low might have forced cotton consumers to accept—although, of course, with differentials in price—cotton unsuited to their manufaturing needs. On the other hand, if the tenderable limit was placed too high it would throw back upon the planter's hands much cotton that, in spite of minor defects of color or condition, might be perfectly sound and spinnable.

It is but natural that the precise line of demarcation between tenderable and nontenderable cotton should have been the cause of many Homeric struggles. In early days the planter had the advantage, but the Lever bill placed the tender point at low middling cotton with other definitions as to admissible stains, etc., which formed what the trade recognized to be a contract favorable to the mills.

One of the first effects of the change was, of course, to limit the total volume of tenderable cotton and thereby to render market manipulation easier. However, in view of its other desirable features, the Lever bill was accepted and has operated satisfactorily.

But along comes Senator COMER of Alabama with a measure to lift the tenderable grade to middling cotton and to place new color restrictions on allowable staple. The law would, as we have intimated, throw hundreds of thousands of bales of useful cotton on the bargain counter to be sacrificed for what it would bring, and would take from it the sales flexibility that is possessed by tenderable cotton.

Nor is that all. The planter who seeks to hold his cotton is in most cases able to do so only by borrowing against his bales from the banks. The latter, as an insurance against market slumps, dare lend only when the cotton has been hedged in the future market. Therefore the moment the planter's cotton falls below the legalized tenderable grade he can not safely carry hedges against it and consequently can not secure the desired bank loan. This, of course, is equally true in the case of all subsequent deals in the under grades, by exporters, etc., until the stuff is finally turned into goods.

By this system of grading and strengthened by the Comer "rider," the twelve or more millions of bales of an average cotton crop are reduced to a few million of tenderable staple which, as the year progresses, dwindle to a point where monthly cotton corners are possible and the "spinners' contract" becomes harmful to all save the spinners themselves, as represented by Senator COMER and his kind. Defeat of the measure therefore is imperative in the interest of the vast majority of the South's population interested in our great staple crop.

The Peace Resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MERRILL MOORES,

OF INDIANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 8, 1920.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, it was before the days of written constitutions when a wise philosopher gave utterance to the statement which has become a truism: "No thief e'er felt the halter draw with good opinion of the law." The modern knave, offended with the enforcement of a law, at once denies its constitutionality, as to-day the minority is doing with this resolution.

To be unconstitutional a pretended law must infringe some provision of a written constitution controlling the legislative body which has attempted to enact the law.

The provision here claimed to be violated is found in Article II, section 2, of the Constitution, where, in defining the power of the President, that instrument says:

He shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur.

It will be my purpose to show that this resolution, in case it shall pass, will not impair the treaty-making power.

The argument of its opponents is that because wars have usually been followed by a treaty of peace, they can not be ended in any other way. I shall not attempt to answer this contention other than by stating that all the authorities on international law, many of which have been cited by other speakers, announce that there are at least three ways of terminating wars between States, which are (1) mere cessation of hostilities on both sides without definite understanding; (2) conquest and subjugation of one of the contending parties; and (3) a treaty of peace.

It would therefore appear that a treaty being not the only method of ending war, another method can not be held to impair the treaty-making power of the President and Senate. The only question is whether the alternative method chosen is otherwise objectionable or is within the power of Congress.

Territory has commonly been annexed by treaty, and it might be contended with equal force that annexation of territory other than in the way in which Alaska, Porto Rico, or the Virgin Islands were annexed would impair the treaty-making power. Such a contention would certainly have fully as much force as the one now made by the minority.

Probably the greatest of writers on American constitutional law was Judge Thomas M. Cooley. The Forum in 1893 published an article by Judge Cooley contending with intense earnestness upon constitutional grounds that Hawaii could not be annexed to the United States. For all of Judge Cooley's argument against it, Hawaii is now a part of the United States, and the constitutionality of the annexation is questioned by no one. The history of the annexation is most interesting. An annexation treaty had been negotiated by President Harrison, which was withdrawn by President Cleveland in April, 1893. The annexation treaty was returned to the Senate for its approval by President McKinley after being signed at Washington June 16, 1897. This treaty was ratified by the Hawaiian Legislature, but the cession was accepted and confirmed on the part of the United States by a joint resolution approved July 7, 1898. (30 Stat. L., 750; 2 Supp. R. S. U. S., 895; Crandall on Treaties, p. 138.)

For this method of annexation there was really abundant precedent. April 24, 1802, an agreement was entered into with the State of Georgia for the cession to the United States of western lands. Commissioners were appointed by President Adams, under an act of Congress approved April 7, 1798; and the act of May 10, 1800, vested final powers in the commissioners. On the part of Georgia the agreement was ratified and confirmed by the Georgia Legislature June 16, 1802.

After the admission of Texas an agreement as to boundaries between the Federal Government and State was effected by an act of Congress September 9, 1850, and an act of the Texas Legislature November 25, 1850. (Richardson's Messages, V, 95.)

A more interesting case is that of the annexation of Texas. The Republic of Texas achieved its independence from Mexico in 1836. April 12, 1844, a treaty was signed at Washington with the Republic of Texas for its annexation to the Union. June 8, 1844, this treaty was rejected by the Senate by an adverse vote of 35 to 16, more than two-thirds of the Senators having voted against it. March 1, 1845, a joint resolution was approved consenting to the erection of the territory rightfully belonging to the Republic of Texas into a new State, and Texas, having accepted and complied with the conditions of the resolution, was admitted by a joint resolution approved December 29, 1845, as a State into the Union. (Crandall, Treaties, p. 135; Richardson, Messages, IV, 386.)

Does any member of the minority question the validity of the annexation of Hawaii or of Texas?

In his second annual message to the Congress President Grant, December 5, 1870, makes the following recommendation:

> During the last session of Congress a treaty for the annexation of the Republic of San Domingo to the United States failed to receive the requisite two-thirds vote of the Senate. I was thoroughly convinced then that the best interests of this country, commercially and materially, demanded its ratification. * * * In view of the importance of this question, I earnestly urge upon Congress early action expressive of its views as to the best means of acquiring San Domingo. My suggestion is that by joint resolution of the two Houses of Congress the Executive be authorized to appoint a commission to negotiate a treaty with the authorities of San Domingo for the acquisition of that island, and that an appropriation be made to defray the expenses of such a commission. The question may then be determined either by the action of the Senate upon the treaty or the joint action of the two Houses of Congress upon a resolution of annexation, as in the case of the annexation of Texas. (Richardson, Messages, VII, p. 100.)

While President Grant was not a lawyer, it must not be forgotten that his Attorney General at the time was a former justice of the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts and one of the most eminent of American lawyers, Ebenezer R. Hoar.

It is not to be forgotten that the Civil War in this country did not end in a treaty. In April, 1866, President Johnson made proclamation that the Civil War was at an end in all the rebellious States except Texas, and August, 1866, proclaimed that the rebellion was wholly suppressed. March 2, 1867, an act of Congress fixed August 20, 1866, as the termination of the war.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in United States v. Anderson (9 Wall., 56, 71) seems to recognize the authority of Congress rather than that of the President, as controlling in the matter of fixing the end of the war. It says:

> As Congress, in its legislation for the Army, has determined that the Rebellion closed on the 20th day of August, 1866, there is no reason why its declaration on this subject should not be received as settling the question wherever private rights are affected by it. That day will therefore be accepted as the day when the Rebellion was suppressed.

Trenching on the treaty-making power is the making of agreements and conventions with foreign powers with regard to international postal and money-order regulations; and the exercise of this power by the Postmaster General without the concurrence of the President and Senate has continued from the establishment of the Government until now, absolutely without question. On the other hand, it was held by the Supreme Court in Cotzhausen v. Nazro (107 U. S., 215) that a provision in the regulations of the Berne postal convention, October 9, 1874, to the effect that no article liable to customs duties should be admitted for conveyance by the post, was the law of the land, and that goods so imported were liable to seizure. The first law by which the Postmaster General was authorized to make "arrangements with the postmasters of any foreign country for the reciprocal receipt and delivery of letters and packages through the post offices" was section 26 of the general act of February 20, 1792.

Ever since the passage of the McKinley Tariff Act of October 1, 1890, the President has been making trade agreements with foreign nations, none of which were submitted to the Senate for ratification or approval, but which have simply the authorization of acts of Congress. Prior to the repeal of the McKinley Act, 10 such commercial agreements were concluded and made effective in virtue of section 3 of this act of 1890: January 31, 1891, with Brazil; June 4, 1891, with the Dominican Republic; June 16, 1891, with Spain; December 30, 1891, with Guatemala; January 30, 1892, with Germany; February 1, 1892, with Great Britain; March 11, 1892, with Nicaragua; April 29, 1892, with Salvador. None of these appear in the Official Treaties, but they were held valid by the Supreme Court in Field v. Clark (143 U. S., 649, 693); and see Buttfield v. Stranahan (192 U. S., 470, 496); and Monongahela Bridge Co. v. United States (216 U. S., 177); and were all terminated under section 71 of the tariff act of August 27, 1894, which repealed the section on which they were based.

It is interesting to note that this section of the Wilson Act, while it expressly repeals section 3 of the McKinley Act, expressly provides that—> nothing herein contained shall be held to abrogate or in any way affect such reciprocal arrangements as have been heretofore made and now exist between the United States and foreign countries, except where such provisions are inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

That the existing trade agreements were revoked was because of the acts of President Cleveland and not of the Congress.

The Supreme Court in the case cited says:

> What the President was required to do was simply in execution of the act of Congress. It was not the making of law. He was the mere agent of the lawmaking department to ascertain and declare the event upon which its expressed will was to take effect. * * * The court is of opinion that the third section of the act of October 1, 1890, is not liable to the objection that it transfers legislative and treaty-making power to the President.

Section 3 of the act of July 24, 1897, provided for the conclusion by the President of commercial agreements with countries producing certain enumerated articles in which concessions should be secured in favor of the products of the United States. On the authority of this section the President concluded and made effective commercial agreements with France, Portugal, Germany, Italy, Switzerland, Spain, Bulgaria, the Netherlands, and Great Britain. Full force and effect has been given to these trade agreements by the courts.

In sustaining the validity of these compacts between our Government and foreign nations, the Supreme Court says:

> While it may be true that this commercial agreement, made under the authority of the tariff act of 1897, section 3, was not a treaty possessing the dignity of one requiring ratification by the Senate of the United States, it was an international compact, negotiated between the representatives of two sovereign nations and made in the name of and on behalf of the contracting countries, and dealing with important commercial relations between the two countries, and was proclaimed by the President. If not technically a treaty requiring ratification, nevertheless it was a compact authorized by the Congress of the United States, negotiated and proclaimed under the authority of its President. (Altman v. United States, 224 U. S., 583, 601.)

The tariff act of 1897 authorized the President, in section 3:

> To enter into negotiations with the Governments of those countries exporting to the United States certain enumerated articles, or any of them, with a view to the arrangement of commercial agreements in which reciprocal and equivalent concessions may be secured in favor of the products and manufactures of the United States.

The Canadian reciprocity act of July 26, 1911 (937 Stat. L., 12), contains substantially the same provision, and this act was passed by a Democratic House and a Republican Senate.

The Underwood tariff act of October 3, 1913 (38 Stat. L., 192), passed by a Congress Democratic in both Houses and approved by President Wilson, contains this provision in section 4:

> The President of the United States is authorized and empowered to negotiate trade agreements with foreign nations wherein mutual concessions are made looking toward freer trade relations and further reciprocal expansion of trade and commerce.

These trade agreements are precisely analogous to the similar provisions of sections 3 and 4 of the joint resolution under consideration, and the decision in Field against Clark, as well as those in the later cases referred to, leave no doubt whatever as to the validity of the joint resolution from a constitutional standpoint.

Stress has been laid by those contending for the invalidity of the joint resolution on the statement in Story's ordinarily reliable Commentaries on the Constitution to the effect that the proposal in the Constitutional Convention to confer on the Congress the power "to make peace" in addition to that of declaring war "was unanimously rejected upon the plain ground that it more properly belonged to the treaty-making power." (Sec. 1173.)

Mr. Justice Story was a great judge and a voluminous and most learned text-writer; but he was in Boston when the convention met in Philadelphia and was less than 8 years old when the discussion of this provision was had in Philadelphia. His work quoted from was published in 1833. At the time it was written Justice Story had access to Elliott's Debates, but not to Madison's Journal, which was kept secret during his life, which ended in June, 1836, and his journal was first published in 1845. All that we know of the Constitutional Convention is found in these two books, but one of which was available for Justice Story when he wrote his commentaries. It is not to be at all wondered that he guessed at the "plain ground" on which the words "to make peace" were omitted by a unanimous vote. He guessed wrong, as the Madison Debates or Journal give evidence. Elliott's Debates, which were the only evidence he had, give no part of the argument.

The purpose of the convention is made only too plain in the debate described in Madison's Journal, from which I quote the debate on Friday, August 17, 1787:

On the clause "to make war"—

Mr. Pinckney opposed the vesting of this power in the legislature. Its proceedings were too slow. It would meet but once a year. The House of Representatives would be too numerous for such deliberations. The Senate would be the best depository, being more acquainted with foreign affairs and most capable of proper resolutions. If the States are equally represented in the Senate, so as to give no advantage to large States, the power will, notwithstanding, be safe, as the small have their all at stake in such cases, as well as the large States. It would be singular for an authority to make war and another peace.

Mr. BUTLER. The objections against the legislature lie, in a great degree, against the Senate. He was for vesting the power in the President, who will have all the requisite qualities and will not make war but when the Nation will support it.

Mr. Madison and Mr. Gerry moved to insert "declare," striking out "make" war, leaving to the Executive the power to repel sudden attacks.

Mr. Sherman thought it stood very well. The Executive should be able to repel and not to commence war. "Make" is better than to "declare," the latter narrowing the power too much.

Mr. Gerry never expected to hear in a republic a motion to empower the Executive alone to declare war.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. There is a material difference between the cases of making war and making peace. It should be more easy to get out of war than into it. War also is a simple and overt declaration; peace attended with intricate and secret negotiations.

Mr. Mason was against giving the power of war to the Executive, because not so safely to be trusted with it; or to the Senate, because not so constructed as to be entitled to it. He was for clogging rather than facilitating war, but for facilitating peace. He preferred "declare" to "make."

On motion to insert "declare" instead of "make," it was agreed to.

Mr. Pinckney's motion to strike out the whole clause was disagreed to without call of States.

Mr. Butler moved to give the legislature the power of peace, as they were to have that of war.

Mr. Gerry seconds him. Eight Senators may possibly exercise the power, if vested in that body, and 14 if all should be present, and may, consequently, give up part of the United States. The Senate are more liable to be corrupted by an enemy than the whole legislature.

On motion for adding "and peace" after "war," it was unanimously negatived.

Further light on the motives actuating the convention is thrown during the discussion, September 7, 1787, of a motion to except treaties of peace from the provision requiring ratification by the Senate, which exception was originally inserted and finally stricken out.

It will be perceived from Mr. Madison's argument that he had the amazing foresight to anticipate the election of just such an Executive as an unkindly fate was to bring to the United States at this time, incredible as the possibility must have seemed to the other Members, whose knowledge of ambition must have been limited to men of the mild type of Aaron Burr, Horatio Gates, and Charles Lee. I quote from Madison's Journal of September 7:

Mr. Madison moved to insert, after the word "treaty," the words "except treaties of peace," allowing these to be made with less difficulty than other treaties. It was agreed to nem. con.

Mr. Madison then moved to authorize a concurrence of two-thirds of the Senate to make treaties of peace, without the concurrence of the President. The President, he said, would necessarily derive so much power and importance from a state of war that he might be tempted, if authorized, to impede a treaty of peace.

Mr. Butler seconded the motion.

Mr. Gorham thought the security unnecessary, as the means of carrying on the war would not be in the hands of the President, but of the legislature.

Mr. Gouverneur Morris thought the power of the President in this case harmless; and that no peace ought to be made without the concurrence of the President, who was the general guardian of the national interests.

Mr. Butler was strenuous for the motion as a necessary security against ambition and corrupt Presidents. He mentioned the late perfidious policy of the stadtholder in Holland and the artifices of the Duke of Marlborough to prolong the war of which he had the management.

It must be remembered that the greatest book on international law ever written, Vattel on the Law of Nations, had been translated and published in English in London in 1758, and that all members of the convention were undoubtedly familiar with it.

The same power who has the right of making war, of determining on it, of declaring it, and of directing its operations has naturally that likewise of making and concluding the treaty of peace (189). These two powers are connected together, and the latter naturally follows from the former. If the ruler of the State is empowered to judge of the causes and reasons for which war is to be undertaken, of the time and circumstances proper for commencing it, of the manner in which it is to be supported and carried on, it is therefore his province also to set bounds to its progress, to point out the time when it shall be discontinued, and to conclude a peace. But this power does not necessarily include that of granting or accepting whatever conditions he pleases, with a view to peace.

A nation that has the free disposal of her domestic affairs and of the form of her government may intrust a single person, or an assembly, with the power of making peace, although she has not given them that of making war. Of this we have an instance in Sweden, where, since the death of Charles XII, the King can not declare war without the consent of the States assembled in Diet; but he may make peace in conjunction with the senate. It is less dangerous for a nation to intrust her rulers with this latter power than with the former. She may reasonably expect that they will not make peace till it suits with the interest of the State. But their passions, their own interest, their private views, too often influence their resolutions where there is question of undertaking a war. Besides, it must be a very disadvantageous peace indeed that is not preferable to war, whereas, on the other hand, to exchange peace for war is always very hazardous. (Vattel's Law of Nations, pp. 431, 432.)

It must be manifest that the purpose of the framers of the Constitution in using the language they did was to make war as difficult to make as possible and peace as easy to bring about as it could be done. The language and the intentional omissions both lead, as the debate shows, inevitably to this conclusion.

The power of Congress to make a law ending the war has been questioned in this debate. There can be no doubt of its power. Article I, section 1, of the Constitution provides:

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and a House of Representatives.

Section 8 enumerates the powers of the Congress, and among several which fully cover the power of ending a war is the power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations." This of itself is sufficient authority to end a disastrous war, despite the equally disastrous policy of a President who manifestly wishes to keep the war alive lest its cessation reduce his extraordinary war powers.

The sick man of Europe no longer dominates the Sublime Porte, and the entire civilized world hopes that his domination may be at an end forever. If the sick man of America demands the further continuance of a state of war, it is high time that a Congress with the full authority to cause the war to cease should promptly exercise its authority.

The Peace Resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ISAAC R. SHERWOOD,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 9, 1920.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, my constituents without regard to party affiliation are for peace. Some 17 months have elapsed since the armistice, and Central Europe is still in chaos and there is general unrest in the United States. This peace resolution, if adopted, will not in any material way interfere or embarrass the further consideration of the peace treaty by the Senate. I believe it is constitutional because it is not in conflict with any provision of the Constitution. There is valuable record history on this subject. During the last days of President John Tyler's administration—in 1845—when Texas was an independent State, a treaty to annex Texas to the United States was submitted to the Senate by President Tyler and rejected. Later the House and Senate, by joint resolution, declared Texas a State in the Union of States, and Texas was admitted into the Union under that joint resolution. That right was never questioned. This case, in my judgment, is on all fours with the pending peace resolution.

I agree with Lincoln that this Republic is a government of the people, by the people, and for the people. This means that the voice of the people regularly and legally expressed through the people's representatives should be the supreme law of the land. I believe the people want peace, and that there is no provision in the Constitution forbidding Congress to declare peace. Whether we are in war or peace is not a constitutional question. It is a question of fact. It seems to me absurd that Congress is forbidden by the Constitution officially to declare a universally recognized fact; a fact that has been recognized officially by Congress since the armistice of November 11, 1918.

The following is a fair speciman letter from one of my constituents—one of many of like import—on the psychology of this and many other vital questions before Congress:

TOLEDO, OHIO, April 11, 1920.

Hon. I. R. SHERWOOD,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am taking this opportunity to commend you for the position taken in the recent activities in Congress.

Your attitude on the Irish question is the only course worthy of the consideration of a true American. Your aloofness from the autocratic aspirations of others proves that you are as ready to-day to defend our constitutional policies as you were in 1861. Surely you must have a feeling of pride to be worthy of the trust imposed upon you.

The manner in which you took up the question concerning "our boys" inspired within me an admiration that will never die. The last to consent to sending them across, and yet the first to look after those who are left. This one thing alone is worthy of the greatest consideration of well-meaning men. But how lonesome you must be! How discouraging to try to convince an assembly such as you have tried. It takes one of sterling qualities coupled with the lengthy and copious experience to command the respect that you enjoy.

Another matter which, in my mind, shows the character of the man is that of Berger. Although we may not agree with his policies, surely he is entitled to a seat as representing those who by fair ballot elected him.

* * * * * * *

Employers are rapidly accepting the more democratic relation with their employees, and the day is not long before we will consider the two elements in society responsible to the third in case of a strike. Surely the public is the more important party in such a controversy as the coal strike, the impending rail strike, and many others that have recently been settled. Congress must recognize the different relations of one class to another as we advance from the agriculture age into the systematic factory age if our national traditions are to be perpetuated.

It is fortunate that this district is represented by such an able man, one who has characteristics which are difficult to duplicate. Recent elections bear me out. It is equally unfortunate that so few men are thus qualified. Little did I think when a boy listening to my worthy grandsire praise your judgment and inclinations that one day my interests would be in your care. Though at times it seems as though you have been criticized severely, remember that the majority are those whose business it is to work, and the only expression they give is with the ballot. You surely recognize this, for your actions prove that you are not afraid to do the right thing although in face of severe criticism.

When life's long race is run, when your voice is forever still, the truest briefest comment will be, "He lived to bless mankind."

Feeling that as one who has used his voice only at the ballot, that indifference is not just, and that kind words do more good before than after death, I penned these few lines. Hoping that God will give you the strength and power to continue your good work and that success crowns your efforts, I remain, Respectfully, yours, WILLIAM E. SCHUMAN.

Army Appropriation Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. KING SWOPE,
OF KENTUCKY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 16, 1920.

Mr. SWOPE. Mr. Speaker, I was unable to be present to vote for the motion to recommit the Army appropriation bill to the Committee on Military Affairs, because I was out of the city that afternoon on the invitation of a number of my constituents to make an address before the Center College alumni. I was assured before I left that the bill would be passed without a roll call, and that my vote would not be needed. However, had I been present, I would have voted for the motion to recommit, which directed the Committee on Military Affairs to report the Army appropriation bill back with the following amendment:

Provided, That no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be expended in payment of the salary of any officer of the Army of the United States who shall issue or cause to be issued any order, written or verbal, preventing social intercourse between officers and enlisted men of said Army while not on military duty, when such order was not authorized by law or general Executive order: Provided further, That this limitation shall not apply to an officer who shall have acted in obedience to the mandates of his superior.

There were certain camp commanders who gave orders which prohibited officers from attending social affairs at which enlisted men were invited, and vice versa. That was not only embarrassing to the host or hostess, but also to the officers and enlisted men. Several camp commanders issued orders which prohibited officers and enlisted men from attending the same dance, and it often occurred that relatives who were in the Army together were not allowed to have any social relations simply because some were officers and some were enlisted men.

Such orders are out of the question and were generally given by some Regular Army officer who had been in the Army so long that he had ceased to be human and had become a machine. This amendment will stop the pay of any officer who issues such an absurd order. Discipline, as everyone knows, is necessary in an army, but such silly orders as prevent any social intercourse whatever between officers and men off duty do not produce any discipline, but on the contrary create a condition that seriously threatens the morale of the whole Army. Our Army is not constructed on Prussian principles, and we do not want any Prussian practices injected into it.

America's Schools—America's Teachers.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. SCOTT FERRIS,
OF OKLAHOMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 16, 1920.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the Congress, America's scholastic population is 20,853,516; America's school-teachers number 600,000. The total amount invested in school property is $1,983,508,818. The total amount expended annually for school maintenance is $736,678,089. The average amount expended per child per annum for schooling is $36.62. The National Education Association asserts that there are 38,000 schools closing on account of inability to secure teachers; they further assert that there are 65,000 inefficient teachers in the United States.

The Bureau of Education advises that the average salary paid teachers by States is as follows:

Alabama	$345
Arizona	952
Arkansas	387
California	1,012
Colorado	749
Connecticut	745
Delaware	561
District of Columbia	1,052
Florida	382
Georgia	366
Idaho	685
Illinois	778
Indiana	587
Iowa	578
Kansas	513
Kentucky	364
Louisiana	471
Maine	443
Maryland	687
Massachusetts	858
Michigan	663
Minnesota	651
Mississippi	291
Missouri	651
Montana	670
Nebraska	562
Nevada	874
New Hampshire	548
New Jersey	911
New Mexico	500
New York	976
North Carolina	284
North Dakota	578
Ohio	744
Oklahoma	571
Oregon	702
Pennsylvania	702
Rhode Island	802
South Carolina	315
South Dakota	504
Tennessee	370
Texas	487
Utah	754
Vermont	467
Virginia	385
Washington	422
West Virginia	408
Wisconsin	521
Wyoming	578

Thus it will be observed that the average salary for the 600,000 school-teachers throughout the United States is but $635 a year. Thus it will be observed that in my own State of Oklahoma the average salary paid to teachers is $571 per annum, which is $64 per annum less than the general average throughout the country.

To me the schedule of salaries above published is totally inadequate to maintain teachers in their school work. To me such salaries can not be expected to retain the best teachers. It means a deterioration of the schools; it means inferior schools; it is a reflection upon our school system; it ought to be corrected.

A recent report issued by the National Education Association discloses that of the 600,000 school-teachers engaged in teaching

America's youth 300,000 of them have had no education beyond the eighth grade; 100,000 more of them have had less than two years' training beyond the elementary grades. Five million out of a total of twenty million of the school children are being taught by teachers who have not even proceeded beyond the eighth grade.

The State of New York furnishes information to the effect that salaries are received by different crafts as follows:

Machinists	$1,945
Inside wiremen	1,859
Bricklayers	1,716
Blacksmiths	1,697
Lathers	1,825
Plumbers	1,716
Glaziers	1,659
Machine tender (printing)	1,612
Structural ironworker	1,602
Head baker	1,300
Carpenter	1,144
Hod carrier	1,144
Average school-teacher	934

Thus it will be observed that in the great Empire State of the Union, school-teachers who are expected to train, educate, and carry America's children through the formative period, are receiving less salary than any other of the crafts or professions.

I can not think this is just—I do not think it is just—it should not be. I can not think it is for the best interests of our schools. Yea, it is not for the best interests of our country to pursue such a course.

To me America's 20,000,000 school children are America's best crop; they are the hope of the Republic; they are our children. The very genius of America throughout the ages that are gone—civilization itself—the advancement of every line and every walk of life must of necessity depend upon the education of our children.

Is the emergency so great; is the cost too great; will not the penalties and injury that will flow from such a course be more than we can stand, more than a thoughtful Nation will bear, more than the taxpayers would desire us to endure?

For me and mine I am in favor of increasing the salaries to all school-teachers throughout the length and breadth of the Republic commensurate with the services that they perform, and greater still, to be commensurate with the necessity of the hour in securing the very best teachers available and the very best talent available to train America's youth.

Value and Efficacy of the Point of Order—By Their Fruits Ye Shall Know Them—People Want Action, Not Words—Loyal 100 Per Cent Americanism, Sane Economy, and Maximum Production Are Demanded by the American People and Should Be Our Slogans.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS L. BLANTON,

OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, April 21, 1920.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely thank my colleagues for this privilege unanimously extended (p. 4622) of discussing matters of public interest.

For months during debate of practically every one of the many supply measures, as well as all other legislation seeking appropriations from the Treasury, I have made an uncompromising fight on the floor against waste and extravagance and for establishing sane economy in all of our Government business.

By ascertaining, through careful study of appropriations authorized in prior Congresses, what proposed items of appropriations in the various supply bills are unauthorized by law and by making proper points of order against same, I succeeded in having stricken from such bills in the House items aggregating millions of dollars. This leads me to mention the value and efficacy of "the point of order" in safeguarding sane legislation.

When a bill is reported by a committee my colleagues are aware of the fact that it is almost impossible for any of the other Members to amend the bill, due to the many privileges in the way of advantage enjoyed by the committee in charge of the measure. For instance, the committee controls the general debate, most of which time is consumed by members of the committee on irrelevant subjects, and when the bill is read for amendment under the five-minute rule any member of the committee is entitled to recognition over Members not on the committee, and the chairman can cut off debate almost when he wills by motion, and where the committee opposes an amendment and the issue comes to a vote, with only a handful of Members usually present, the absent Members coming in not being familiar with the controversy, almost invariably vote to sustain the committee, thus defeating amendments. And so it is likewise, when you attempt to amend by motion to recommit the bill, usually only such Members as are in favor of the bill are present at the time, and when you are able to force a roll call the absent Members who might vote for the amendment if they understood it rush in during the roll call and are informed that it is an attempt to change the committee's bill and, having no knowledge of the merit of the amendment, they naturally vote against the motion to recommit, to sustain the committee.

Let me illustrate. On March 5, 1920, the House passed the bill substantially increasing the salaries of 1,048 employees in the Patent Office, such bill providing:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 477 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 477. The salaries of the officers mentioned in the preceding section shall be as follows:

"The Commissioner of Patents, $6,000 a year.

"The First Assistant Commissioner of Patents, $5,500 a year.

"The Assistant Commissioner of Patents, $4,500 a year.

"Five examiners in chief, $5,000 a year each."

SEC. 2. That as much of section 440 of the Revised Statutes as follows the words "in the Patent Office" and refers to said office only be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Chief clerk (who shall be qualified to act as principal examiner), $4,000; 6 law examiners, at $4,000 each; examiner of classification, $4,200; 2 examiners of interference, at $3,900 each; examiner of trade-marks and designs, $3,900; first assistant examiner of trade-marks and designs, $3,000; 1 second assistant examiner of trade-marks and designs, at $2,700, and 1 at $2,500; 1 third assistant examiner of trade-marks and designs at $2,200, and 1 at $2,050; 6 fourth assistant examiners of trade-marks and designs—2 at $1,800 each, 2 at $1,650 each, and 2 at $1,500 each; examiners—47 principals, at $3,900 each; 100 first assistants—40 at $3,300 each, 30 at $3,100 each, and 30 at $2,900 each; 100 second assistants—40 at $2,700 each, 30 at $2,500 each, and 30 at $2,350 each; 100 third assistants—40 at $2,200 each, 30 at $2,050 each, and 30 at $1,925 each; 100 fourth assistants—40 at $1,800 each, 30 at $1,650 each, and 30 at $1,500 each; financial clerk, who shall give bond in such amount as the Commissioner of Patents may determine, $2,500; librarian, who shall be qualified to act as assistant examiner, $2,700; 8 chiefs of nonexamining divisions, at $2,500 each; 8 assistant chiefs of nonexamining divisions, at $2,100 each; private secretary, to be selected and appointed by the commissioner, $2,000; translator of languages, $2,400; assistant translator of languages, $2,000; clerks—22 of class 4, at $1,800 each; 33 of class 3, at $1,600 each; 100 of class 2, at $1,400 each; 125 of class 1, at $1,200 each; 100 at $1,000 each; skilled draftsmen, 1 at $1,800 and 3 at $1,600 each; 3 draftsmen, at $1,400 each; 40 copyists, at $1,100 each; 36 messengers, at $1,080 each; 13 laborers, at $1,080 each; 50 examiners' aids and 24 copy pullers, who shall be selected without regard to apportionment, $720 each; in all, $1,885,500."

As soon as the reading of said bill began the following colloquy occurred between myself and the chairman of the committee:

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I notice that the salary of the Commissioner of Patents has been raised $1,000, I believe. The First Assistant Commissioner of Patents is raised $1,000, and the five examiners in chief have had their salaries raised $1,000, or how much?

Mr. NOLAN. The Assistant Commissioner of Patents at the present time receives $3,500. By the adoption of the amendment his salary is now increased $1,500 a year. The five examiners in chief receive $3,500, and the increase for them in this bill makes an increase of $1,500 a year.

Mr. BLANTON. Then beginning with the chief clerk under the next section on down the raises have been relatively how much?

Mr. NOLAN. The chief clerk at the present time gets $3,000 and he is raised $1,000 to $4,000. The law examiners get $2,700 and they are raised to $4,000 each, or $1,250. The classification examiner receives at the present time $3,600 and he is raised to $4,200. The examiners in chief, $3,500, and are raised to $5,000. Those are the five examiners in chief provided in section 1. The interference examiner gets $2,700 and he is raised to $2,900.

Mr. BLANTON. So they approximate from $1,000 to $1,500 raise?

Mr. NOLAN. Yes. In some cases $600. I will state to the gentleman from Texas that the original bill provided more of an increase. The commissioner was placed at $7,500, the first assistant at $6,000, the assistant commissioner at $5,000, and so on down the line—chief clerk, $4,200; law examiners, $4,200; etc.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know if the chairman of this committee can give me information whether or not the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee indorses these raises?

Mr. NOLAN. I do not know.

Mr. BLANTON. The matter has not been submitted to him? Has not the steering committee had the matter presented to them?

Mr. NOLAN. Well, the Rules Committee has. I do not know if they took it up with the steering committee or not.

Mr. BLANTON. I was just wondering, Mr. Chairman, under the program of economy concerning which we hear so much daily from the majority leader, the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming, and others, how are we going to save this billion dollars that is being heralded to the country as to be saved, if we are going to raise all of these salaries? We have passed through the war and now that the war is over and we are in the days of reconstruction and economy and retrenchment, with a deficit of $3,000,000,000 staring us in the face, how are we going to meet that emergency when in this bill we raise war-time salaries now during days of peace and when we are increasing them from $1,000 to $1,500 apiece at one clatter, right out of the box?

And then later I took the floor and called attention to the motion to recommit which I would later offer, to wit:

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the amendment. I realize that it would be a waste of the time of the committee and of the few Members present—some 25 or 30 of us, who stay here and work and attend to the people's business—it would be a waste of our time to try to change any of these numerous large raises which the Committee on Patents has brought about in this bill. I was in hopes that the steering committee on the other side of the House, which has indicated its lip desire for economy, would step into the breach now before the House and have protected the people of the country against these unreasonable raises.

Now, I am in favor, if there are employees here who are not getting sufficient salary, if they earn by their industry and thrift and efficiency a raise, to give it to them. But to make a blanket raise of from $1,000 to $1,500 for a great many of these employees I think is out of all reason. I realize I would be wasting time by offering the numerous amendments here necessary to change these numerous raises, and I am not going to attempt it, but I want to put this Committee on Patents on notice, and I want to put the Appropriations Committee on notice, and I want to put the steering committee on notice, and I want to put the majority leader, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], on notice, that when this bill is finished in the Committee of the Whole, I intend to offer a motion to recommit and have all these salaries changed back to amounts at least approximating their present status. And then I hope that the steering committee will come in here and force a roll call and let the Members of Congress go on record on this question of whether they are going to stand for economy and efficiency in this Government, or whether they are going to blindly follow this committee and make a blanket raise in such large amounts for clerks and employees whether they deserve it or not. I do think that the time has come, or it is coming soon, when we are going to be put on notice. This matter I put in the RECORD a while ago contains threats of employees as to what they and their organizations are going to do to Congressmen if they do not support their demands. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MACCRATE] says it does not affect us. I wish to God it did not affect us, but if you let water run over a rock, and keep running over it, after a while it wears a groove. And they are continually coming to us with their threats and these demands.

Mr. MACCRATE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry I can not yield, because this is an important subject I am discussing, and it is more important than the interruption by the gentleman from New York.

I want to say this: They say that we are going to hear from them and their organizations in the elections and on the hustings. Our Government clerks say so. They and their affiliated associate, the American Federation of Labor, have placed the distinguished Speaker and "Uncle Joe" CANNON and myself and others on the blacklist. God knows I am glad to be on their blacklist with such men as the distinguished Speaker of this House and "Uncle Joe" CANNON, who has faithfully served his country for 44 years in this body. I want to tell you whom else you are going to hear from besides the organized clerks of this country and the organized unions of this country when election time comes; you are going to hear from the people of the country. They are going to ask you whether you voted for this economy motion of this man BLANTON, of Texas, to recommit this bill and get back to economy. They are going to ask you how you stood on some of these many economy and good-government questions that BLANTON has proposed here. They are going to pin you down as to whether or not you have stood for these things that BLANTON has proposed here in behalf of the people, or whether you have voted for these threats and demands. I am getting many letters from your districts now asking me how you stand and whether you are safe to be returned here. Of course, I answer them to the effect that you are my colleagues and that I like you, and that they will have to get your record from your votes. I am not giving you fellows away, but the people of this country are going to examine your records, as well as the organized Government clerks and the unions of this country.

And, as usual, when any attempt to economize is made, an effort to laugh it off ensues, and so on this occasion the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER] told one of his funny jokes and sought to sidetrack my efforts for economy with facetiousness, as follows:

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, this patent bill reminds me that one of the most useful inventions we have had during the last few years, particularly in case of motor cars, has been a self-starter, and when I hear the gentleman from Texas day after day in the House shouting that our economy is mere lip economy, I wish to God, as he does so often, that somebody would invent and present to him a self-stopper. [Laughter.]

And when I made the motion to recommit the bill so that it could be properly amended by reducing said unreasonable raises in salaries to amounts within reason, and which would have saved half a million dollars annually for the people of this Government, the following occurred:

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes a motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Mr. BLANTON moves to recommit this bill to the Committee on Patents, with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith with the following amendments, to wit: On page 1, line 7, strike out '$6,000' and insert '$5,500'; in line 8, strike out '$5,500' and insert '$4,800'; in line 11, strike out '$5,000' and insert '$4,000'; and on page 2, in line 1, strike out '$5,000' and insert '$4,000'; in line 7, strike out the two sums of '$4,000' and insert in lieu of each thereof '$3,500'; in line 8, strike out '$4,200' and insert '$3,700'; in line 9, strike out '$3,900' and insert '$3,300'; in line 10, strike out '$3,900' and insert $3,300'; in line 11, strike out '$3,000' and insert '$2,600'; in line 12, strike out '$2,700' and insert '$2,300'; in line 12, strike out '$2,500' and insert '$2,000'; in line 13, strike out '$2,200' and insert '$1,800'; in line 14, strike out '$2,050' and insert '$1,850'; in line 15, strike out '$1,800' and insert '$1,600'; in line 15, strike out '$1,650' and insert '$1,500'; in line 16, strike out '$1,500' and insert '$1,400'; in line 17, strike out '$3,900' and insert '$3,300'; in line 18, strike out '$3,300' and insert '$2,800'; in line 18, strike out '$3,100' and insert '$2,600'; in line 19, strike out '$2,900' and insert '$2,500'; in line 20, strike out '$2,800' and insert '$2,250'; in line 20, strike out '$2,500' and insert '$2,000'; in line 21, strike out '$2,350' and insert '$1,800'; in line 21, strike out '$2,200' and insert '$1,600'; in line 22, strike out '$2,050' and insert '$1,500'; in line 22, strike out '$1,925' and insert '$1,400'; in line 23, strike out '$1,800' and insert '$1,400'; in line 24, strike out '$1,650' and insert '$1,350'; in line 24, strike out '$1,500' and insert '$1,300'; and on page 3, in line 2, strike out '$2,700' and insert '$2,500'; in line 3, strike out '$2,500' and insert '$2,200'; in line 4, strike out '$2,100' and insert "$1,750'; in line 6, strike out '$2,400' and insert '$2,250'; in line 8, strike out '$1,800' and insert '$1,600'; in line 9, strike out '$1,600' and insert '$1,500'; in line 9, strike out '$1,400' and insert '$1,300'; in line 11, strike out '$1,100' and insert '$1,000'; in line 13, strike out '$1,100' and insert '$1,000'; in line 13, strike out 'thirty-six' and insert 'six'; and in line 14, strike out the two sums of '$1,080' and insert in lieu of each of such sums '$800.'"

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to recommit.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. It is clear that no quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 6, nays 272, not voting 149, as follows:

[Roll No. 85.]

YEAS—6.

Blanton	Jones, Tex.	Quin	Thomas
Garner	Porter

I will not embarrass my colleagues by giving the negative vote and the absentees, as I believe that the American people would have voted for said motion.

Under our present system, when so few Members stay on the floor while bills are debated and read under the five-minute rule, the foregoing illustrates how very difficult it is to amend a bill against the wishes of the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge.

And thus the value and efficacy of "the point of order" is emphasized. It is indeed a wise rule of the House that legislation in an appropriation bill is unauthorized and is subject to a point of order; that all items in an appropriation bill unauthorized by law are subject to a point of order; and that an amendment to a bill must be germane.

Yet it frequently happens that an unauthorized provision is stricken out of a bill in the House on a point of order, and then is reinserted in the bill by the Senate, whereupon Members of the House are helpless, as no point of order will again avail. Our rules in this respect should be changed. The Senate should not be permitted to place on House bills unauthorized riders which under the rules of the House were stricken from the bill by the House on points of order, and Members of the House should be permitted to make points of order against any Senate amendment that under the rules of the House is subject to a point of order when originally considered by the House. Otherwise the House is at the mercy of the Senate and helpless with respect to unauthorized riders except as they may resist same through very uncertain action of their conferees.

Let me illustrate. Shortly after our entering the war our Government employees demanded a bonus, and upon their insistent demands Congress granted them a bonus of $120 but required them to work eight hours instead of only seven hours per day. Following their threats of quitting work and leaving the Government helpless in war time, upon the insistent demands of their unions, the President vetoed the eight-hour provision and permitted them to continue to work only seven hours a day. Then, after drawing their $120 bonus, the Government employees next demanded that their bonus for the succeeding year be doubled, and, over my protest and vote, Congress again granted their demands and gave a bonus of $240 to all employees receiving salaries as high as $2,500, which embraced 240,000 Government employees and which bonus alone amounted to $57,000,000 a year. The higher salaried employees above $2,740 were paid no bonus. But even a $240 bonus did not satisfy them, for after drawing their $240 bonus their various organizations went before the subcommittee framing the last legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill and demanded that not only should their $240 bonus be again doubled, to a $480 bonus, which meant about $100,000,000 bonus to them annually, but also that the higher-salaried employees be also paid a bonus, entailing an additional $50,000,000 annually, their demand being that a bonus of $480 be paid all employees receiving salaries as high as $2,500; that a bonus of $360 be paid to all employees receiving salaries between $2,500 and $3,500; and that a bonus of $240 be paid to all employees receiving salaries between $3,500 and $4,500. But be it said to the everlasting credit and honor of the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] and his subcommittee, the threats of political defeat made by the various organizations of these employees did not prevail, and there was no change made, but the same bonus provision was placed in the bill, allowing a $240 bonus to employees with salaries not over $2,500.

Then, because their demand for a $480 bonus was denied, the numerous organizations of Government employees, numbering over 150 different locals, began to harass Congress with petitions, letters, interviews, demands, and threats. The House Office Building was simply besieged with delegations. Personal calls were made at the offices of Congressmen. Washington newspapers daily conveyed the influential news that the organizations of Government employees were cooperating with the American Federation of Labor in card indexing all Congressmen and Senators and in keeping watch over their personal habits, pleasures, and pursuits, so that if they did not respond to the employees' demands they would be defeated by direct fights being made against them in their districts. Every pressure imaginable was brought to bear upon Members to force compliance. So when that section of the bill was reached in the House, on March 3, 1920, the employees had present ready for action every Congressman whose vote for their demands they were able to influence. The gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN], who is the representative and mouthpiece on the floor for said employees' organizations and other unions, and whose several attacks against me I have borne with patience and forbearance, had prepared ready to be offered the amendment to give them their demanded $480 bonus and to give the $360 bonus to ones drawing salaries between $2,500 and $3,500, and to give the $240 bonus to ones drawing salaries between $3,500 and $4,500; and in such situation such amendment would have carried beyond doubt with so many Members absent had he been permitted to offer it and to get a vote on it. The only possible chance to keep it from passing was to keep it from being offered and to keep it from being voted upon. The only way to accomplish this was through "the point of order." The entire bonus section in the bill was subject to a point of order. With it left in the bill, however, it would be subject to germane amendments, and the proposed bonus amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN] was germane, and if offered, with the bonus section in the bill, would not itself be subject to a point of order; but with the bonus section out of the bill such Nolan amendment would not be germane and would be subject to a point of order. Hence the only way to knock out the proposed Nolan $480 bonus amendment was to have stricken from the bill the whole bonus section by a point of order.

Therefore, in order to save $50,000,000 for the people of the United States by preventing the bonus from being changed from $240 to $480, and in order to save another $50,000,000 by preventing a $360 bonus being granted to salaries up to $3,500, and a $240 bonus to salaries up to $4,500, I made the point of order against the whole bonus section, knowing that even if the Senate placed the former bonus back into the bill it would nevertheless save about $100,000,000 for the people of the United States by reason of defeating in this way the increases in the Nolan amendment. And the Chairman sustained my point of order and the whole bonus section thereby was stricken from the bill, and in this way the proposed Nolan $480 bonus amendment was defeated through a point of order.

I here insert excerpts from the RECORD of March 3, 1920, showing the making of the point of order and the sustaining of it by the chairman:

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order against this paragraph that it is new legislation, unauthorized by law, on an appropriation bill. I will state that this is the bonus section which was provided for temporarily during the war. The law providing for this bonus first of $120, then of $240, was passed merely as an emergency, to assist our employees during the war. It was understood then that when the war was over and we got back to normal conditions this should be taken off of their pay. If proper consideration——

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Just a moment. If proper consideration had been given our soldier and sailor boys who fought and served in the war, with reference to a proper bonus, I would not have made this point of order; but until we do justice to the soldier and sailor boys of this country who won the war in France, I do not think civilian employees should draw a war bonus.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that this legislation, or legislation like it, has been carried in the bill for the last three sessions of Congress. I will not contend that it is not subject to a point of order, but I had hoped that there might be some agreement or understanding here with reference to this bonus and that the point of order would not be made.

Mr. BLANTON. I think we can get some working agreement, if the gentleman will permit me to make a statement. I understand that there is to be an effort made here to increase this bonus from $240 to $480, which would be unconscionable. That is why I have raised this point of order.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know whether there is any such arrangement.

Mr. BLANTON. If I did not make this point of order at this time, it would make this paragraph subject to that amendment, and certainly the chairman does not want a $480 bonus put in this bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I suggest to the gentleman that he reserve his point of order, so as to allow the matter to be debated.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Why does not the gentleman reserve the point of order until we can arrive at some understanding?

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order? If not, the Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order. The Clerk will read.

And thus about $100,000,000 was saved for the people by preventing the proposed Nolan amendment. Of course, the Senate put back into the bill the regular $240 bonus, and it has been agreed to in conference, but the proposed $100,000,000 increases have been defeated and saved to the people, and the unreasonable $480 bonus program is killed as dead as Hector.

The American Federationist, published monthly here in Washington, is the "Official magazine of the American Federation of Labor," so stated on its cover. I have the new issue of April, 1920, before me, with its pronunciamento article "Labor's political banner unfurled," written by Samuel Gompers, wherein he discloses how certain Representatives of the people are to be defeated in the coming election. I notice on page 362 the following:

BONUS FOR PUBLIC EMPLOYEES.

For a number of years, since the war agitation was on, rather than institute an inquiry into the wages of employees of the Government, a general bonus was granted them amounting at first to $120 per year, and next to $240 per year. This year the employees' unions asked for an increase of the bonus. Representative BLANTON, of Texas, when the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was under consideration, made a point of order against the bonus, claiming that it was unauthorized by law. Thereupon the appropriation was omitted from the bill. It would have been possible to bring in a special rule making this appropriation in order, and it was understood that this would be done. However, it was not done, and Mr. BLANTON has the satisfaction of saving to the Public Treasury an outlay of about $40,000,000 by cutting the wages of public employees to that extent.

I am thankful for even small favors, but in giving me credit for saving public money this enemy organ should not have reduced the amount to $40,000,000, as the difference between the proposed $480 bonus and the $240 bonus placed in the bill by the Senate amounts alone to about $50,000,000, and the new $360 and $240 bonuses to employees drawing salaries up to $3,500 and $4,500, respectively, as proposed by the Nolan bonus program, would have amounted to about another $50,000,000, making in all about $100,000,000 saved.

The American Labor World is the only labor magazine in Greater New York officially recognized by the American Federation of Labor. On page 30, issue for March, 1920, under an article headed "Labor declares political war on all opponents," is a vicious attack upon me, from which I quote the following:

Congressman BLANTON, of Texas, is perhaps the most relentless foe of all the Representatives in Congress. Mr. Gompers claims him as labor's most coveted prey. * * * Gompers captured BLANTON'S "goat" sometime ago when the House ordered NOLAN'S scornful arraignment of the Texan retained in the RECORD, and the old premier can be pardoned if he were guilty of chuckling—

And so forth.

Congressman BLANTON is only one of the antilabor lawmakers that the American Federation of Labor will endeavor to relegate to private life, and in this particular case the campaign committee will go to any extreme within the limits of the election law to rid Congress of him—

And so forth.

And joined with the American Federation of Labor in this war against Congressmen is the organization embracing about 200,000 Government employees. Engaged in politics! Yes; certainly. Congress will not let soldiers or sailors or marines or postal employees engage in politics, but permits all of its other civilian employees to take charge of politics.

The Postal Record for April, 1920, on page 98, says:

POLITICAL ACTIVITY.

MARCH 2, 1920.

The following statement of the United States Civil Service Commission is published for the information of postmasters and postal employees:

"Prohibited political activity by an employee does not consist exclusively in direct, open, actual, personal participation in political affairs. What a classified employee is prohibited from doing independently and directly he may not do indirectly and by collusion or cooperation. Collusion is a fact always open to proof and often to be presumed from the relation of the parties and the manifest motive based on supposed or intended beneficial results to the persons involved. If a husband or wife of an employee in a competitive position engages in political activity for the benefit of such employee, the presumption of collusion is immediate and strong and casts upon the employee the burden of overcoming the assumption by affirmative proof.

"The commission is of opinion, therefore, that evasion of the rule by an employee through the activities of wife or husband will be found the easiest of all forms of collusion to discover, establish, and punish."

J. C. KOONS,
First Assistant Postmaster General.

While the Washington Times, issue of March 29, 1920, says:

EMPLOYEES RUSH TO JOIN FEDERAL UNION—SIX NEW LOCALS ADDED IN WEEK—PLAN BIG CAMPAIGN MOVE.

Stimulated by vital legislative issues before Congress concerning Government employees, and intent to exercise every influence in the coming elections, the National Federation of Federal Employees is daily adding members at a rate unprecedented in its history.

Reports received at the headquarters of the union this morning show that six new locals were added to the federation during the past six days. There is now a total of 168 locals, making it one of the big union organizations of the country.

New locals are springing up in every section of the country according to reports, and scarcely a State is not now represented in the federation.

A vigorous organization campaign is being conducted at present. Charles F. Hutchinson, a vice president of the federation, of San Francisco, arrived in Washington this morning after a flying trip across the continent in the interests of the union. He was successful in organizing many new locals, and reported that the interest everywhere was at a high pitch.

Charles L. Wiegand, president of the Baltimore local and a member of the executive council of the federation, left to-day on an organizing trip through the South and Middle West.

President Luther C. Steward has just returned from a similar trip through neighboring States.

Reports show that there is every indication that through their unions Government employees will wage a strong fight at the next election in an effort to have candidates favorable to their cause elected.

What significance has the word "union" to these 200,000 Government employees? What does it mean to them? Which union with them is paramount—their labor union or their Government Union? Does the term "union" mean to them what it meant to Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln, Roosevelt, and other immortal Americans? The Bible says that "no man can serve two masters." Hon. Herbert D. Brown, Chief of the United States Bureau of Efficiency, has advised us that we can not expect efficiency from these employees as long as they are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, as they depend upon their union card rather than efficient service for holding their positions. And because of such statement our Government employees are now trying to oust and ruin this chief of the Bureau of Efficiency.

We have forced the policemen and firemen in Washington to withdraw from the American Federation of Labor. Why does Congress hesitate to require Government employees to withdraw from unions that are so frequently in controversy with and antagonism with the one great Government Union of the United States? Are we afraid of Mr. Samuel Gompers? Are we afraid of the American Federation of Labor? Are we afraid of the 168 locals of these various Government Employees' Unions? Are we not yet alive to the danger and menace, when we are now informed by the Department of Justice that this late so-called "outlaw railway strike" was brought about through the well-known anarchist, William Z. Foster, whom Mr. Gompers not long ago placed in charge of the great steel strike?

Why, our Government employees are the "favored few" and the "pets of the Nation." They work only seven hour a day for the Government, in luxurious, comfortable buildings, under most pleasant environments, and with every luxury and convenience accessible, and many make double income by having dual employment out of Government hours with private firms and corporations. They are given 30 days' vacation on full pay each year, 30 days' additional sick leave on full pay each year upon doctor's certificate, have all 52 Sundays, all regular national holidays, half holidays every Saturday during the three summer months, and holiday on every special occasion so numerously occurring in Washington. Thousands of them own their own comfortable homes here, with rates cheaper than anywhere else in the United States on splendid water, lights, gas, tax exemption of $1,000, and tax rate of only 1½ per cent, most of the running expenses here being paid by the Government. Thousands own their own automobiles, with access to hundreds of miles of paved streets and boulevards, paid for half by the people of the United States; have access to the splendid art galleries, incomparable public libraries, museums, flower gardens, parks, swimming basins, zoological gardens, riding parks, tennis, cricket, polo, and golf grounds, all free for public amusement; and access to the finest churches, lectures, theaters, picture shows, and music to be had anywhere else in the United States. Many wear the finest sable furs in August and decollette gowns in January, and are forever dissatisfied with their incomes in this extravagant atmosphere of Washington. And now the Senate has forced on the House a measure to pension all of these civilian employees, so that they need have no apprehension or bother about saving anything up for old age. Verily, they are the "favored few, and pets of the Nation." And for our brave service men, who faced the dangers of a submarined sea and no man's land, winning a World War for civilization, we have only given, besides their $33 a month wages, a paltry bonus of $60, which was not sufficient to buy a good suit of civilian clothes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me get a little brush out of the way. Because I have insisted on a quorum remaining on the floor to attend to public business and have forced a record vote on a number of measures, a few of my Republican colleagues, momentarily out of humor because registered absent or forced to leave their offices, have attempted to make it appear that I have caused much expense to the Government in demanding roll calls. This would be true if expenses stopped when Congress adjourns. But practically all of the expense goes on while Congress is adjourned, just the same as when it is in session. We still draw our salaries. Our secretaries, clerks, and main committee and House employees still draw their salaries. We will soon be through and are fixing to adjourn June 5. Our running expenses will continue on through the recess just the same, as practically all of the employees except the pages draw annual salaries, so the time consumed in roll calls has not been nearly so much wasted as the hours of hot-air spouting.

But a few enemy newspapers would have the country believe that I am the only Congressman who forces roll calls. I do not deserve all of the credit. During January and February of this year there were exactly 53 roll calls in the House, of which 9 were forced by me, and the remaining 44 by others. Numbering the first one occurring in January as No. 1, the names of the Congressmen forcing them are as follows:

HOUSE ROLL CALLS IN JANUARY AND FEBRUARY, 1920.

No. 1, BLANTON, page 1068; No. 2, WINGO, page 1242; No. 3, Saunders, page 1284; No. 4, CARTER, page 1285; No. 5, MONDELL, page 1339; No. 6, DALLINGER, page 1343; No. 7, BLANTON, page 1465; No. 8, WALSH, page 1497; No. 9, WINGO, page 1503; No. 10, SNYDER, page 1508; No. 11, BLANTON, page 1600; No. 12, GARD and DYER, page 1671; No. 13, WALSH, page 1679; No. 14, MORGAN, page 1744; No. 15, BLANTON, page 1782; No. 16, HOWARD, page 1790; No. 17, Saunders, page 1859; No. 18, GARD, page 1888; No. 19, SMALL, page 1923; No. 20, BLANTON, page 1953; No. 21, BLANTON, page 1958; No. 22, BLANTON, page 2668; No. 23, BANKHEAD, page 2109; No. 24, BEGG, page 2199; No. 25, VARE, page 2255; No. 26, CALDWELL, page 2362; No. 27, VARE, page 2369; No. 28, WINGO, page 2508; No. 29, BLANTON, page 2670; No. 30, BAER, page 2713; No. 31, SHERWOOD, page 2794; No. 32, BLANTON, page 2815; No. 33, SNELL, page 2910; No. 34, CARTER and RUBEY, page 2911; No. 35, LEE, page 2912; No. 36, BARKLEY, page 2912; No. 37, LEE, page 2914; No. 38, HAUGEN, page 2915; No. 39, WALSH, page 2974; No. 40, WALSH, page 3013; No. 41, FREAR, page 3136; No. 42, BARKLEY, page 3315; No. 43, BARKLEY, page 3316; No. 44, GARD, page 3351; No. 45, KINCHELOE, page 3521; No. 46, CLARK of Missouri and POU, page 3526; No. 47, CLARK of Missouri, page 3527; No. 48, CALDWELL, page 3631; No. 49, CALDWELL, page 3636; No. 50, CALDWELL, page 3637; No. 51, CALDWELL, page 3645; No. 52, BYRNES, page 3647; No. 53, TINKHAM, page 3649.

Of the nine roll calls forced by me in January and February the first was final vote on the pension bill; the second was final vote on the District of Columbia appropriation bill; the third was final vote on the Post Office appropriation bill; the fourth was trying to prevent putting into the RECORD a propaganda telegram against the proposed sedition bill; the fifth was on a resolution that takes $10,000,000 annually out of the Treasury; the sixth was on final passage of said resolution; the seventh was on a rule making in order a questionable $630,000 appropriation; the eighth was on the Nolan attack against me; and the ninth was an attempt to stop certain amendments. What was there improper about forcing said nine roll calls? Many American people sincerely believe that the country would be better off if roll calls could consume half of the time of Congress and thereby prevent the passage of many wasteful and improper laws.

But, Mr. Speaker, let me get back to my main topic, the value and efficacy of the point of order. If we could only change our rules so as to prevent the Senate from reinserting in appropriation bills items that have been properly stricken therefrom by timely points of order in the House, and to prevent, also, the Rules Committee from bringing in rules making in order items so stricken out, there would be some chance of sane economy. Our posted Members know that the Republican steering committee is ruled by four Congressmen from the four big political States, and that the steering committee controls all legislation through its control of the Rules Committee and all other committees; hence legislation in this Congress is really controlled by four Members.

Evidencing the value and efficacy of the point of order, I want to call attention to a few of the many points of order made by me which were sustained by the Chair. The following were made during merely the two months of January and February of this year, to wit:

[Excerpts from p. 1589, RECORD, Jan. 15, 1920.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Page 17, line 23, after the figures '$4,700,000,' strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: 'Provided, That out of this appropriation the Postmaster General is authorized to expend not exceeding $30,000 for the transportation of foreign mails by airplanes and seaplanes.'"

* * * * * * *

Mr. BLANTON. I renew the reservation of the point of order. If we are not going to have aeroplane service in the United States, I am dead sure we will not have it outside the United States. And I make the point of order.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

When the amendment was offered to the rivers and harbors bill to authorize additional payment to contractors above their contract amounts, which might have involved thousands of dollars, I made the point of order:

[Excerpts from p. 1922, RECORD, Jan. 22, 1920.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the bill nor to the preceding section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that the amendment is not germane, and the Chair will hear the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, section 8 of the bill now under consideration amends section 10 of the act of July 18, 1918. It amends that section by providing for a limitation of six months' time in which contractors, who are sought to be relieved under that section, may file claims with the Department of War. Therefore, it seems to me that any other amendment to that section affecting contractors or their rights with the War Department is germane, and therefore in order. I could not offer an amendment to any other section of the act of July 18, 1918, because section 10 of that act is the only one sought to be amended by the present bill, but the present bill offering in its last paragraph an amendment to section 10 of the act of July 18, 1918, certainly any other amendment touching the same subject is in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, we have passed section 8 by adopting an amendment coming from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, which constitutes a new section to the bill, and would make the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky not an amendment to section 8 but to the new section adopted. Also the point of order should be sustained for the reason that the reference to a change of this law of March 2, 1919, was only in one particular, one specific item. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky has no reference to this particular matter in which section 8 amends the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] offers an amendment to add an additional section, and in this amendment he provides that certain contractors may under certain circumstances be excused from liability. It seems to the Chair that that is wholly unrelated to the subject of this bill or to the subject of any section of the bill, and as a portion of the amendment only, if not germane, is sufficient to make the whole amendment out of order. The Chair holds that the amendment is out of order and sustains the point of order.

Under the act of 1915 the salaries of secretaries in the Diplomatic Service ranged from $1,200 to $3,000. In the last appropriation bill an attempt was made by the committee to raise all of said salaries $1,000 each by a proviso amendment, which I knocked out by a point of order:

[Excerpts from p. 2012, RECORD, Jan. 24, 1920.]

"Provided, That Secretaries in the Diplomatic Service shall hereafter be graded and classified as follows: Secretaries of class 1, $4,000 per annum; secretaries of class 2, $3,625 per annum; secretaries of class 3, $3,000 per annum; secretaries of class 4, $2,500 per annum; in all, $418,375."

* * * * * * *

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, in order to save time, I make a point of order against the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. It is clearly subject to a point of order.

In thus defeating the committee's attempt to raise each of these salaries $1,000 per annum you will note with interest what the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] said concerning the purpose of putting these consular clerks in high society in Europe, as I will insert his remarks later.

First note the various committee provisions for educating 10 Americans each in China, Japan, and Turkey at Government expense, paying each salaries at the same time, which were knocked out on my points of order. I claim that the United States receives no benefit whatever from this expenditure, for as soon as they are educated, they forget their obligation to our Government, and commercialize their learning by hiring out to private corporations on big salaries.

[Excerpts from pp. 2018, 2019, 2020, and 2021, RECORD, Jan. 24, 1920.]

"For 10 student interpreters at the legation to China, who shall be citizens of the United States, and whose duty it shall be to study the Chinese language with a view to supplying interpreters to the legation and consulates in China, at $1,500 each, $15,000."

* * * * * * *

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order against the provision from line 22, on page 5, to and including line 10, on page 6, because there is no law authorizing any student interpreters.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas will state his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I rose before the gentleman from Kansas did.

Mr. LITTLE. I withdraw in favor of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that portion of the bill beginning on line 22, page 4, and ending on line 7, page 5, because there is no law authorizing any appropriation for 10 student interpreters at the legation in China, and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order on the paragraph. The Chair would ask the chairman of the committee to cite the authorization for the language in the bill.

Mr. PORTER. I do not care to reply to the point of order. I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

"For the payment of the cost of tuition of student interpreters in China, at the rate of $200 per annum, each, $2,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no law authorizing this $2,000 appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order, but I would like to be heard upon it for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, this provision in the bill is unauthorized, because there is no law for it. This matter of paying salaries to pet students, and paying all their tuition and expenses, has been carried on for years without law. I think we ought by this time to have some law before we make any further unauthorized appropriations to educate students in China, Japan, Turkey, and other foreign countries.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"For six student interpreters at the embassy to Japan, who shall be citizens of the United States, and whose duty it shall be to study the Japanese language with a view to supplying interpreters to the embassy and consulates in Japan, at $1,500 each, $9,000."

* * * * * * *

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph on the ground that there is no law authorizing student interpreters.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania or some member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs to indicate the authorization for this.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas not to make the point of order against these items. It will disorganize the whole foreign service in these countries.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman from Virginia that I have a real, bona fide, sure-enough case of economy on me that is more than lip and skin deep, regardless of what there is on the other side of the aisle, and I think the time has come to cut down these extravagant appropriations, and cut out every single employee of this Government that we can get along without.

Mr. FLOOD. I agree with the gentleman that we have to cut down on expenses.

Mr. BLANTON. And the idea of keeping men in school year after year over in China and Japan is ridiculous. By this time we ought to have educated enough interpreters to last us.

Mr. FLOOD. But the gentleman understands that they act as interpreters for a while and then go into the Consular and Diplomatic Service.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and then quit and come home and commercialize the education paid for by Uncle Sam by hiring out to private concerns.

Mr. FLOOD. Sometimes they quit and come home, but the rule has been that they have stayed there abroad faithfully for years.

Mr. BLANTON. There are plenty of interpreters to be found who are not students. We can find a well-qualified interpreter right now for any of the countries without going into the business of raising them.

Mr. FLOOD. While they are students, they also act as interpreters.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; but I would rather have an interpreter and pay him than to have 10 fellows learning how to be interpreters.

Mr. FLOOD. The gentleman would find that the result would be that the service in this part of the world will be without interpreters at the time they need them most.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; it will cripple the educational institutions in China and Japan.

Mr. FLOOD. It will cripple the ability of our embassies and legations and consulates to get interpreters when they need them.

Mr. BLANTON. We ought to practice sure-enough economy, and there is no more propitious time than now to begin.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] makes the point of order on the paragraph beginning at line 10 and ending at line 20.

* * * * * * *

The item in the appropriation bill, even though it is in the nature of legislation, unless the language is so drafted as to make it permanent law, is not permanent law; and in the view of the Chair the language called to his attention is in that class, although the item has been carried in the various appropriation bills from year to year, still, if any point had been made at any time, it would have been subject to a point of order. And this relating to Japan is clearly legislation on an appropriation bill for which no authorization has been shown, and the Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"For the payment of the cost of tuition of student interpreters at the embassy to Japan, at the rate of $200 per annum each, $1,200."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no law authorizing the provision.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. PORTER. No; I do not desire to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

"For 10 student interpreters at the embassy to Turkey, who shall be citizens of the United States, and whose duty it shall be to study the language of Turkey and any other language that may be necessary to qualify them for service as interpreters to the embassy and consulates in Turkey, at $1,500 each, $15,000.

* * * * * * *

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no law authorizing this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"For the payment of the cost of tuition of student interpreters at the embassy to Turkey, at the rate of $200 per annum each, $2,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against this paragraph, there being no law authorizing it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

* * * * * * *

The Clerk read as follows:

"QUARTERS FOR STUDENT INTERPRETERS AT EMBASSIES.

"For rent of quarters for the student interpreters attached to the embassy to Japan, $600."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the paragraph, there being no law to authorize it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

"For rent of quarters for the student interpreters attached to the embassy to Turkey, $600."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph, there being no law for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

And in this connection, Mr. Speaker, let me again call the attention of my colleagues to the havoc played by resolutions always forthcoming from the hip pocket of the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], the chairman of the Committee on Rules, whereby the standing rules of the House and any action taken by the House may be changed overnight to meet the ideas and desires of the four men in control of the Republican steering committee. And I want this distinguished chairman to remember the admonition I gave him, to wit:

Mr. BLANTON. I just want to put the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], chairman of the Rules Committee, on notice with respect to all the other appropriation supply bills they are to bring in here. He would better get rules making all unlawful matters in order and keep the rules in his hip pocket, because I am going to make points of order against every single unlawful provision that appears in any and all of these appropriation bills.

Also note the following excerpt from my speech on page 2065 of the RECORD:

The gentleman from Wyoming is so used to telling his colleagues on his side of the House what he wants done and what should be done, and having them do it without any question, that he imagines that everybody else on the other side of the House is so controlled. Now, the amounts that were cut out of this bill on points of order were the following: On page 3, the sum of $134,000; on page 4, the sum of $438,000; on page 5, the sum of $15,000, and the sums of $2,000, $9,000, and $1,200; and on page 6, $15,000 and $2,000. They are the items. One of these points of order was made by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] and all of the other points of order were made by me, and by same over $630,000 was temporarily saved to the people of the United States.

I want to submit to my friend from Wyoming, the distinguished leader of the majority, that true economy is more than lip deep; it is more than skin deep. If he wants to save these sums, what must be done? What are these sums of money for? Why, to pay so-called student interpreters, 10 of them to China, a salary of $1,500 a year each, for what? To learn how to go to school over there and learn the Chinese language. Not only that, but $200 apiece is appropriated to pay for their tuition. Not only that, but $600 a year is appropriated for their quarters. And so it is with respect to Turkey. Ten students are paid $1,500 a year each and $200 for tuition and $600 for quarters. And so it is with Japan. Those students are paid $1,500 a year each to go to school. You pay them to go to school over there, and pay for their quarters $600, and pay for their tuition $200 each; and these are the sums of money that are taken out of the people's Treasury in this crucial time. With a deficit of $3,000,000,000 staring us in the face, you are paying fellows to go to school in China and Japan and Turkey, and after you educate them over there they will come right back to the United States and commercialize the education we have paid for, and we will get no service whatever from them. There is absolutely nothing that binds them to the service. There is absolutely nothing that guarantees to the United States of America one single dollar of value for the money expended. I want to say that the so-called economy on the majority side of the House is lip deep only.

Also note the following excerpts from the speech of our distinguished Democratic leader [Mr. KITCHIN] on page 2070:

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I know that there are three economists in this House; one the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], and one the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], and myself. [Laughter.] I want to suggest to the gentleman from Wyoming that here is one of the items where he can help me and Mr. BLANTON save some money to the Government. I am really opposed to these increased salaries for the secretaries, and I am sincere in it——

Mr. GOOD. Mostly [laughter]——

Mr. KITCHIN. And am opposed to this amendment. * * *

So that, gentlemen, this increase now at this late date is not to enable the salaries of these secretaries to keep pace with the high cost of living.

The only reason in the world which the Secretary of State gives is to enable these secretaries of the ambassadors to go into good society, into "tango" and "kow-tow" society. [Laughter.] He says here in the report:

"As the lieutenants of the ambassadors and ministers, the secretaries must be able to mingle with all classes of people and associate upon a plane of equality with the members of the highest social and official circles of the capitals in which they are located."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Is not that caused by the fact that the social standard was set so high by the members of the peace commission and the social dignitaries that went to Paris? [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. That is possible; it is very possible that the committee has anticipated that, and taken care of it. But Mr. Lansing does not ask for it, except to permit these secretaries to meet and mingle socially with the kings and queens and monarchs, the princes and princesses, and the lords and ladies of Europe and have them tango and kow-tow around with royalty; not to perform their duties in the office. [Laughter.] It may be that that is where the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] gets the idea in his head, which he expressed on Saturday, that the American ambassadors are really figureheads; that they do not do anything except do the society act, and the secretaries have been doing the work. Now, the Secretary of State wants the secretaries to do the "society act" and let the ambassadors do the work. [Laughter.]

And note the extravagance of appropriating $438,000 for additional foreign clerks:

The Clerk read as follows:

"CLERKS AT EMBASSIES AND LEGATIONS.

"For the employment of necessary clerks at the embassies and legations, who, whenever hereafter appointed, shall be citizens of the United States, $438,000; and so far as practicable shall be appointed under civil service rules and regulations."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to keep the RECORD straight as we go along. This item of $438,000 was eliminated from the bill last Saturday on a point of order, sustained by a Chairman from the majority side of this House, who held that there was absolutely no law whatever authorizing the appropriation; that the proposal of the committee to take $438,000 out of the Treasury was a proposal not authorized by law. It was against the law of the land, and wholly unauthorized. The Republican chairman of the committee, on a Democratic point of order, held that this $438,000 was unauthorized, and it went out of the bill. Now the committee, under this steam-roller gag rule, has brought it back and put it into the bill. And this $438,000 of the people's money will be spent and wasted.

Let me get into the RECORD where it leads us. Under the amendment recently offered by the chairman and adopted by a few Members here—about thirty-odd to 19, it has already provided for secretaries at $4,000 per annum, assistant secretaries at $3,625 per annum, second assistant secretaries at $3,000 per annum, third assistant secretaries at $2,500 per annum, making a total appropriation of $418,375; and in addition to all these secretaries, assistant secretaries, and second and third assistant secretaries amounting to $418,375, the committee comes in now and wants to appropriate this sum of $438,000 for extra clerks for the various embassies in foreign countries. Can you, under such circumstances as this, with this kind of a record facing you, put down in black and white, from which you can not escape, can you go to your constituencies on the hustings in the next few months and tell them that you tried to economize and save money for the Government of the United States? Will they not laugh at you when you make such a claim as that? You will have a devilish hard time in making them believe it.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Our constituencies are not from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, well, so far as the constituencies are concerned, ours in Texas can see right through any camouflage. The people of Texas can look through the camouflage of the facts in any case; and when you employ a big bunch of secretaries at $4,000, assistant secretaries at $3,625, second assistant secretaries at $3,000, and third assistant secretaries at $2,500, and so on down, making a total of $418,375, you can not make them believe that it is necessary to appropriate an additional sum of $438,000 annually for additional clerks.

Now, I am not going to take up any more time, because I can not change the action of the committee, operating under Republican bullwhip, steam-roller rule, but I leave the question right there, having gotten the RECORD straight.

[Excerpts from pp. 2258 and 2259, RECORD, Jan. 30, 1920.]

The Clerk read as follows:

"FOREIGN INTERCOURSE.

"For the salary of an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Finland, at the rate of $10,000 per annum from February 1 to June 30, 1920, inclusive, $4,166.66."

* * * * * * *

Mr. BLANTON. Suppose this anarchistic, bolshevistic, soviet Government of Russia should divide the country up into various republics containing not over 3,500,000 people, like Finland is, would the gentleman insist that an emergency arose whereby we should provide a minister for each one of those republics?

Mr. GOOD. That would depend upon whether we recognized the soviet governments and accepted their ministers. If we did, we would be almost compelled under the laws of civilized nations to send a minister there. That is international law and the rule of comity between nations requires it, and I do not think we should abrogate it.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman from Iowa think it will behoove us to keep as far as possible from the Lenin and Trotski powers now controlling Russia?

Mr. GOOD. I do not think that has anything to do with this matter.

* * * * * * *

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not germane to this bill or any item in it; that it is not authorized by law and is not a deficiency.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order on the ground alone that it is not authorized by law.

[Excerpt from p. 2262, RECORD.]

The Clerk read as follows:

"For purchase of labor-saving machines and supplies for same, including the purchase and exchange of registering accountants, numbering machines, and other machines of a similar character, including time stamps for stamping date of receipt of official mail and telegrams, and repairs thereto, and purchase of supplies for photographic copying machines, $7,500."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order is reserved.

Mr. BLANTON. This paragraph partly provides for the purchase of labor-saving machines. I want to ask the chairman if he is aware of the fact that in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing we have labor-saving machines not in use, which have been bought with the money of the people at great expense to this Government, and which if used would save labor to a substantial extent, and which can not be used because of the one fact that the labor unions in charge of that department will not permit this Government to use them? It is a case of the servants being more powerful than the master. Does the chairman know anything about that?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know to what extent that abuse exists.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentleman ever heard of it?

Mr. GOOD. I have heard something of it.

Mr. BLANTON. If it exists, is it not time for this Government to teach these employees that they can not run this Government?

[Excerpts from p. 2271, RECORD.]

The Clerk read as follows:

"Relief of contractors: Toward the amount necessary for the payment of claims of contractors, etc., arising under the act entitled 'An act for the relief of contractors and subcontractors for the post offices and other buildings and work under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and for other purposes,' approved August 25, 1919, $500,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make partial payments of any claim payable under said act, and to make payment of any and all loss and expense (exclusive of profits) incurred by a contractor or subcontractor in fulfilling his contract or subcontract with the Treasury Department in excess of the amount which such contractor or subcontractor may receive under the terms of his contract or subcontract if such loss and expense were, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, due to war conditions."

* * * * * * *

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I will make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that it is not a deficiency, and is not authorized by law.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman confine his point of order to the provisos? The other part is clearly not subject to a point of order. The proviso is subject to a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, the whole paragraph is subject to a point of order if a part of it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. GOOD. I concede that it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order on the entire paragraph.

[Excerpts from p. 2306, RECORD, Jan. 31, 1920.]

The Clerk read as follows:

"The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to pay, out of the unexpended balance of the sum of $1,000,000 appropriated by the joint resolution of October 1, 1918, to aid in combating 'Spanish' influenza and other communicable diseases, the bills of the proprietors of certain newspapers published in Chicago, Ill. for the publication of a notice giving warning against influenza on October 3, 1918, as follows: The Chicago Tribune, $600; the Evening Post, $366; the Daily Journal, $366; the Herald-Examiner, $448; the Evening American, $504; the Daily News, $610; in all, $2,894."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas reserves a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. About October 1, 1918, the Public Health Service prepared a notice in the shape of a warning to the American people concerning Spanish influenza. This notice was published almost universally by the daily press all over the country. But I notice from this paragraph of the deficiency bill that certain newspapers in the city of Chicago make a charge against the Government for giving their patrons the benefit of this warning, the same warning which the patrons of every other newspaper in the United States had as a matter of news beneficial to them.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment. For instance, the Chicago Tribune, for giving its patrons the benefit of the warning, attempts to charge the United States Government $600. The Evening Post, for giving its patrons the benefit of that warning which would accrue to their help and assistance, attempts to charge the Government $366. The Daily Journal attempts to charge the United States Government $366. The Herald-Examiner attempts to charge the Government $448. The Evening American attempts to charge $504, and the Daily News $610.

* * * * * * *

Mr. GOOD. I think practically the whole expenditure was a waste of money.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; a waste of money. That is what it is, and we ought to stop it. I will make the point of order against it——

Mr. GOOD. Wait one moment——

Mr. BLANTON. On the ground that it is not authorized in the law, is new legislation, and that it is not germane to the bill.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order. It is so clearly a waste of public money that I do not think we should take up time with it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas withhold his reservation of the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I withhold it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does not the gentleman believe that his criticism should be directed even more harshly against the department for having paid certain of these bills than against the newspapers that are trying now to get what the other newspapers have already received?

Mr. BLANTON. I took it for granted that my distinguished friend could understand the criticism, apparently veiled to him, which I was making, that these departments ought to be stopped from wasting the public money in any such manner, and that when the newspapers of the country have news items for their patrons they ought not to charge the Government for it.

Mr. LITTLE. Did I understand the gentleman from Texas to say "veiled criticism"? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. It was not veiled to anybody except to my friend over there.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If that was a veiled criticism, what would a real criticism be?

Mr. BLANTON. It might have been a little of both.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. I want to say to the gentleman that while I was in Chicago a few days ago I heard a great deal of discussion in regard to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. There seemed to be a good deal of sentiment that the two most prominently mentioned Democrats of the Nation were the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. Bryan, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I do not want the gentleman to couple my name with that of Mr. Bryan. [Laughter.] I do not want to be coupled with anything that is not very much alive otherwise, as well as politically.

Mr. GOOD. I am simply telling the gentleman what the Democracy of the Middle West are talking about in this regard, and I hope the gentleman will not destroy his reputation in the country and in the Middle West by criticizing too strongly the inefficiency of the present administration in the executive departments, because I realize that the gentleman has a great future.

Mr. BLANTON. In answer to the gentleman I will say that I notice a discussion of myself in to-day's Washington Times. The person in charge of that newspaper, who the Attorney General of the United States and the United States Senate a short time ago proved conclusively was a common, subsidized pimp of German brewers during the war, tries to make out that I have been wasting the time of this House because from time to time I have forced a quorum to attend to business. I have to bear criticism from such a source as that. If the fellow who is running that paper only knew it, my people in my country believe honestly and sincerely that if I could adjourn this Congress for half of the days of the year, so that it would be in session only half of the time, I would be doing a service to the American people, because the longer we sit here the more money we waste and expend and appropriate, and the biggest fool laws that an intelligent person ever dreamed of we pass and permit to go on the statute books, and my people know I am rendering a service every time I force a quorum, even though sometimes I thereby force this House to adjourn. So much for what is reported through the country. No sheet like the Washington Times can hurt me here or elsewhere. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa contend that this is not subject to the point of order?

Mr. GOOD. The item is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

[Excerpts from p. 2312, RECORD.]

The Clerk read as follows:

"Amendment offered by Mr. GOOD: Page 15, after line 4, insert:

"'ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE.

"'The Secretary of War shall reallot the appropriation of $4,000,000 for temporary employees in the War Department in such manner as will provide an allotment of $500,000 for the office of The Adjutant General in addition to the allotments already made for that office for the current fiscal year for work in connection with records of the demobilized army.'"

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. GOOD. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will not permit us to find out something about this, I will make the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Well, make it, then.

Mr. BLANTON. It is unauthorized by law, is not a deficiency, and is not germane to the bill.

Mr. GOOD. I ask for a ruling.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to discuss it.

Mr. GOOD. We have already discussed it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order against the amendment. Will the gentleman from Iowa cite the Chair to any law authorizing this appropriation?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard a moment on the point of order. In the first place, the chairman of the committee admits that the amendment is subject to a point of order. In the second place, there is no law authorizing the Secretary of War, after an allotment has been made, to reallot the various sums among the various departments. In the third place, as a matter of fact, there are employed in the War Department to-day so many clerks that every morning the heads of the departments have to tell them to make five minutes' work last all day in order that they may apparently have something to do. Because of that fact, unless I can ask a question, I shall insist on the point of order. It is not authorized by law, it is not a deficiency, and it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas states numerous grounds for his point of order against the paragraph in question, but to the mind of the Chair he does not make the point of order that is apparent on the face of the amendment, unless by saying that it is not authorized by law he means that it introduces new legislation.

Mr. BLANTON. If it is unauthorized by law, it is certainly new legislation. If the Chair did not understand that, I make that point now.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not necessarily follow, but if that is what the gentleman means, the Chair sustains the point of order on that ground.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: Page 15, after line 4, insert:

"'So much of the appropriation of $3,500,000 not necessary for the care and custody of the draft records and for the employment of clerical assistance for the purpose of furnishing to adjutants general of States statements of service of soldiers who served in the war with Germany shall be available for the employment of the clerical assistance necessary for the purpose of furnishing such information from the records of the demobilized army as may be properly furnished to public officials, former soldiers, and other persons entitled to receive it.'"

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment that it is not germane, that it is new legislation, and that it is unauthorized by law.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Has the gentleman from Texas now included all the points of order that he expects to make on this amendment?

Mr. BLANTON. If they are not sufficient, I expect to make some more if necessary. [Laughter.]

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. It seems to the Chair that the entire purpose of the amendment is to authorize the Secretary of War to do something which, without the amendment, he has not authority to do. If such is the effect of the proposed amendment, it is in contravention of the rule. The Chair sustains the point of order.

[Excerpts from pp. 2313 and 2314, RECORD.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Amendment offered by Mr. BANKHEAD: Page 15, after line 4, add the following: 'For additional clerical assistance in the office of The Adjutant General, $674,000.'"

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is new legislation, it is not authorized by law, and not germane to the bill.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. A member of the committee on the floor, in the view of the Chair, would have no greater privilege in this regard than any other Member of the House. The committee in reporting out a bill, however, could bring in many propositions that might not be in order if presented by a Member on the floor of the House.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then, according to that interpretation, no item except that which is specifically brought in in the bill, under the head of the War Department, would be germane?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not accept the interpretation of the gentleman, but does hold that an item which introduces a new subject would not be in order if presented by a Member from the floor. Believing the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama to be one that would introduce a subject different from that under consideration, the Chair sustains the point of order.

[Excerpts from p. 2320, RECORD.]

The Clerk read as follows:

"MISCELLANEOUS.

"For one-half cost of purchasing the bridge across the Missouri River at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., $17,500, etc."

* * * * * * *

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is new legislation and is not a deficiency and is unauthorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Texas make the point of order against the item. It is clearly legislation. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Amendment offered by Mr. ANTHONY: Page 16, line 5, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"'For bridge across the Missouri River connecting the two tracts of land composing the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., $35,000.'"

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is new legislation, is not authorized by law, and is not germane to the bill or to the preceding paragraph or to any paragraph.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unwilling by his ruling to hold that the action of the War Department in taking over a bridge, whatever that may mean, thereby placed this committee in a position to appropriate money on a deficiency bill to pay for it in face of a point of order. With such authority as has been laid before the Chairman and such as he is able to find, he is unable to hold the amendment in order. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

[Excerpts from pp. 2320 and 2321, RECORD.]

The Clerk read as follows:

"ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.

"The Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, is authorized to expend from the unexpended balance of appropriations heretofore made under the title 'Armament of fortifications' for the construction of storage facilities, including necessary appurtenances, for ammunition and components thereof for cannon, small arms, machine guns, and trench warfare, and for other ordnance matériel, not exceeding $6,600,000, which amount shall remain available during the fiscal year 1921: Provided, That the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, is hereby authorized to expend such part, not exceeding $95,000, of the amount herein authorized as may be necessary for the purchase of land in the vicinity of Ogden, Utah, to be used as a site for an ammunition storage depot: Provided further, That the construction work hereunder shall be done by contract, let to the lowest responsible bidder, and no bid shall be accepted for any building to cost in excess of $2.45 per square foot for an unlined building or $2.90 for a lined building."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. I want to ask the chairman a question. Why should Congress in a deficiency bill provide an appropriation of $6,600,000 that could be made available through the year 1921? Has not Congress through its more appropriate committee during the year 1921 plenty of time to make this provision if it becomes necessary?

Mr. GOOD. If this item is carried and the appropriation made, it will be necessary to carry on the work largely in 1921, and the only reason it was undertaken here was because of the very urgent request of the War Department, especially the Ordnance Bureau, that its storage ammunition magazines should be constructed so as to remove the ammunition now on hand to places where, if there should be an explosion, it would not cause the loss of life and property that it will cause if left where it is now stored and there is an explosion.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman think it a wise idea for Congress in a law to fix a maximum limit of $2.45 per square foot for an unlined building and $2.90 per square foot for a lined building, when the gentleman knows that whenever we fix the maximum amount that may be spent, that immediately becomes the amount that is spent?

Mr. GOOD. I think that is true; but I think when the gentleman learns just what the facts are he will see the wisdom of doing that very thing. As I recall, the amount estimated for the unlined building was $4.50 a square foot. They said that is what it would cost. We went into the question to ascertain what magazines of this kind which were built during the war cost under the cost-plus system. We found that during the war similar magazines were built under the expensive cost-plus system at an average cost of $2.45 for unlined buildings and $2.90 for lined buildings.

Now, they say that to get these buildings it will be necessary to pay a great deal in excess of this; and it was the opinion of the committee that if these magazines were to be constructed now certainly they should not be constructed at a cost in excess of the maximum cost under the cost-plus system, and that is why we put on the limitation; and by putting on the limitation we reduced the appropriation by $1,600,000.

Mr. BLANTON. But suppose in the year 1921 the Republican steering committee of the House and the Republicans of the Senate cease to spend all of their time on bills regulating the height of buildings in Washington and begin to consider the height of the cost of living, and are possibly able to reduce the price per square foot below $2.45 for an unlined building and below the price of $2.90 for a lined building, then would the gentleman want us to get the benefit of that and not want us to have to pay that; because we are going to have to pay the very price we put into this law as a maximum, and the gentleman knows that?

Mr. GOOD. Having suggested to the gentleman that in some parts of the country he was a close second to Mr. Bryan for the Democratic nomination for the Presidency, I did not know he was going to come right back and concede the Republicans would have the control both of the House and Senate in 1921. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BLANTON. It will be the greatest calamity that ever happened to the American people. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is new legislation, is unauthorized by law, and not a deficiency.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

[Excerpts from pp. 2403–2404, RECORD, Feb. 3, 1920.]

The Clerk read as follows:

"SECOND INDUSTRIAL CONFERENCE.

"For salaries and expenses of the second industrial conference, etc., * * * $12,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order to call the attention of the chairman to the fact that in the preceding paragraph we have appropriated $9,100 and more, part of which the provision says is to pay the Pan American Union for the use of this building down here during that first conference. Now, that building is maintained here in the city of Washington partly at the expense of the people of this Government. I understood that conference was called in the interests of the other people who are interested in the Pan American Building, the same as the people of the United States, and why we should be called upon to pay out $9,100 for the use of that building a few days in the interests of the people of the countries involved, I can not see. Now, we are asked to pay out $12,000 more.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman from Texas will yield, there is no rent paid for the use of that building. That language is submitted in the estimate, but it is for the heating and the expense of lighting the building during the conference.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman think he ought to draw the bills that he brings in here in such words that they will mean what they say, so as not to mislead us?

Mr. GOOD. This was the estimate made by the Department of Labor, and they have the entire charge of the expenditure of these funds. We went into the matter in the hearing, and it was made very clear that this money was not for the use of the building. The very question that the gentleman has raised here was raised there, and it was explained that not a penny of this was for the use of the building. It was just for the heat and light.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I applauded every word said by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and I think I was the only man in the House who did applaud him. I want to make my applause good, because my economy is more than lip economy, and I make the point of order against this paragraph that it is not authorized by law, is not a deficiency, and that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order against the first paragraph on page 36. Can the gentleman from Iowa cite the Chair to any authorization of law?

Mr. GOOD. There is no authority of law for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas.

And, Mr. Speaker, I want to remind our colleagues of the hard fight that was necessary to prevent the adding of $9,000,000 to keep a lot of useless, idle fellows on the pay roll in navy yards, and in this connection I call your attention to the following:

[Excerpts from p. 2371, RECORD.]

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, certain gentlemen who are interested in the spending of millions of money in navy yards at Philadelphia and elsewhere last Saturday proposed an amendment to spend $9,000,000 to keep a bunch of idle fellows on the pay roll. And then they ran off home to enjoy a few days in the metropolis cities of the northeast section, and have not yet returned, but want us to wait on them by holding up this legislation. The chairman says that he is against these $9,000,000 amendments. May I ask the chairman——

Mr. MASON. The regular order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BLANTON. We can certainly save time by getting a little information, but if the gentleman wants the agreement which the chairman says he made with his colleagues to permit them to run home and stay three or four days—if he wants that agreement to be carried out—he had better not push us with the regular order.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that there need be no misunderstanding. There were quite a number of gentlemen around when the agreement was made, Members on both sides——

Mr. BLANTON. I want to get some information. Is the chairman actively against this amendment or only passively against it? Much depends upon this point.

Mr. GOOD. I am quite actively against it.

Mr. BLANTON. And is the gentleman from Wyoming against it?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know.

Mr. BLANTON. It depends on what the Republican leaders' program is, whether the $9,000,000 is going to be spent, and for the present I object until I get the information.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from Texas will not object. We are not to blame because some one calls for the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman from Illinois against the amendment?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am; very strongly.

Mr. BLANTON. If he is against it and the chairman, the gentleman from Iowa, is actively against it, we have a fighting chance.

Mr. GOOD. I am against it; and I will say to the gentleman that we have a fighting chance.

[Excerpts from pp. 2479–2480, RECORD, Feb. 4, 1920.]

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

"On page 20, after line 2, insert the following:

"'Maintenance, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts: For fuel; the removal and transportation of ashes and garbage from ships of war, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, $1,050,000. The limitation on expenditures from the appropriation "Maintenance, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, fiscal year 1920," for pay of classified employees is increased by the sum of $800,000.'"

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the bill, it is not germane to the subject immediately preceding; that it is new legislation; that it is not a deficiency, and is not authorized by law.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

* * * * * * *

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] correctly estimates the situation by devoting his time entirely to the consideration of the question of germaneness, because the Chair considers that to be the only question of consequence raised by the multitude of grounds offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] as a basis for his point of order.

* * * * * * *

The Chair believes that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts would introduce, under color of an amendment, a subject different from that under consideration, and is therefore in contravention of the rule. Upon this ground the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

"On page 20, after line 2, insert the following:

"'Bureau of Construction and Repair: For preservation and completion of vessels on stocks and in ordinary, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, $3,250,000.'"

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I have a fourth amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

"On page 20, after line 2, insert the following:

"'BUREAU OF STEAM ENGINEERING.

"'Engineering: For repairs, preservation, and renewal of machinery, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, $2,500,000.'"

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order, as heretofore indicated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

[Excerpts from pp. 2615–2616, RECORD, Feb. 7, 1920.]

The Clerk read as follows:

"For the investigation, etc. * * * Provided also, That $147,200 shall be set aside for the location of and destruction of the barberry bushes and other vegetation from which such rust spores originate."

* * * * * * *

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, to save time I am going to make the point of order, if the gentleman from Illinois does not. I make the point of order on the second proviso on page 25, lines 13, 14, and 15, beginning with "Provided also." It is new legislation and is unauthorized by law.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] makes the point of order against the proviso beginning with the word "Provided," in line 12, page 25, and ending with the word "originate," in line 15. This is a proviso that apportions a certain sum out of the total appropriation made for investigation and improvement of cereals and methods of cereal production and the study of cereal diseases, and so forth, for the purpose of locating and destroying barberry bushes and other vegetation. In the view of the Chair the organic law establishing the Department of Agriculture, to acquire and diffuse among the people useful information on subjects connected with agriculture in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word, and to procure, propagate, and distribute among the people new and valuable seeds and plants, and the further provision authorizing the employment of scientists, chemists, botanists, entomologists, and so forth, and fixing the annual salaries thereof, would not authorize the setting aside of a specific sum out of any appropriation for the purpose of locating and destroying bushes or other vegetation and paying for the same. It seems to the Chair that in order that that might properly be included in the general agricultural bill, and in order that public funds might be utilized for that purpose, it would require a specific authority of law or some definite authorization in the general authority under which the department is established, that act being referred to as the organic act. The Chair is unable to find in the organic act or in the reference of the gentleman from Iowa any such authorization, and therefore sustains the point of order.

[Excerpts from pp. 2616 and 2656, RECORD.]

The Clerk read as follows:

"For the investigation, etc. * * * Provided, That of this amount the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to expend $27,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purchase of lands occupied by the department's experiment vineyards near Fresno and Oakville, Calif., now maintained under contracts with the owners: And provided further, That the land purchased for the Fresno vineyard shall not exceed 20 acres, at a cost not to exceed $12,000, and for the Oakville vineyard not to exceed 20 acres, at a cost not to exceed $15,000."

* * * * * * *

Mr. BLANTON. If the regular order is insisted on, which would prevent our colleague from California [Mr. LEA] being heard on the merits, it forces me to make the point of order, or waive it, and I make the point of order to the two provisos on page 27, in the paragraph which begins with line 9, providing for using $27,000 to purchase land in California. It is new legislation, unauthorized by law, and it is a bad policy for this Government to indulge in.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

[Excerpts from p. 2777, RECORD, Feb. 11, 1920.]

The Clerk read as follows:

"For the construction and maintenance of roads, trails, bridges, fire lanes, telephone lines, cabins, fences, and other improvements necessary for the proper and economical administration, protection, and development of the national forests, $400,000," etc.

* * * * * * *

Mr. BLANTON. I make a point of order against the paragraph, that part of it is new legislation unauthorized by law.

Mr. HAUGEN. The word "hereafter" is new legislation. The object is to make it permanent law, so that it will be unnecessary to carry the paragraph in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order to the paragraph.

[Excerpts from p. 2806, RECORD, Feb. 12, 1920.]

The Clerk read as follows:

"Amendment offered by Mr. RUBEY: Page 58, after line 17, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"'To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the establishment of the European corn borer in Massachusetts, New York, and other States, and to provide means for the control and prevention of spread of this insect in these States or elsewhere in the United States, in cooperation with the State or States concerned, including rent outside of the District of Columbia, employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and all other necessary expenses, $500,000: Provided, That of this sum $250,000 shall be immediately available.'"

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against it as being new legislation, unauthorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. RUBEY. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to make the point of order or to reserve it?

Mr. BLANTON. I will ask the gentleman from Missouri if the committee considered this matter?

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order with reference to the proviso, which makes part of the sum available, but not the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

[Excerpts from p. 2879, RECORD, Feb. 13, 1920.]

The Clerk read as follows:

"Amendment offered by Mr. HAYDEN: Page 99, after line 2, insert as a new paragraph:

"'That during the Sixty-sixth Congress the members of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives, not less than five in number, are hereby authorized and empowered to conduct hearings and examine into the conduct and management of the Bureau of the Forest Service and other bureaus, branches, and agencies of the Department of Agriculture, at Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, and shall have and are hereby granted authority to subpœna witnesses, compel their attendance, administer oaths, and to demand and examine all books, documents, and papers relating to the business of such bureaus and their branches and agencies; and the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, is hereby appropriated for expenses incident thereto.

"'Said committee is hereby authorized to employ such clerical and other assistance, including stenographers, as the members of said committee may deem necessary in the proper prosecution of its work.'"

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve the point of order for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. I think we ought to get along and get through with this bill. I make the point of order that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arizona desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. HAYDEN. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Hereafter, if any employee of the Department of Agriculture assigned to permanent duty in Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands shall elect to postpone taking any or all of the annual leave to which he may be entitled, he may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, subject to the interests of the public service, be allowed to take at one time in any calendar year unused annual leave which may have accumulated within not to exceed four calendar years immediately preceding and be paid at the rates prevailing during the year such leave has accumulated."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph. It is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard?

Mr. HAUGEN. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

And, Mr. Speaker, when on February 14, 1920, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LEE] moved to recommit, asking that the items for $20,000 and $168,076 be increased to $500,000, I made a point of order against his motion to recommit, which point of order was sustained by the Speaker:

[Excerpts from p. 2913, RECORD.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I submit to the Speaker that the language of the paragraph which the amendment seeks to strike out appears in full at the beginning of the amendment, and the language of the paragraph which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LEE] seeks to insert in lieu of the matter sought to be stricken out is set forth in full on the same page with it, and an inspection of the two will very readily disclose to the Chair that the amendment provided for in the motion to recommit is not germane to the paragraph which is sought to be stricken out, and the point of order should be sustained.

* * * * * * *

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is prepared to rule.

* * * * * * *

The substitute proposed by the amendment undertakes to provide for all necessary expenses, and so forth, and then provides in a great many words the character of the work to be performed, which the Chair thinks is in no way germane to the proposition in the original bill providing for the payment of certain expenses; and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

[Excerpts from pp. 3541–3542, RECORD, Feb. 26, 1920.]

The Clerk read as follows:

"Naval Observatory: Astronomers—1 $3,600, 1 $2,800; assistant astronomers—1 $2,700, 1 $2,400, 1 $2,000, 1 $1,800; assistants in department of nautical instruments—1 $2,500, 1 $1,600; clerks—1 of class 4, 1 of class 3, 2 of class 2, 2 of class 1; instrument maker, $1,500; electrician, $1,500; librarian, $1,800; assistants—3 at $1,600 each, 3 at $1,400 each; stenographer and typewriter, $900; foreman and captain of the watch, $1,000; carpenter, $1,000; engineer, $1,200; 4 firemen; 7 watchmen; mechanic, $900; 8 laborers; in all, $60,000."

* * * * * * *

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point of order against parts of the paragraph.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order not to the paragraph, but against the following item—the position of one astronomer at $3,600 a year—it being a new position, unauthorized by law, the one at $2,700 a year, it being a new position, likewise unauthorized by law, and the one at $2,500, being an assistant in the Department of Nautical Instruments, it being a new position and not authorized by law.

* * * * * * *

Mr. BLANTON. I make those three points of order because they are new positions created in this bill and unauthorized by law, and the committee had no right to put them in.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, let me call the attention of the House and of the gentleman to what the situation will be if the point of order is insisted upon and sustained.

Mr. BLANTON. There are three parties waiting who expect to get these soft berths.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is just the trouble. I wish it were possible to keep them in there. We would like to have done that, but this is the situation. Because of a law passed, as I understand, by the suggestion of the Secretary of the Navy, he has abolished the corps of professors there, and these positions now and for some time have been filled by these retired officers the gentleman is talking about. Under the law these gentlemen can no longer fill those positions, and unless we supply them, by reason of the provision for civilian employees, this department will be absolutely crippled beyond all measure.

Mr. BLANTON. It has gotten along without them in the past.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; it has not. The two men who are now occupying these positions are these retired officers that the gentleman has talked about, put on the active list. They go finally upon the retired list, we are informed, at the close of this year, and then these two positions will be vacant.

Mr. BLANTON. I insist upon the point of order. They are new positions, are unauthorized by law, are unnecessary, and we should save this money.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana contend that this is authorized by law?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana: I do not contend it is authorized by law, but I wished to inform the House of the situation we will be in.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas insist on the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I insist on the point of order, because I do not believe it is necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no other recourse but to sustain the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Nautical Almanac Office: For assistants in preparing for publication the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac—1, $2,500, 1 $2,000, 2 at $1,800 each, 2 at $1,600 each, 2 at $1,400 each, 3 at $1,200 each; assistant messenger; in all, $18,420."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order——

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order against the position of assistant in preparing for publication the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac, one at $2,500, for the reason that this is a new position unauthorized by law. I reserve the point of order for a minute, as I want to get some information. I call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to this fact. I want to know whether or not his committee had this information before it. In publishing this American Ephemeris three-fourths of the information that goes into that document comes from abroad and has come from abroad since the Paris agreement of 1911. Only one-fourth of the total of that document is furnished by this American department, and, notwithstanding that fact, each year during the last two years this bill has been increasing the amount of the appropriations.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will say to the gentleman this is what the committee did. We dropped two places out at $1,000 each because of the fact it requires men of more than ordinary ability to do this work. We created one position at $2,500. That is the situation.

Mr. BLANTON. I call attention right here to this fact: The gentleman is probably aware of the fact, if his committee went into the matter, that during the last year, with four positions vacant, this magazine was gotten out on time. There was not any stoppage in the work at all, and the work was well performed. Why should the committee come in now and create this new $2,500 position?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will tell the gentleman why. During the time the gentleman was speaking about with reference to the vacancies we had a number of reservists who were employed there, and they had a great deal larger force than they have now or can have under this appropriation, and I wish to say with reference to the importance of this work that——

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman speaking of the research work now?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I am speaking of the almanac. Every almanac that is gotten out by the State of Texas and every other State is founded upon this Nautical Almanac gotten out by the United States department. It is a very important work and should not be crippled, and it may be we have crippled it now a little, because of the fact we did not give them anywhere near the number of extra employees that they wanted. They did have a great amount of extra force during the war, because of the fact they had assigned several from the reservist corps which are now denied them.

Mr. BLANTON. But in the next paragraph you are allowing $3,000 for piecework.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They have always had that.

Mr. BLANTON. Always had the sum of $3,000?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Why, they began with only $1,000.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That was a long while ago.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is aware of this fact, is he not, that not for 20 years has there been any research work published?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Well, I am not up on all the research work that has been done in the last 20 years.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, there has not been any published in 20 years.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman may be particularly informed about that. We do know they are cooperating, and of necessity there should be cooperation, for all the information this Nautical Almanac contains, between this Government and all civilized Governments.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman know for whom this position is fitted out especially?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I presume it is fitted out for the purposes for which this place is created. We have to have a Nautical Almanac.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman does know the particular individual for whom this position is created?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I do not.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against this new position of $2,500, because I do know.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the foregoing exemplifies the value and efficacy of the point of order. With the cooperation of my colleagues in preventing the Rules Committee from making such eliminated items in order, and in voting down Senate action when it reasserts them, millions of dollars can be saved on future appropriation bills. The people want action economy and not mere lip economy. Loyal, 100 per cent Americanism, sane economy, and maximum production are demanded by the American people and should be our slogans. We must economize on things big and little. We must not get careless about the little things. Illustrating, note the following from page 3530 of the RECORD:

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, on page 80, line 15, I move to strike out the sum of $250,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Amendment by Mr. BLANTON: Page 80, line 15, strike out '$250,000.'"

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the committee and the chairman to the fact that in this paragraph, to be paid for out of this $250,000, are the following items: Periodicals, newspapers, oilcloth, sponges, and street car fares not exceeding $750. Over on another previous page we find also to be paid for cushions, wardrobe cabinets, leather for covering sofas; and on another page we find chamois skin, pitchers, lace, powders, tumblers, flower garden; and again the item of street car tickets not exceeding $250, making $1,000 for street car tickets alone. I want to ask the chairman and the committee if we are going to continue appropriating for all of these items of luxury, the great majority of which could be done without by these ease-loving department employees, and are we to keep on paying for these needless luxuries just because the departments place them in their estimates? Now, I take it that the young ladies who are employees in these departments, and the dandy officers, do not need these wardrobes, lace, and leather sofas, and they do not need these powders and chamois skins.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They may or may not need the powder.

Mr. BLANTON. They ought to furnish their own powder and their own chamois skin and their own lace, and I take it that these officers down there in the War Department ought to work during business hours and they would not have time for all these luxuries. They have no need and there is no necessity for these leather-covered sofas down there. We have done away with leather-covered sofas in the House Office Building. Why, I am informed that you will not find a leather-covered sofa in the whole House Office Building now. We are getting along without them. Why can not the War Department do without them? Do the well-kept officers, after their two hours' noonday lunch, which usually takes about three hours to devour, have to take a buttermilk siesta for another hour on these leather-covered sofas? I want to say that we ought to wake up on this proposition of real economy, and we ought to cut out all of these unnecessary luxuries in these departments.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Does not the gentleman believe that if a man ate a three-hour meal he ought to have a sofa to lie down on for a while?

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say this, that I have rung up and have had my secretary to ring up department chief after department chief down there from time to time, along about from 5 minutes to 12 o'clock until along about 5 minutes to 3 o'clock, and it has been almost impossible to get hold of anybody down there except some second or third secretary or some underling. I want to say that I can not come to any other conclusion but that after these long two or three hour meals at noontime, when we are told the chief is out at lunch, these leather-covered sofas are put into use down there for an afternoon buttermilk siesta.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does the gentleman from Texas think when he waits three hours he ought to stand up during all that time or have a sofa upon which he can recline while he is waiting?

Mr. BLANTON. This is not a matter of levity with me; it is not a matter of facetiousness. This is a matter of strict business. I am here to represent 325,000 people who live in my district, who expect me to help the committees on appropriations cut out these useless and extravagant appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas has a misapprehension in reference to the kind of powder that is provided for here. It is not face powder for the ladies that he is talking about; it is bug powder, and the only question in the mind of the committee was as to whether or not we have appropriated enough for bug powder. We thought they ought to have more of it and get more bugs out of the department and out of these offices.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will reduce these appropriations and will cut out some of these useless luxuries for the offices out of this bill, we will probably get rid of some bughouse officers in some of the departments and save the people some of these expenses. If this is bug and not face powder, it ought to be so denominated in the bill, which merely says "powder." As chamois skin is used with face powder and not with bug powder, I expect this money will buy face powder.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion let me state that I shall cooperate in every way possible with our distinguished minority leaders, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], and with the distinguished majority leader, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], and the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], in establishing and maintaining sane economy in every department of our Government.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. SAMUEL M. TAYLOR,

OF ARKANSAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, April 14, 1920.

The House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and had under consideration the bill H. R. 13587, the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, by the courtesy of the Members I will not discuss the pending Army appropriation bill, but will speak as to some of the great general and war legislation that was enacted into law during the Sixty-third, Sixty-fourth, Sixty-fifth, and Sixty-sixth Congresses.

There was a time when the Congress remained in session only for a few months each year, but in later years, and especially in the years 1913, 1914, 1915, 1916, 1917, and 1918, both legislative branches have been in almost continuous session. During the years mentioned new and most beneficent laws have been passed. Covering the World War period, never was there gathered in any parliamentary body in the world a more determined and patriotic set of men to stop and defeat the arch enemy and destroyer of civilization in his death-dealing onward march, to protect our shores, to defend bleeding and outraged nations, to make mankind free, and to lift democratic spirit and hope high among the peoples of the world than the men constituting as a whole the membership of the Congress of the United States during the time mentioned. To some of this war legislation I will later refer. As a Member of this House I feel that it is due to the great constituency which I have the honor to represent on this floor to inform them and the country of some of the results of our labors performed during these years, days, and nights.

I now give a résumé of the legislation, in part, to which I refer:

The new currency system, or what is commonly called the Federal reserve law, giving to the country a new system, setting at naught the miserable currency law we then had, avoiding panics and expanding the volume of currency, enabled our country to finance the World War and in the meantime holding our American institutions stable and intact. Under this great act our country has not been visited by panics, whereas before that time they seemed to have been made to order, but during the dark days through which our country has passed since the making of this law depositors have had confidence and our banking institutions have stood—

> Calm
> As the deep-vaulted heavens,
> Serene 'mid the scurrying cloudlets.

The income-tax law: Requiring the swollen fortunes of the rich to bear their fair share of the burdens of government.

Election of Senators by direct vote: Prior to this provision Senatorships were decided by legislatures.

Abrogation of bossism in Congress: Providing for the election of committees instead of the appointment thereof.

Publicity of campaign expenses: Affording the poor man a chance to aspire for office by not giving the rich a monopoly on the same.

Corrupt-practices act: Providing against the unlawful use of money in elections; to prevent vote buying; to prevent corrupt election methods, so elections will be clean, honest, open, and free from crooked dealing.

Federal Trade Commission law: To weed out trusts, combines, and dishonest business men everywhere; a stimulus to honest business; a curb bit in the mouth of dishonest business.

Marine-insurance law: Insuring an open sea, an open market. Providing for marine insurance to shippers of American products. The resumption of shipping to markets of the world. Affording the six and a half million farmers an open and an honest market for their crops. Affording 20,000,000 wage earners permanent employment at a living wage. (Note.—Cotton was selling for 5½ cents a pound due to closed seas occasioned by withdrawal of insurance companies. The enactment of the Government marine-insurance law aided in restoring price of cotton, wheat, and other products.)

Ship-purchase act: Enabling Americans to control their own shipping and make certain their markets. Establishing a merchant marine, ships to carry our commerce. Enabling the farmer to have a steady and dependable market for his wheat and his cotton; enabling the business man to prosper and improve, to keep the arteries of commerce open and going; to enable ships to navigate the sea and carry products of mine, field, and forest to the markets of the world. This legislation important in peace times but doubly important in war times.

Clayton antitrust law: To prosecute the trusts and combinations and those engaged in vicious business methods that oppress the poor; to encourage honest business—honest business will not object; dishonest business will get justice and no more.

Philippine independence bill: Giving the Filipinos a modified form of independence and giving them a wider scope of local self-government. This will hasten the day of complete independence.

National prohibition: Congress, by a two-thirds vote in both branches, has passed it; three-fourths of the States have ratified it; it is the law of the land.

Woman suffrage amendment passed.

ACHIEVEMENT FOR AMERICA'S SIX AND ONE-HALF MILLION FARMERS.

Rural credits law: Cheaper interest—longer tenure—what the farmers desired. Passed the House May 15, 1916; signed by President Wilson July 17, 1916. While the law is not patronized by all, the low rate of interest and long tenure of payment has lowered interest rates in all farm loan companies, thereby benefiting the farmer.

Law to prevent gambling in farm products: This law needs tightening up, so that farmers may be sure of an open and honest market—free from gamblers who neither sow nor reap—a market free of graft.

Warehouse bill: Enabling farmer to hold his crops properly insured for favorable market conditions.

Grain-grades bill: Classifying and grading grain, thereby securing better conditions and better prices.

Lever agricultural-extension bill: Carrying education to the farmer's son. Improving agricultural conditions.

Good-roads law: Federal aid for improvements to highways of the country. For the benefit of all.

Three-year homestead law: Cutting down residence from five to three years, thereby aiding the homesteader.

Second homestead entry for soldiers: Giving soldiers an additional opportunity to secure a home.

Preference right to soldier entrymen: Aiding soldiers to have a second chance to secure a home.

Credit given for time of service in Army as residence on homestead: Aids homesteaders in acquirement of home by reducing residence on land.

Federal appropriations for agricultural and mechanical colleges where farm boys and girls can learn trades; putting agriculture on a business basis; making agriculture a science; reducing cost of production.

Construction of fertilizer plants to improve the impoverished and run-down soils: Here Government steps in to stamp out monopoly in fertilizer, thereby rendering aid to farmers.

Increased appropriations for agriculture, thus recognizing agriculture as one of the leading industries.

Bureau of Markets: To enable farmer to have an open and honest market; to avoid waste; to provide better market facilities; to aid farmers in every way.

Bureau of Good Roads: To keep alive road improvement everywhere; to study improved methods of road construction.

ACHIEVEMENTS FOR AMERICA'S 20,000,000 TOILERS.

Establishment of the Department of Labor: Providing for a Cabinet member to represent the wage earners of the country.

Eight-hour day on public works: In the interest of every man who toils.

Children's Bureau: Protecting orphanage of land: Demanded by civilization.

Child-labor law: Protection of youth of land: Demanded by mothers of America.

Safety of railway employees: Only justice to both employees and dependent ones.

Bureau of Labor Safety: Scientific methods of protecting those engaged in hazardous employment.

Workmen's compensation law: To make certain compensation to dependent ones.

Seamen's law: Requiring decent living facilities and proper protection of life.

Increased wage scales on Government work.

The establishment in the Department of Labor of an Adjustment Service, including (a) Division of Conciliation, (b) United States Employment Service, (c) Bureau of Labor Statistics, (d) Bureau of Immigration, (e) Bureau of Naturalization, (f) Information and Educational Service, (g) Bureau of Industrial Housing and Transportation, (h) War Labor Policies Board, (i) Adjusting of Labor Disputes.

AMERICA'S GREAT ACHIEVEMENT AND EFFICIENCY DURING THE STRESS OF WAR.

1. Raised an Army of 4,000.000 men—the mightiest and most efficient Army of all history.

2. Bridged the Atlantic with American ships and put 2,000,000 men safely across the sea amidst the greatest adversity known to history.

3. Established the greatest Medical Department and reduced the loss of life by disease to a minimum.

4. Established the greatest hospital service.

5. Established the greatest aeroplane service and established the greatest Navy in the world, save and except England alone.

6. Had an Army of the bravest men, the best clothed, the best fed, and the best paid of any army of the 26 nations engaged in the conflict.

7. Loaned $11,000,000,000 to the Allies to aid in the conduct of the war.

8. No panic; no failing, crumbling institutions; money plentiful; business men prosperous; the Treasury safe and sound; American institutions growing and expanding; no scourge among us.

9. The establishment of a war-time espionage law—a law to punish the wily spy, the agitator, the I. W. W., who, while the boys were dying at the front and were being submarined as they crossed the sea, were disseminating insidious propaganda of the murderous Hun.

10. Increased pay of the private soldier both in war and peace times from $15 to $30 a month. There was not a dissenting vote by either Republican or Democrat when this increase was added as an amendment to the draft law in the House.

RECONSTRUCTION LEGISLATION, BOTH PENDING AND PASSED, INCIDENT TO CLOSING THE WORLD'S GREATEST WAR.

Vocational education for the wounded soldiers, so they may learn trades and become independent, self-sustaining citizens. Approximately $22,000,000 has already been appropriated; more to follow. These wounded soldiers shall be protected; they shall be educated; they shall not want.

Preference in the civil service and Government employment of all kinds for the soldiers. Will be of assistance to soldiers who desire to enter Government service. It gives them a preference in all Government appointments. It is a law.

Preference rights extended to all soldiers in acquiring of public lands and homes upon the public domain.

Sweeping away of emergency war-time legislation. Total exemption of farmers from all profiteering laws, as they are not hoarders—not dealers—merely producers and selling in an open market.

To dispense with all unnecessary boards and Federal control, and allow honest business, labor, society, and the farmers to be free from Federal interference, Federal regulation, and allow the law of supply and demand honestly administered to again assert itself and control. If abuses spring up, let them be prosecuted in the courts as other infractions of law. In war times drastic laws were required. In peace the least governed is the best governed.

To prosecute and put behind bars gamblers in the necessities of life, and hoarders and extortionists of all sorts and kinds. Hoarders, gamblers, profiteers, and extortionists should no longer be tolerated. They extort from the producer and consumer. They breed Bolshevists, anarchists, and law violators.

For the enactment of legislation to reduce the high cost of living and the abnormal and unconscionable profits due to practiced extortion on both producer and consumer; hoarding and profiteering to be prosecuted for breaches of the law.

Restoration and reinstatement on easy terms, without penalty, of lapsed war-risk insurance policies.

Payment of soldiers' insurance in lump sums, as distinguished from monthly installments, at the option of the insured.

Establishment of educational advantages in all camps, cantonments, forts, and arsenals, thereby rendering service in Army and Navy sufficiently attractive to insure an adequate peace-time Army, without any compulsory military training in peace times.

Deportation of alien slackers, as desired by the American Legion.

In the passage of these laws, Mr. Chairman, I contributed my support.

In 1917 and 1918, to win the war, we raised the grandest army in the shortest time, waged the greatest war, and won the most glorious victory in the memory of man, and that, too, by the patriotism, bravery, and heroism of American soldiers backed by the President, the Congress, determination, money, encouragement, and love of our rich and poor alike, women and men, whose hearts went out to the outraged countries, women, and children. As I stand here, Mr. Chairman, in this Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union in the consideration of this appropriation bill, I look into the faces of Members on both sides of the aisle who sat with me throughout the long, troublesome, and anxious days and vigils of the nights of the war praying for the safety of our soldiers and that victory might come to our arms; and it did gloriously come.

Then did a shout of joy go up;
The wild, glad cry of freedom come
From hearts long crushed by cruel hands,
And songs from lips long sealed and dumb.

It is not inappropriate at this moment to say, Mr. Chairman, that while our soldiers were across the sea, in camps and cantonments in this country, and on the sea, that when their mothers, fathers, sisters, and wives wrote their Congressman concerning the smallest anxiety or assistance for these men in any way, that such letters and inquiries were promptly answered and their desires gratified in every case possible. This duty we lovingly and cheerfully performed. The same has been true since the signing of the armistice in looking after their discharges, insurance, allotments, pay, mileage, clothing, and so forth.

It is to be hoped, Mr. Chairman, that grim-visaged war has smoothed his wrinkled front and that we may obtain a lasting and permanent peace for all time, not only for our own great and beloved Nation but for the peoples of the world; and, gentlemen, may we not hope and believe that God, full of mercy, dwelling on high under the shadow of His brow, will grant comfort and repose to the souls of the heroes who died on Flanders field and elsewhere for humanity and also that the children of men enjoy protection, peace, freedom, and liberty.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ERNEST R. ACKERMAN,

OF NEW JERSEY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 23, 1920,

On H. R. 12820, a bill to create revenue in lieu of the excess-profits tax.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, in the autumn of 1918 the ship of state, manned by the loyalty of the people, was successfully combating the mountainous seas that had been encircling the world, and the sun was breaking through the gloom. When the date of the armistice arrived some expected the captain to order full speed ahead; but suddenly "the clouds returned after the rain," and the reaction from the enthusiasm which greeted the cessation of hostilities changed to hesitancy, then to doubt, and while there was a slight temporary recession in the upward curve of the price of commodities, no one could fathom what was to happen in the light of the great task of reconstruction. Then came a lessening of activities on every hand—unemployment increased, urgent demands for employment were heard, and a fog of apprehension settled down. Officials, bewildered by what was daily transpiring, floundered along, not knowing what course to steer the ship by so that she would not be thrown or cast upon the rocks which those who were supposed to be competent to know said lay right ahead. Conferences with Cabinet heads and War Bureau chiefs were not as productive as hoped for. While we were sailing through a period of more or less uncertainty, employment slowly but steadily increased, not because of a policy but in spite of one; business improved in volume; and the soldiers, as they were demobilized, were offered as good or better positions than they had when they sailed forth to defend the honor of the country, and nearly all were provided for.

What we must have is vision and confidence. We must take an optimistic outlook and see through the temporary fog and incidental gloom that for the moment may possibly seem to be surrounding us, but through which even now the sun is shining.

We may thus preserve for posterity the exceeding great privilege that we are enjoying and which has been purchased at a great cost of blood and treasure during the 144 years of our national existence.

That the United States is a growing entity no one will dispute, and such being the case we must maintain that progress by a policy of constructive conservatism in our forests and mines and by giving a renewed encouragement to the vital and productive industry of agriculture.

Before any understanding of magnitude can be successfully launched it is not only fitting but eminently proper that a comprehensive survey of conditions should be made.

The word "billion" is a current term to-day, the word "million" having almost been discarded. The word "trillion" will soon become not an unusual word, it having been brought into the limelight by Prof. Fisher, of Yale College, who states that the annual turnover of business for 1918 reached the sum of $1,269,000,000,000. Using the same methods employed by him for the business of the United States for 1919, we obtain a figure of $1,484,000,000,000, an increase of $215,000,000,000 over the previous year.

As during the main part of 1918 every legal and moral restraint that could be exercised was inaugurated, and quite properly so, to prevent any activity operating that did not point to the immediate winning of the war, there had consequently "backed up" an immense amount of projects that if stable conditions can obtain will for many years to come augment considerably the totals referred to.

According to the Census Bureau the wealth of the United States increased from $107,000,000,000 in 1904 to $187,000,000,000 in 1912. If we use the same percentage of increase as was shown in 1912 over 1904, which was practically 80 per cent, upon the period of 1912 to 1920, eight years, it would produce a total of $327,000,000,000 based on the same monetary standards of the earlier date.

Moreover, in a letter recently received by me from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, he states that in his opinion the value of the property in the United States at the present time is $350,000,000,000. Accepting it as a fact, this is over $100,000,000,000 in excess of any previous estimate, and this excess alone is over four times the amount of our national debt, without taking into account the $10,000,000,000 which Europe is bound under the agreement to return to us with interest.

The products of the farm in 1904 were valued at $6,000,000,000, or a little over 6 per cent of the value of all property; in 1912, at $9,000,000,000, or 5 per cent of the value of all property. If in 1919, seven years later and when daylight saving prevailed, the reported value of farm products was $24,000,000,000, reasoning by analogy as farm products consistently averaged 5 per cent of all products, the value of all property should be $500,000,000,000. Let us look at the matter from another angle.

Taking into account the rise in values on which the 1920 calculation should be based, it would be safe to assume that a 50 per cent increase over the result of $327,000,000,000 previously mentioned would not be far afield, and therefore the present market value of all property in the United States to-day, based on current standards, would total nearly $500,000,000,000.

For the purpose of obtaining a proper perspective we turn back the pages of history and review the financial increase that has taken place since 1850 and succeeding years as tabulated by the Census Bureau, discarding fractional parts less than billions and visualize it as follows:

When the population was 23,000,000 in 1850 the wealth was $7,000,000,000, or $300 per individual.

When the population was 31,000,000 in 1860 the wealth was $16,000,000,000, or $516 per individual.

When the population was 38,000,000 in 1870 the wealth was $24,000,000,000, or $630 per individual.

When the population was 50,000,000 in 1880 the wealth was $43,000,000,000, or $860 per individual.

When the population was 62,000,000 in 1890 the wealth was $65,000,000,000, or $1,050 per individual.

When the population was 76,000,000 in 1900 the wealth was $88,000,000,000, or $1,160 per individual.

When the population was 81,000,000 in 1904 the wealth was $107,000,000,000, or $1,320 per individual.

When the population was 95,000,000 in 1912 the wealth was $187,000,000,000, or $1,990 per individual.

When the population was 110,000,000 in 1920 the wealth probably is $500,000,000,000, or $4,540 per individual.

In 1917, the latest obtainable date, 3,472,890 returns of income taxes, as compiled by the Treasury Department, indicated an expressed income of $13,652,383,207.

This three and a half millions of returns equal 3 per cent of the population of the country. Would it not be most liberal to suppose that the remaining one hundred and six and a half millions of persons living here from whom no income tax was collected possessed in the aggregate at least an equal amount of wealth? Very probably they had very much more, but suppose for the sake of argument that they did not, but had only the same total, which would be the incredibly small sum of $130 income apiece, their aggregate income would be $13,845,000,000, which, added to the $13,652,000,000 previously mentioned, would exceed twenty-seven billions of income, or, capitalized on only a 5 per cent basis, would indicate $500,000,000,000 of basic wealth. They probably had several times that income each, which would in all probability allow the capitalization to be made even on a 10 per cent basis. Why not?

However, by the census of 1912 the wealth of the United States was computed to be 187 billions. The income of its people, according to Prof. Anderson, of the National Bank of Commerce, in New York, was 33.8 billions, or 18 per cent. In 1904, when the wealth was 107 billions, the income was 18 billions, or 17 per cent. Using the same rate of increase from 1912 to 1920 as was shown from 1904 to 1912, we have an income of 73.4 billions, or about 18 per cent, which is accepted in trade circles as a fact. Therefore, as we possess to-day an income in excess of the census value of all the property in the United States 30 years ago—and nearly that of 20 years ago—would not the returns of 73 billions of income be presumed to indicate wealth of more instead of less than 401 billions?

Of this 73.4 billions, 4.6 billions, or 6½ per cent, was spent for products of foreign industry, the remaining 93½ per cent for articles of domestic manufacture—fifteen times as much for home purchases as for those of foreign origin.

If in 1910 wealth being less than $187,000,000,000, the income of the people was conceded to be $30,500,000,000. That is from recorded facts. In 1918 the conceded income being $73,400,000,000, by the same arithmetical calculation national wealth might not be far from $448,800,000,000. Therefore the approximate wealth of the country, based on duly ascertained facts which no doubt are fundamentally correct and determined by the several illustrations mentioned, must be close to $500,000,000,000.

According to the Guaranty Trust Co., of New York, the exports from the United States during the month of January, 1920, were valued at $730,707,863, as against $681,649,999 in the month of December, and $622,552,783 in January, 1919. Imports were valued at $473,936,610 compared with $380,710,328 in December and $212,992,644 in January, 1919. The excess of exports for the month was $256,771,253, as compared with $409,560,139 in January, 1919. For the seven months of the fiscal year exports have reached a total value of $4,593,976,102, as compared with $3,797,413,718 for the corresponding period a year ago; and imports have been valued at $2,767,804,051, as compared with $1,689,201,420 in the first seven months of the 1919 fiscal year. The excess of exports over imports has fallen from $2,099,212,298 to $1,826,172,051, a decrease of $273,040,247.

At the beginning of the World War in 1914 it was accepted as a fact that only 400,000 persons in continental United States owned a bond for the purposes of investment. To-day, according to figures furnished by the Treasury Department the number of subscribers to the various Liberty and Victory loans was as follows: First loan 4,000,000 subscribers, second loan 9,400,000 subscribers, third loan 18,308,325 subscribers, fourth loan 22,777,680 subscribers, Victory loan 11,803,895 subscribers, making a grand total of 66,289,900 subscribers.

This is a healthy sign of interest in the country's welfare, for, excluding duplications, it is safe to assume that one bondholder for three original subscribers still exists; therefore, 22,000,000 stockholders in the corporation of the United States, if we be permitted to describe it as such, or one bondholder for every five of our population, exist at the present time. That they should be encouraged to remain such needs no argument, and that they should see their investment appreciate rather than depreciate will be admitted without question. The decline in the market value of all issues of Government bonds has put a damper upon those who made an investment therein. But we hope this will be temporary.

According to a contributor to Commerce and Finance he declares that the money in circulation is now $56.16 per capita, or about $6,000,000,000. According to a prominent bank president there are about 27,000 banks in the country, and their average vault holdings of cash are not more than $20,000, or a total of $540,000,000. This sum, plus the $1,934,000,000 of gold held by the Federal reserve banks, accounts, he maintains, for less than half of the $6,000,000,000 in circulation. It is thus clear, he asserts, that nearly three and one-half billions is in the pockets of the people or the tills of the merchants. Upon the assumption that there are about 50,000,000 adults in the United States, this means that each of them is keeping about $70 of money out of the banks. This, he claims, is unnecessary and provocative of extravagance, and he urges that the banks of the country should join in an effort to exploit the benefits of a checking account, thereby reducing the amount of money in circulation and making the gold now held against the outstanding Federal reserve notes available as a basis for increased loans.

This brief report would, however, be incomplete without an allusion to the tightness of money that is reported by bankers throughout the country. One western bank president, who is an exceptionally careful observer, also tells us he thinks that the scarcity of loanable funds is largely due to the fact that wage earners are now carrying an unusually and unnecessarily large quantity of money in their pocketbooks and homes, and he suggests that a campaign to encourage them to open bank accounts and use checks instead of cash in paying their bills might greatly ease the situation. Also, might not a campaign encouraging membership in building and loan associations be productive of good results in thrift and good citizenship?

According to that eminent investigator and economist already referred to, Prof. Irving Fisher, of Yale College, the amount of money that is in actual circulation outside of banks and the United States Treasury is about two and one-half billions of dollars, and according to his estimates this volume changes hands thirty times a year, thus making seventy-five billions of exchange. The volume of deposits subject to check was twelve and one-half billions, and changes hands, he computes, exceeding slightly ninety-five times per year, thus effecting one thousand one hundred and ninety-five billions of exchange. Adding the two together we have seventy-five plus one thousand one hundred and ninety-five, or a total of one thousand two hundred and seventy billions.

According to the professor, this paid for a volume of trade of 641,000,000,000 units (a unit of trade being that amount of goods which in the base year of 1909 represents $1) at prices 98 per cent higher than the prices of said base year, so that six hundred and forty-one times 198 per cent is also 1,270 plus, thus proving the correctness of the proposition.

Hon. Herbert Hoover also furnishes us with some interesting figures, not heretofore published, which show that commodity production is not being increased at all commensurate with the needs of the Nation, and while during the war the 6,000 strikes retarded production, yet undoubtedly the fact that, with the exception of an increase in the production of agriculture products, other commodities declined 150,000,000 tons, so that the grand aggregate of increase over 1913 was only 3 per cent in 1919, or less than one-half per cent per annum for each of the six years down to the present time, according to the following table:

Total production of important commodities in the United States.

I wonder, also, how many have given a moment's thought to the fact that automatically the excess tax on profits, which law is causing so much concern to those engaged in business, might become a dead letter, namely, that circumstances might arise so that it might produce practically no substantial revenue for the Government? That is, the fall in prices might be so great that the revenue between what had been produced through its operation during the war because of the enormous war orders given at prices which were fixed so as to create large producers out of the poorest equipped or most indifferently disposed units and that which might be produced during a period of depression would cause a void to exist almost equal to that of the collapse of an irridescent soap bubble.

Facetiously, of course, the Gulf Coast Lumberman offers the following advice on "How to figure your income tax":

First, take your home, add wife's income, divide by your eldest son's age, add your telephone number, subtract your auto-license number, add electric light bill, divide by number of kilowatts, multiply by your father's age, add number of gold fillings in teeth, add your house number, subtract wife's age (approximately), divide by number of aunts you have, add your number of uncles, subtract number of daughters, multiply by number of times you have gone up in an airplane, subtract your best golf score, add a pinch of salt, and then go out and borrow the money and pay the tax. While the editor has not yet announced any formula for aiding in the figuring of excess-profits returns, there is much more truth than there is fiction in such a fantastic statement.

A great Secretary of State for the United States once made the following vivid and accurate statement:

> The aim of statesmanship should be to seek a way of permanently averting the horrors of cruel and bloody combat between countries, oftenest of one blood and speech, or the even worse calamity of internal commotions and civil strife; the burdensome and far-reaching consequence of such struggles; exhausted finances, oppressive debt, onerous taxation, ruined cities, paralyzed industries, devastated fields, ruthless conscription, the slaughter of men, the grief of the widow and the orphan; with a legacy of embittered resentment, that long survives those who provoked them, and heavily afflict the innocent generations that come after.

We should all hope for the successful conclusion of a plan so worthy and beneficent.

That is the picture of the world to-day, and in which our generous and courageous country is suffering the least of those who were engaged in suppressing the ruthless piracy of submarine warfare, thus preventing the world from being dominated by the slavery of a cruel and haughty military autocracy, and as every thoughtful citizen knows, we must pay the price, and that price is in the form of taxation, which must, by the logic of events, be borne in part by future generations.

Therefore, in fixing the taxes they should be arranged as far as possible to encourage, rather than restrict, production, so that wealth may be created in order to lighten the burdens of the present and the future, for in the final analysis it is wealth that is to be taxed, no matter where located, whether in small or large quantities. Also, the greater the creation and the distribution of wealth, the fairer and more evenly will be the burden of taxation.

Lower rates of taxation, scientifically applied, will produce increased revenue, because of the natural inclination to produce, while if they are unscientifically applied or ill-advisedly considered or punitively drawn, they have a negative effect, for the holders of capital, whether in small or large amounts, thus attacked, retire to seclusion with a shrug of the shoulder by saying, "What is the use?"

Our country has always successfully overcome every difficulty, and the present will offer no exception to the glorious and heartening precedents of the past; the inspirational pages of American history gives out a buoyant confidence for the future.

That materialism has not entirely appropriated the soul of the Nation to the exclusion of the consideration of humanitarian motives is well known. The most stupendous sums were raised during the war for every kind of philanthropic, benevolent, and altruistic work by millions of every creed. Even now fresh evidence of the gigantic movement to additionally touch the soul of America so that it may rise to higher planes of usefulness is making rapid headway, and $1,000,000,000 is the contribution that will be voluntarily given.

Let us follow the golden rule, live up to the Ten Commandments, feel and exercise a personal responsibility, and all will be well, for there is enough work ahead in all lines of activity to keep the Nation prosperous for many years to come, if we keep our heads.

According to a reliable authority, that of Commerce and Finance, published in the city of New York, the national debt and wealth of the eight principal countries outside of the United States are as follows:

	Estimated national wealth.	Present national debt.	Per cent.
Great Britain	$90,000,000,000	$40,000,000,000	44.4
France	65,000,000,000	35,000,000,000	44.4
Russia	40,000,000,000	25,400,000,000	63.5
Italy	25,000,000,000	15,000,000,000	60.0
Japan	28,000,000,000	1,300,000,000	4.6
Germany	80,000,000,000	50,000,000,000	62.5
Austria	23,500,000,000	17,000,000,000	72.3
Hungary	16,500,000,000	9,000,000,000	54.5
Total	368,000,000,000	192,900,000,000	.....

If these figures are only approximately correct, the total material wealth of our beloved country exceeds at the lowest estimate by over thirty-two billions, and perhaps by one hundred and thirty-two billions, the wealth of all these countries, because of the endowments with which we have been blessed by the Almighty.

In addition to that, even with a peak load as of August 31, 1919, $26,596,701,648, our entire national obligation is but the comparatively smaller sum of but one-eighth of the amount that these eight nations have obligated themselves to pay.

However, as James G. Blaine once said in speaking of national debts, "It is a melancholy thought that this almost incalculable sum of money was borrowed and expended, not to promote the ends of peace, not to develop agriculture or the mechanic arts, not to build highways for commerce and trade, not to improve harbors and the navigation of rivers, not to found institutions of learning or of charity or of mercy, not to elevate the standard of culture among the masses—not for any or all of these laudable objects, but for the waste, the cruelty, the untold agonies of war."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit that a nation having such a glorious past, with such a substantial and religiously active present, and with such a promising future is entitled to and should be favored with such laws as will encourage further expansion rather than the opposite, especially at a time like the present, when the need is so urgent here as well as abroad for the products of its soil as well as what it can manufacture.

Production and efficiency are very much needed all over the world. Any laxity in production here is sure to result in great damage in the future to the country's welfare. Any relaxation of effort in business circles is sure to be reflected in all departments of the Government. Unless business sets a high standard, other activities are not likely to follow. By the sweat of the brow we must obtain our daily bread. A "don't care" attitude is dangerous soil in which noxious weeds may grow and attain prodigious growth at the present time, when the forces of unrest are rampant.

However, wealth must not be allowed to sulk. As a sluggard it will not be tolerated. It must not be coddled. It must not be unfairly punished. It must be shown its duty, and if that duty is rightfully performed a proper reward awaits the exercise of its potentialities.

It is true that it is contrary to human nature to continue to endure patiently taxation that was hastily instituted to protect the citadels of liberty from the menace of a foreign foe, and already, we are informed, $4,000,000,000 of hitherto active capital has been withdrawn from productive industries and invested in nontaxable securities, but American genius and statesmanship can and must successfully cope with this situation, so that individual enterprise will be encouraged and capital enticed to productive investment.

Mr. Otto Kahn points out that the only way we can assist Europe to get on its feet, and thus stem the tide of Bolshevism, is by saving, so that we can lend and export, and we can not save unless we produce more than we consume. If production is, therefore, curtailed by those possessing liquid wealth by withholding it from participation in enterprise, which would be taxed, and that heavily, then production being curtailed, no surplus exists, prices rise, and help must necessarily be withheld, our exports will decline, our merchant marine will languish, and we will be speedily headed for economic and financial disaster. To my mind it is an imperative duty to attract capital in the hands of those who have rightly acquired it to enterprises which by constant activity will bring reward—yes, even rich reward—so that capital will not draw itself into a shell of protection by seeking out investment in the fourteen billions of nontaxable securities which are existent at the present time, and which bids fair to be increased far beyond that figure. Even the new Secretary of the Treasury sees that the cumbersome forms of income tax as well as excess-profits taxation and surtaxes on incomes must be revised, so as to afford relief if disaster, and imminent at that, is to be averted.

Prior, however, to his observation I ventured to suggest in a bill I introduced in the House of Representatives a small turnover tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent, or 25 cents per $100, on all business operations throughout the United States of America, which, if applied to the base of one thousand four hundred and eighty-four billions, would produce three thousand seven hundred and ten millions of revenue, or far in excess of the tax now collected, and which would be a permanent and probably increasing source of revenue and not an economic monstrosity founded on shifting financial quicksand.

According to the Bache Review for April, 1920, wherein they advocate a sales tax, but on the 1 per cent basis, they present the following application and advantages of the tax, based on sales:

ADVANTAGES OF A TAX ON SALES.

The analyses appearing on the following pages show the tax of 1 per cent on sales worked out for three of the important products of the country; and, while this shows that the tax is duplicated several times during the progress of these commodities through business channels, the tax falls only once upon the same class of business men.

In the case of the loaf of bread, the ultimate purchasers do not have to pay more for their loaf, and the tax would be absorbed by the seller in the various movements which the wheat makes until it reaches the ultimate consumer. On beef, the maximum would be 1 cent per pound, and the same rates would apply to hog products.

The advantages of this tax would be that it would be equally paid by everybody in the country, and might lead, perhaps, to thrift, since those who wish to avoid paying taxes would only have to decrease their expenditures.

If any such amount can be raised as would appear probable, predicated on the figures submitted, all income taxes on incomes of $5,000 or less would become unnecessary, and a nominal income tax on all other incomes would be sufficient. To-day an income of $5,000 pays between $120 and $160. Under the new tax, if it is extended in toto for the purchase of commodities, the income of $5,000 would pay a tax of $50, assuming that every article purchased has had the tax added and the consumer has to pay it. But on many articles the tax is so small that it is absorbed or paid by the seller out of his normal profits, and not added to the purchase price.

This tax can only be consistently levied and collected if paid by the seller, and should be evidenced in the working out of the tax by stamps on receipts, where books are not kept, or by charges against turnover as shown by merchants' books, less any allowance for stamps given on receipts. It would be the simplest tax that could be collected, and there need never be any dispute as to the amounts of individual taxes, as now arise in a multitude of cases under the present tax laws. It will require a very much smaller staff to collect, and practically no expert service. It will materially reduce the expenses of the Government in collecting taxes, and the yield can be very closely figured, and can not materially shrink or increase by temporary developments in values or the volume of trade, since the turnover in the volume of the country's business rarely fluctuates more than 10 per cent in a year.

APPLICATION OF THIS TAX.

On bread.

In estimating the effect on the price of a loaf of bread the tax would be levied, first, when the wheat leaves the producer; second, when it leaves the miller; and, third, when it leaves the retail grocer or the baker. Prices and taxes would be as follows:

WHEN IT LEAVES THE FARM.

	Price.	Tax.
1 bushel of wheat would be sold for, say	$2.09	$0.02

WHEN IT LEAVES THE MILLER.

4⅓ bushels of wheat to the barrel, with flour averaging $12 per barrel, would make 1 bushel of wheat in flour worth	2.67	.0267

WHEN IT LEAVES THE BAKER.

	Price.	Tax.
A barrel of flour makes from 260 to 270 loaves of bread. One bushel of wheat is two-thirds of a barrel of flour. This would make 60 loaves to a bushel of wheat. Figuring these 60 loaves at an average of 8 cents to 9 cents per loaf, price would be	$5.10	$0.0510
This would make the total tax on all sales of a bushel of wheat from wheat to flour to bread		.0977

This tax thus far, approximately 10 cents, is the total price to be added to the 60 loaves of bread on account of the 1 per cent tax on sales progressively from the farm to the consumer.

This total tax, if passed along, is so small, amounting to less than one-sixth of a cent per loaf, that it could not be added to the price per loaf to the consumer. It would probably be passed on by the miller and be paid by the baker, but would be such an infinitesimal reduction from his profits that he would be almost totally unaffected.

These calculations are based on only three sales, from farmer to consumer; but if one or two more sales of the wheat take place it would still leave the tax at a small fraction of a cent to the loaf.

Further than this, it is stated that bakers do not bake half the bread used. Many domestic users buy flour from grocers and make their own bread. This further reduces the individual tax.

CALCULATIONS OF THE TAX ON BEEF.

In the same way the tax result on beef may be estimated as follows: Result on steer killed July 17, 1919, lot 301.

Cost of live animal and expense in killing and disposing of resulting products.

Live weight, 1,202 pounds, at $16.34 per hundredweight	$196.41
Expense and labor, buying, killing, driving, yarding, feeding, refrigeration, etc	8.85
Cost of selling (branch house expense) 86 cents per 100 pounds	6.10
Freight to branch house, 710 pounds, at 69 cents	4.90
Total cost	214.26

AMOUNTS RECEIVED FOR PRODUCTS SOLD.

Fats—85.8 pounds at 18.81 per 100 pounds	$16.14
Hide—78 pounds at 32.71 per 100 pounds	25.51
Offal—Edible and inedible at 41 cents per hundredweight; live weight	4.93
Dressed beef—720 pounds less shrink 10 pounds—net 710 at 23.99 per hundredweight	170.33
Total selling price	216.91

HOW THE TAX WOULD AFFECT THE CONSUMER.

	Price.	Tax.
If we analyze these figures, we find that the cost to the packer of one steer would be	$196.41
The tax of 1 per cent, to be paid by the farmer or the seller, would accordingly be		$1.96
Following up the 720 pounds (net 710 pounds) of dressed beef, the selling price of this would be	170.33
On which the tax paid by the packer would be		1.70
The total tax which might be added to the beef, first by the farmer and then by the packer, would thus be, when the beef reached the retailing butcher		3.66

	Price.	Tax.
Dividing this tax up among the net 710 pounds of dressed beef, we find that the tax on each pound would be		0.005+
If the butcher sold the beef at, say, an average, all cuts, of 40 cents per pound, his tax would be four-tenths of a cent per pound, or two-fifths of a cent		.004
The total tax thus far, if added to the price to be paid by the consumer, would thus amount to		0.009 which is a little less than 1 cent a pound on beef. This includes all taxes from the farm, to the packer, to the butcher, and to the consumer.

Calculations of the tax on hog products.

We have obtained, also from official sources, figures on the cost of hogs and hog products, and have estimated the tax which, under this plan, would be levied from the time the animal was sold by the farmer until the various products reached the consumer.

RESULT ON HOG—OCTOBER 17, 1919.

Live weight, 306 pounds, at 14.3 cents	$43.76
Expense and labor, buying, yarding, driving, killing, feeding, refrigeration, etc	4.59
Total cost		$48.35

VALUE OF PRODUCTS RESULTING FROM HOG.

Hams, 14 per cent of live weight, 42.84 pounds, at 20½ cents	$8.78
Bacon and fat backs, 31 per cent of live weight, 94.86 pounds, at 21¼ cents	20.16
Shoulders, 12½ per cent of live weight, 38.25 pounds, at 22½ cents	8.61
Lard, 8 per cent of live weight, 24.48 pounds, at 29 cents	7.10
Leaf lard, 3 per cent of live weight, 9.18 pounds, at 29½ cents	2.71
Other products, 4.02 per cent of live weight	1.44
72.52 per cent of live weight		$48.80

72.52 is the per cent of marketable products to live weight.

HOW THE TAX ON SALES WOULD AFFECT THE CONSUMER.

	Price.	Tax.
If we analyze these figures, we find the cost to the packer of one hog would be	$43.76
The tax of 1 per cent to be paid by the farmer or the seller would accordingly be		$0.44
Following up the approximate 217 pounds of consumable products of one hog, the selling price of this would be	48.80
On which the tax paid by the packer in selling this would be		.488
The total tax which might be added thus far, first by the farmer and then by the packer, would be, when the hog reached the retailing butcher		.928
Dividing this tax through the 217 pounds of consumable products, we find a tax on each pound of		.0043
The tax thus far on the 217 pounds of consumable products is, as we have seen, about 93 cents, or at the rate of less than one-half of 1 cent on each pound. If the butcher sold the pork products at retail prices, he would receive about $107, on which his tax would be about one-half of 1 cent per pound, namely		.0049
The total tax, if added to the price to be paid by the consumer, would in all amount, per pound, to		.0092 which is a little less than 1 cent a pound on pork and pork products.

Granting that this explanation is correct, how much more lightly would the tax proposed in my bill rest upon the general public and would not all business be greatly stimulated thereby?

The provisions of the measure are simple and read as follows:

A bill to create revenue in lieu of the excess-profits tax, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That on and after the date of the passage of this act Title III of the act of February 24, 1919, known as the revenue act, is hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. That on and after July 1, 1920, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in lieu of the taxes imposed by the above-mentioned title, a tax of 25 cents on each $100, or fractional part thereof, worth of sales, or turnover, of all articles of merchandise sold for cash, or any consideration being of or representing the equal cash value.

SEC. 3. That said tax shall be paid by the vendor and shall be collected, returned, and paid to the United States at the end of each quarter of the calendar year in the manner prescribed by rules and regulations promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 4. That any person, having consummated the sale or disposition of any article or articles within the meaning of this act, who shall fail to make a return of the tax on same as provided herein shall be deemed to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to assess, levy, and collect a sum equal to 50 per cent additional of said tax when same shall have been determined: Provided, That if said failure was caused by sickness, death, or other cause beyond the control of the vendor, the legal agents or representatives of said vendor may, upon satisfactory evidence, make application for the vacating of the judgment and remittance of the penalty.

Within a few days after this bill was printed I sent out 5,000 copies of the same, calling the attention of business men, financial organizations, chambers of commerce, and other organizations and associations having to do with our economic life to it, and these in turn gave me the benefit of their views on the proposal. I find that men in these activities are closely watching the work of Congress, especially on measures affecting the commerce and industry of the country. Naturally they are quick to grasp the significance of any bill proposed which levies a tax or has any financial importance.

From the communications I have received I submit a few replies to show the way in which their minds have been made up regarding this bill.

From Norfolk, Va., I received the following:

We suggest that as individuals we do not mind contributing to the cause under consideration, but we are opposed to the vexatious forms of the present income tax. In our opinion, people do not mind paying the money so much as they are worn out with the methods used to arrive at what they should pay.

A trade association in Philadelphia, through its secretary, expressed its views in this manner:

The present system of taxation, including the income-tax law in its present form and the excess-profits tax, are so thoroughly unsatisfactory in operation that I am glad to see some effort made to remedy their defects or to remove the excess-profits tax. A tax on sales may be a happy expedient and relief from the much more difficult taxes now in operation.

A trade association in New York City in the same manner said:

I am in sympathy with the idea of a tax on sales, largely because of its simplicity and the definiteness with which it can be applied.

From Hopkinsville, Ky., I heard as follows from the Business Men's Association:

We heartily indorse your H. R. 12820 tax of 25 cents on each $100 sales or turnover on merchandise. Have requested Congressman KINCHELOE and others to support this bill.

Another organization in New York City wrote me:

While the present system of taxation continues in this country business and production are bound as by an iron ring. No single factor acts as directly and inflexibly in maintaining the high cost of living, and as long as investment is discouraged by the present faulty system prices will continue to be high and will probably go higher. To arouse the American people to the seriousness of this situation becomes the duty of all thoughtful men.

A consulting engineer in New York City gave me this comment:

Personally, I am in hearty agreement with the levying of tax on sales, believing that it is an equitably distributed tax and that it will be very much more economical to collect. It should, if adopted, remove the excess-profits tax, which, in the opinion of many, including myself, has much to do with the present high cost of living.

In Nebraska the measure also attracted attention, with the result that a questionnaire was submitted to the members of a county commercial club with headquarters at York. One of the questions asked was, "Would you favor, in place of the present cumbersome and excess-profits tax on business, the substitution of a single small percentage tax on all business transactions," and the answer given was "Yes."

In Portland, Oreg., the bill also came up for discussion at the meeting of an industrial association, with the result that I was written to as follows:

Re H. R. 12820: I am thoroughly in accord with it and believe that it is a move in the right direction, as unquestionably the excess-profits tax and certain other unjust taxes are responsible or, in other words, are the prime factor in the high cost of living.

Another Oregon association with headquarters in Dallas was somewhat more brief, merely saying:

H. R. 12820 has our indorsement.

A mercantile company doing business in Kingsville, Tex., wrote me as follows:

For your information will say that I am heartily in favor of this action being taken, as I am sure that excess-profit tax is working a hardship in a good many ways, at this time making it impossible for any business institution to provide a sinking fund against any losses which might be incurred with change of conditions, and also have a tendency to put a tax on progress, as it is only from additional revenue which comes in during prosperity that many improvements or betterments can be brought about in many instances, and where the tax, as in this instance, is heavy enough to take the greater part of this revenue, it is practically impossible for most business institutions to provide for these emergencies, and I am sure that the action you propose will be welcomed by all individuals or institutions subject to excess-profit taxes.

Los Angeles, Calif., was heard from in this manner:

A tax on the gross income is the only way of reaching everybody and of treating all alike.

A concern in Bloomington, Ind., expressed its views as follows:

Your idea of removing some of the aggravating ideas of taxation is certainly a good one and will meet with the approval of every merchant in the United States, I believe. I am, however, of the opinion that it should be carried a little further and the tax put on the article when it leaves the manufacturer.

An association of business men in St. Louis, Mo., made this observation:

We want you to know that we approve the passage of your bill, H. R. 12820, which, as we understand it, contemplates a flat tax on the amount of business done instead of the present complicated method.

A bank in Earle, Ark., through its cashier, communicated with me in the following language:

I have had much discussion with different people regarding the excess-profits tax and the present form of taxation, and there seems to be much dissatisfaction with the present form. They feel that the tax is partly the cause of high prices, as every cent added on for income you pay ten times that amount in the cost of the articles.

What would be better form of taxation is a direct taxation on all purchases of goods. Some argue that a direct tax is not good for the poor man, as it would become burdensome on him, but he pays more than this amount in the indirect way.

The New Orleans Board of Trade expresses the views of its members this way:

With regard to bill 12820, imposing a tax on the gross sales, it seems to me absolutely imperative that if such amendment should be adopted it should only become effective when adopted and not be retroactive, as has been the case with the income-tax law.

The druggists' State association write me from Wisconsin:

We are more than glad to pay our just taxes to keep up the dignity of the United States, but save us from too many burdensome keeping of records.

An agricultural exchange of St. Joseph Mo., gave me this opinion:

In our opinion the whole system of taxation as regards income and excess profits is abnormal and most of the ill will that is harbored by reason of the taxation is on account of the complex method one must follow in order to arrive at the figures that the Government desires.

From Jasper, Ala., I get this view:

Bill 12820, if passed on the scale which you have it listed, would certainly reach, in our opinion, 95 per cent of the business done throughout the States; and a small amount from a full tax-paying source is, in our judgment, the proper way to raise taxes in lieu of the prohibitive tax, as is now the case on gross sales, as paid by the particular industry in which I am interested.

From Ohio came the following expression:

We certainly feel that a revision that will do away with the uncertain and oppressive profits tax will be a boon to the country in general.

Burlington, Iowa, conveys this view:

Concerning your bill, H. R. 12820, the writer wishes to state that he leans very strongly to a tax of this kind. The excess-profits tax was a war measure, and because of its unfairness ought to be canceled.

A concern in Indianapolis, Ind., wrote me:

We believe that the abolishment of the excess-profits tax and the substitution of a more reasonable (and less costly) method of taxation such as you have suggested in H. R. 12820 would be of great benefit to this country. The present method hinders business growth, which means increased production, and tends toward making extravagant methods of doing business. Production is now needed as never before.

The business men of Clearwater, Fla., went on record in the following language:

We want you to know that all our business men heartily approve of your bill, H. R. 12820.

From Cedar Rapids, Iowa, one of the leading banks wrote me:

You are certainly to be commended in introducing a bill before Congress that will place a tax on consumption instead of the present tax law which taxes production.

Ogden, Utah, was heard from this way:

We favor your bill, H. R. 12820, as tending to eliminate extravagance and waste, and greatly simplifying collections of revenue, besides removing the deadly drag on new business.

Here is what a large manufacturing concern in Hartford, Conn., said:

It seems to me a tax such as you propose would be so thoroughly distributed among the entire population throughout the United States that the present feeling of being burdened by high taxes would be permanently removed.

A large concern in Munising, Mich., said:

We are heartily in favor of H. R. 12820 in lieu of taxes on profits, and believe it would be much easier collected, at much less expense, and prove much less obnoxious to our people generally than the present system.

From New Jersey, my home State, I received many communications.. The following was selected at random from the most representative:

The writer believes that if such measures are passed by Congress the present needs of the Government will be taken care of, and if these measures become laws the present forms of oppressive taxation should be removed by their repeal, and the writer sincerely trusts that you will be successful in having some legislation passed at this session.

Columbus, Ohio, in a lengthy communication, gave me this paragraph:

The excess-profits tax is a drain on business which should be removed as quickly as possible. The drain is not so much a financial one taken on business as a whole, but the inequities in the manner of its assessment are such as to make it tremendously burdensome to some, and very slight for others. It is primarily a tax on efficiency and capacity, and should not have any relation to invested capital.

A large manufacturing concern in Billings, Mont., made this comment:

It certainly meets with our approval, and it would seem to us would result in a much more satisfactory condition all around, as the present income-tax law is anything but satisfactory to the general public.

A large concern on Long Island gave me this comment:

I am personally in favor of a consumption tax that will do away with the excess-profits tax on corporations and the surtax on incomes. The Chamber of Commerce in New York to-day adopted a resolution calling for legislation covering these particular points, and I am inclined to believe that they express the best needs of business respecting income taxation.

One of the leading trust companies of Lincoln, Nebr., states:

A large number of business men in this city express themselves as favoring something in the nature of a sales tax to replace the excess-profits tax.

The lumber interests gave me this expression:

We beg to assure you that anything along the line of simplicity and which will amend the present cumbrous excess-profit and income-tax laws will be generally approved and accepted by the lumber interests. We also feel that the public will greatly profit by an amended act.

From Coldwater, Mich., where there is a live industrial club, I got the following:

We believe that your bill, No. 12820, should become a law, to take the place of the excess-profit tax, which tax we believe is a hardship and an injustice to a great many manufacturers, and eventually will curtail production, and, at the present time, increase the cost of production.

Nebraska again comes to the front with this expression:

I am heartily in favor of H. R. 12820, as I think it would accomplish the same purpose that our present cumbersome income-tax law does, and with a fractional part of the trouble and annoyance and a very much larger proportion of efficiency. The tax all comes from the consumer anyway, as it could come from nowhere else, and the sales tax would probably be as equitable as any that could be suggested.

One of the biggest trust companies in Maryland writes me as follows from its Baltimore headquarters:

The repeal of Title III of the excess-profits law will confer a great boon upon a long-suffering people—a majority of whom are willing and anxious to pay their just taxes, but object to employing expert accountants at great expense to prepare their returns; further, they do not wish to disclose their private affairs to those they now must consult for assistance in preparing their returns.

A leading national bank of Wilmington, N. C., gave me this view:

I think a tax on sales would be about the most equitable that could be devised, and really $4,000,000,000 could be raised on such a tax and everybody would be paying a just share of it without it being burdensome.

A large industrial concern doing business in Brunswick, Ga., communicated the following:

Referring to House bill 12820, would say that I am disposed to favor this bill if it will take the place of the iniquitous excess-profits law now in force. The ease with which your bill could be enforced and the revenue collected commends it to my judgment, and it is absolutely fair to everybody who is taxed, and so long as we are taxed alike, most people submit without complaint.

The excess-profits tax, as now imposed, certainly encourages extravagance on the part of merchants and corporations who are engaged in business, and discourages economy and conservatism. How long would a merchant do business with a silent partner who, without investing a dollar in the business or taking any of the risk, stands by to collect one-half of the net profits of the business? It kills his ambition and discourages him from much effort to make money for the benefit of somebody else, and he loses pep and courage.

Again we hear from the sunny South in the following, from Atmore, Ala.:

I believe that your proposed tax, House bill 12820, or something like it, is far better than the system we have.

Resolution adopted at the twenty-first annual convention of the National Association of Box Manufacturers held at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, Ill., April 7, 8, and 9, 1920.

Whereas the excess profits is a tax on thrift and a premium on inefficiency and waste, and is, therefore, detrimental to the best interests of every citizen; and

Whereas said excess-profits tax is unscientific, ultracomplicated, cumbersome, and extravagant in its application and effect: Therefore be it

Resolved by the National Association of Box Manufacturers in convention at Chicago, Ill., the 7th to 9th day of April, 1920, That it respectfully recommends to the Congress that the present excess-profits tax be abandoned and that there be substituted a flat tax on sales and consumption on a basis which will yield to the Government that minimum amount of revenue which will suffice for its economical operation; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each United States Senator and Representatives of the various States in which our members are located.

It is my intention to bring these communications and others I have received to the attention of the committee having the bill in charge, and my hope is they will be sufficiently convincing to get action. Lately, the idea of a sales tax has been widely discussed. It seems to have taken hold of legislators on whom has been placed the responsibility of finding the ways and means for financing the Government during the next few years. This fact makes it apparent that legislation of this character seems certain of enactment by the present Congress, which has already accomplished a lot of big, constructive things, and is capable of accomplishing many more. My prediction is that it will do so before any of us are very much older.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM E. MASON,

OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 23, 1920.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a resolution directing the Commander in Chief to withdraw our troops from Europe, and I am placing in the RECORD, by consent, my reasons for doing so. I am making this statement so that my colleagues who are interested will know my reasons for the resolution and at least hear this side of the question, whether they agree with me or not, and in the hope that we may have some speedy action in this most important matter.

The Constitution of the United States, in section 8, gives to Congress power "to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces." I was not present the other day when the statement was made by the distinguished chairman of the Military Affairs Committee as to the right of the President to send our troops wherever he sees fit. I do not think that is the law, but even admitting that he was correct, it would apply only when the United States was at war. The fact that we are at peace and the Constitution gives power to Congress to make rules for the government and regulation of our Army and Navy ought to be sufficient for this Congress, for we have everyone taken the oath to support this Constitution.

It may be true that we can find no precedent for Congress ordering a change of location for American troops. It may be that no other President has given occasion for such an order, for no other President has, within my knowledge, wantonly and willfully usurped legislative power in peace and in war as has the present occupant of the White House.

What are the facts? The armistice was signed November 11, 1918. It was not signed by the United States or any military or civil representative of the United States. The United States was not an "ally" but was an "associated power," and the only reference in the armistice as to America is in article 5, which says that those districts on the left bank of the Rhine shall be administered by local authorities in control of the Allies and the "United States armies of occupation." It is manifest that there was some agreement at that time that the United States was, at least temporarily, to occupy some portion of the German territory, but so far as Congress or the people know, no agreement was reached until the 28th day of June, 1919. At that time an agreement was made between the United States, Belgium, British Empire, and France on the one side and Germany on the other, with regard to the military occupation of the territory of the Rhine. This agreement was entered into by the President really as a part of the treaty of peace. He said when he sent it to the Senate with a treaty with Poland, "this treaty and this convention are ancillary to the treaty of peace." The word "ancillary" means "subordinate, auxiliary, subservient."

The President very properly called the agreement between the United States, Belgium, France, and England, dated June, 1919, a convention, as it was not binding until the ratification of peace by the Senate. In Roman law a convention might be between parties possessing all the subjective requisites in the contract, but did not become a contract until the objective requisite was supplied. In other words, a convention was an agreement which formed a basis of a contract. Under this definition of Black, the so-called convention of June, 1919, never became an obligation, for the treaty never was consummated. In international law convention was usually applied to agreements or arrangements for a preliminary formal treaty or to serve as its basis.

Therefore, my contention that the so-called convention, like the armistice, was made as preliminary to an intended peace treaty; that peace treaty contemplated is not even pending, and it would be worse than absurd to say a year and a half after cessation of hostilities that simply because the President and the Senate have power to make another treaty or convention, therefore the American people must be taxed to the bone for another year or until such time as the consideration of a new treaty or convention will suit the personal whims or the political convenience of the President.

So it is fair to say that while we call it a convention it was an attempt on the part of the President to negotiate an agreement whereby the United States troops were to occupy a part of Germany. It was sent to the Senate August 29, some two months after it was signed by President Wilson and was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, where it still remains. No attempt has ever been made by the Senate to advise and consent to this agreement for the reason that if the treaty of peace—which Mr. Wilson negotiated without the advice of the Senate and which was rejected by the Senate—did not secure ratification, then this so-called convention, whereby we agree to leave American troops in Germany, would, in the very nature of things, fall with it.

My proposition, which I very respectfully believe to be sound, is, there being no treaty as contemplated by this convention of June 28, that there can be no convention of June 28, and the United States is not bound, either by international law or by good morals, to further retain our troops in Germany. The President, in my opinion, is not entirely frank in his communication to the Senate, published on page 5101 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 1, 1920. It was in response to the resolution of the House asking how far the activities of our troops in Germany were in control without express orders from the President of the United States. The President refers to the armistice, paragraph 5, which I have mentioned, in order to make it appear that the armistice is still in full force and binding upon the United States. He states that the armistice was continued from time to time and "on February 16, 1919, it was still further extended to a date not fixed." This would leave the impression that he expected the armistice to continue for any length of time to suit his political convenience. The language of the last extention, however, while it does not fix the number of days, says on February 16, 1919, "is further prolonged for a short period, the date of the expiration not being given. The allied powers and those associated with them reserving to themselves the right to terminate the period with three days' notice." It has now been more than a year and two months since it was extended for a "short period," and because of the fact that the treaty of peace with Germany, including the covenant of the League of Nations, was rejected by the United States, and that peace between Germany and our associates has come by treaty, and peace between Germany and the United States has come by cessation of hostilities, there is nothing legally or morally binding on the United States to keep American troops in Europe.

If I am correct in this proposition, then it is the duty of Congress to do that which is in the interest of the people of the United States, and I very respectfully submit that every interest of the United States demands that our troops be withdrawn from Germany, first, on account of the heavy expense on taxpayers of the United States; second, because the keeping of our troops there widens the breach between the people of Germany and the United States, and engenders hatred when we are seeking to make peace; and, third, it hinders and delays foreign commerce and puts our merchants and importers where they must pay tribute to the merchants of Great Britan and other of our allies who have made peace with Germany and are dealing in a most friendly way with the enemies we helped them to conquer.

Under the terms of the armistice, the peace treaty, and the "ancillary" convention, Germany was to pay our expenses. Article 6 of the convention provides that "the German Government shall continue to be responsible for the maintenance of the cost of the troops." Of course, as we expected, they have failed to pay the expenses of the United States, although we have no means of knowing whether they have promptly paid the French and English Governments for the expense of keeping their troops there.

Second. It needs no argument to show that keeping our troops in Germany engenders more war and not peace. If you doubt human nature, read again our fathers' protest in our declaration against Great Britain keeping her soldiers here. Ask yourself how you would feel if foreign soldiers were camped on us to see that we kept our agreements.

Third. You add to the high cost of living when you compel our importers to pay tribute to our late associates. You add one more middleman between the producer and the consumer. Our late friends are trading with our late enemies. Our late friends have placed an embargo on 90 per cent of our manufactures. Our imports increasing and exports decreasing—we are buying more and selling less. Every intelligent man will understand why our factories are making less. Let us make this rule, and if the President refuses to enforce it we will seek some other lawful way of relief.

Please remember, I claim, with all respect for the opinion of others, that Congress alone has power to make all laws, which includes all military laws; and, therefore, the President is bound to execute military laws as well as civil laws. There are, according to our Supreme Court, three kinds of military jurisdiction, all to be established by Congress:

First. For peace or war;

Second. To be exercised in foreign war outside of the United States, or in civil war within States occupied by rebels treated as belligerents; and Third. To be exercised in time of invasion or insurrection within the United States.

I quote from Ex parte Milligan, United States Supreme Court, Fourth Wallace, page 142.

This is from the minority opinion, but not in conflict with the finding of the court—

> The first of these may be called jurisdiction under military law, and is found in acts of Congress prescribing rules and articles of war or otherwise providing for the government of national forces; the second may be distinguished as military government, superseding, as far as may be deemed expedient, the local law, and exercised by the military commander under the direction of the President, with the express or implied sanction of Congress; while the third may be denominated martial law proper, and is called into action by Congress, or temporarily when the action of Congress can not be invited, and, in the case of justifying or excusing peril, by the President in times of insurrection or invasion, or of civil or foreign war, within districts or localities where ordinary law no longer adequately secures public safety and private rights.

Even if we admit a state of war without the boundaries of the United States, yet the law is it must be exercised "with the express or implied sanction of Congress."

The Milligan case, above quoted from, is, in the court's opinion and in the minority opinion, our unanimous assertion of the power of Congress to control military law, military courts, and in both opinions there is a solemn protest against any construction of the Constitution which renders the "military independent of and superior to the civil power." Every American should read this whole case a few times each year with the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution. Briefly, the case is: Milligan, a private citizen, was arrested October 5, 1864—war period—by military orders, tried, convicted, and sentenced to be hanged. The Supreme Court swept aside a dozen questions and legal quibbles and ordered his discharge. Lincoln was President, and the Government stood against the writ.

Congress in March, 1863, authorized the suspension of the writ throughout the United States. By the same act Congress provided that all prisoners held by order of the President, except prisoners of war, should be reported to the United States judges by the Secretary of War. Then if the grand jury did not indict the prisoner could be discharged. The President in September following by proclamation—Thirteenth Statutes at Large, page 734—added to the list of prisoners who need not be certified to the judges for indictment or discharge. How the President attempted to legislate by denying the writ of habeas corpus to those that had not been denied by Congress will be observed by reading his proclamation, for he denied or suspended the writ not only to prisoners of war but to—

> Spies or aiders or abettors of the enemy or belonging to the land or naval forces of the United States or otherwise amenable to military law or the rules and Articles of War or rules prescribed by the President or for resisting the draft or for any offense against the military or naval service.

Here is clear conflict. Congress said prisoners in Milligan's class should be certified to the court. The President said prisoners in Milligan's class can have no writ of habeas corpus.

The court, in sustaining the writ and discharging the prisoner, said:

> They can not justify on the mandate of the President because he is controlled by law, and has his appropriate sphere of duty, which is to execute and not to make laws.

Mr. Speaker and colleagues, we are playing with fire. Wherever our troops are, if the Supreme Court is right, they are there with the "actual or implied sanction of Congress." Whatever they do, it is done with the "actual or implied sanction of Congress." I am no alarmist, but call your attention to the facts and to the law. We can not shirk our plain duty. The day for handwashing and passing the buck is passed. Admit that the President had power to send them there, admit that they were kept there by the implied sanction of Congress; then, what? The President says the troops can not be used except by his orders. Yet in the same report he tells our officers to keep in "close touch" with the French and English officers and adopt for our section the same rule—the word is "régime"—adopted by the French and English. Suppose to-day at San Remo these good friends and associates do not agree with each other as to which one shall get the first money from the Germans? Suppose they disagree as to the French or German occupation? They are meeting to-day. Suppose they disagree as to Turkey? How will our army keep in touch and adopt the same régime with Great Britain and France?

Will they adopt the English plan or the French plan? They are under command of Woodrow Wilson, a man sick in mind and body. Our soldiers under his command have been killed in Mexico, in Siberia, and northern Russia by guns we furnished to help the men who killed us. Is it to be repeated in Europe? If our soldiers were home, Congress could decide where and when and with whom they should fight.

But the President says our troops in Germany are to "police" the occupied district and to "repel any attack made upon him." The American soldier, in an American uniform, and under the American flag, a policeman in Germany in times of peace, paid by the overburdened taxpayers in America. We have used them for elections in Silesia, policemen on the Rhine, track laborers and guards in northern Russia and Siberia. Under the law the President did all this with the actual or implied consent of Congress. When did you consent? Never; except by indifference and silence. Of course, I have no personal reflection, but this Congress was elected by the people as a rebuke to Woodrow Wilson for the manner in which he and his friends made one big rubber stamp of the last Congress. And yet, when I asked to get our poor boys out of Russia, the Secretary of War appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs and the old rubber stamp was applied with as much vigor as it was in the last Congress. The old chloroform bottle, prescribed by the President for American legislation, is still on tap.

You have declared peace, and did right; right but slow. Why police a country with which we are at peace and the only thing we offer is fair trade—as we have a right to under the Constitution? The only thing we ask is a waiver by Germany of war claims. Whether they make this waiver or not, we have no desire to use our "policemen" to fight. Are we to protect Germans against each other? Here is a picture of an American soldier guarding a street crossing, directing street traffic in Coblentz. We need policemen here; but, aside from that, how would you like it, to wear your country's uniform as a soldier and police the crossing in some other country? God hasten the coming of March 4 next, when no American boy wearing our uniform shall be used for anything except in his high calling as an American soldier. Is the policeman to prevent England from fighting France or Germany? Are we to consent that our people shall be taxed for 10 years to police Germany when the treaty negotiated by Wilson agreed to it and the Senate defeated the treaty?

Germany has failed to keep her agreements, claiming inability to do so. Suppose France demands reprisal under its treaty of peace which she made with Germany. Suppose Great Britain protests, as she has and may again. With whom shall we keep in close touch, France or Great Britain? Suppose Germany does not pay, are we to collect by the sword? On what shall we levy? The Kaiser and the royal family are absent. Are we to levy on the food of hungry people, or shall we take judgment and garnishee the food being sent by charitable Americans to the hungry women and children over there?

Mr. Speaker, there is a deeper and more serious danger. I have said we are playing with fire. Perhaps I should have said the President is playing with fire, and we by our silence condone his offense. He is determined to make the covenant a political issue. To do so he must keep us in a state of war. He must pretend to have our troops in Germany under the armistice, which has served its purpose. It produced a cessation of hostilities; it produced peace between the United States and Germany. It was to govern until peace was reached. A treaty of peace was contemplated, but it was presented and failed. Peace has been reached, but not by treaty. All conventions, as well as the armistice, based on the contemplated treaty fell when the treaty was rejected. To hold different would be to hold that at the end of the "short period" mentioned in the last extension of the armistice we must begin fighting again with Germany. The President may make an effort to be "cunning" and send the treaty back to the Senate, to make a political football of the lives and property of our people. I believe he will. The question is up to the House of Representatives to take the initiative—make the first move to get our troops out of Europe.

You did it in the declaration of peace and you pleased the American people. Refuse to order our troops out (now that we are at peace) and by your neglect abandon your duty, and you surrender your power to the one man and move toward militarism with gigantic strides. I beg my colleagues to read again the debates in the Constitutional Convention which gave us the great chart of liberty. Read how our wise fathers sought to withhold power from any one man. Read again the opinion of our own Supreme Court in sustaining the power of the people's representatives and setting aside the power of the one man. That great court says (Milligan case cited):

> This Nation has no right to expect that it will always have wise and humane rulers, sincerely attached to the principles of the Constitution. Wicked men, ambitious of power, with hatred of liberty and contempt of law, may fill the place once occupied by Washington and Lincoln.

Remember Wilson's letter to the sixth Indiana district at the very beginning of the war, his refusal of one hundred thousand volunteers, for quick action, just to prevent Roosevelt from being a soldier. Remember his letter while our men were fighting over there, using his political and military power to defeat patriotic men, if they were not Democrats, and to elect the very Democrats he had denounced as disloyal. Remember his making war in Russia without congressional authority. Remember his continual overriding the Constitution he is sworn to uphold.

Then decide whether you will yield any more of your power to him. Then decide whether you will complete the picture by announcing that in our country in times of peace the military power is greater than the civil power. Please, before you decide, read the gravestones in the cemeteries of history where nations are buried, the cause of national death. You will find that the compelling disease that filled the national graves was "one man controlling the military power," which is a simple name for "militarism and autocracy." There is a preventive, but no cure, for this national disease. Its prevention is in legislative action by the people's representatives. Power never limits itself. The irrepressible conflict of authority between the one man and the many will continue. You will assist either the one or the many by your act. Trusting the people means life and health to our Republic. Trusting one man may mean sickness and death to our Nation. If you doubt me, look again at the rusty crowns scattered along the highway, all the way from the days of the Cæsars to the days of the Czar of all the Russias and the Kaiser of the Imperial Government of Germany.

I can not favor the proposition to withhold appropriations from our brave officers and men over there. Such indirect legislation would reflect on our soldiers and on the Congress itself.

Pass this resolution, and if the President refuses to execute the law, then impeach him. Pass this law in line with our declaration of peace, lift the burden of taxes from our people, reduce in that way some of the burdens of high prices, and say to the world that in a Republic civil and not military law is supreme, and as our boys fought for liberty and self-determination over there, we will not abandon those great principles under our own flag.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLARENCE MacGREGOR,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 23, 1920.

Mr. MacGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, little has been said in these halls with reference to the great part that Italy played in the World War. I deem it a duty as well as a pleasure to pay my tribute to the 300,000 sons of Italy who fought under the Stars and Stripes, and also to the nation whose blood courses through their veins.

America hardly appreciates what Italy did and the debt of gratitude that is due to her for her part in the great struggle. She fought the fight alone, practically unaided by the Allies. Our attention was centered upon the French and English lines, and we are apt to forget that if Italy had not held her line the efforts of the French, the English, and the Americans would have come to naught.

When the storm broke in 1914, if Italy had joined her then allies—Germany and Austria—France would never have been able to win the crucial Battle of the Marne, because it would have been necessary for her to protect the Italian frontier, and her forces would not have been sufficient to stem the tide of Huns that swept across Belgium. The triple alliance between Germany, Austria, and Italy had existed since 1882, and was technically in force when the war began. The declaration of neutrality by Italy undoubtedly saved the world from Prussian domination, and for this act alone Italy is entitled to the fullest measure of gratitude.

There was no duty that called Italy into the war. Her treasury had been drained by the African difficulties; her military strength was low. She had no sources of supply for the manufacture of guns and munitions; she was dependent upon other nations for coal; her financial and industrial establishments were dominated by Germany; the dominant political organization was pro-German, but the memory of the wrongs she had suffered at the hands of Austria, the ever-present humiliation of the thousands of Italians held in subjugation by Austria, the soul-stirring appeal for Italian unity and the comprehension that their liberty was in danger, led the nation irresistibly to an espousal of the cause of the Allies; and on May 20, 1915, when the Russians were being pushed back through Galicia, when the war was turning against the Allies, and when there was the least chance of her being on the winning side, Italy entered the lists to fight for the cause of civilization.

For over three years she waged a hard and desperate battle along a frontier of 484 miles—a line longer than the line on the western front—on the mountain tops, in the rugged passes, upon the plains, and against an enemy intrenched in strong places, seasoned to campaigning, and flushed with victory. She fought practically alone and unaided, receiving but scant praises for her victories and unjust criticism for every setback, and she drew upon her men and boys without stint.

Five million two hundred and fifty thousand of her sons were in the service. She was the only nation that called to the colors all of her available manhood. She was the only nation that had under fire for the period of a year her boys of 19, the only nation that had under fire her boys of 18, and the only nation that mobilized her youth of 17.

She sent to France 250,000 soldiers, where they fought for over two years.

She sent 60,000 soldiers to the support of the allied armies in Macedonia.

She sent 250,000 men to Albania against the invasion of the Austrians.

She sent 40,000 soldiers to the support of Gen. Allenby and the British forces in Palestine.

She sent 250,000 construction men to France, where they labored behind the lines for two years.

Her losses were enormous—560,000 killed and over 1,000,000 wounded, a greater percentage than that of any of the allied nations.

The heroism and valor of the Italian troops and the importance of their part in the struggle entitle them to much more recognition than they have received.

The setback they received in the Battle of Caporetto was similar to that of the French when they were driven back to the Marne, but despite the overwhelming forces of the enemy and the disheartening and depressing circumstances under which they fought they stemmed the tide.

The Italian armies were rallied between the Piave and on a line from Mount Grappa across the Asiago Plateau. They were literally fighting with their back to a precipice, for when they finally stopped the Austrian drive they were on the last ridge of the plateau. Four thousand feet below them lay the Venetian plains and beyond it the most prosperous section of Italy, whose capture meant the death knell of Italy.

In 1918, when we were all in despair because month after month and day after day reports came to us of allied defeat, the first note of cheer came when the Italians in June drove the Huns back across the Piave, leaving 46,000 prisoners.

The supreme triumph for Italy and one of the crushing blows to the Central Empires was the final battle in October, 1918, when, after four days of desperate fighting, the Austrian Army surrendered to the victorious Italian Army. The Italian losses in that battle were over 70,000.

Italy paid a greater price for world democracy than any other nation. She is entitled to receive from us and from the other allied nations unstinted support of all of her just claims.

We, as Americans, should have a keen sympathy and a spirit of friendship for the aspirations of the nation that played such an important part in the world struggle—a nation so imbued with the principles of democratic civilization and to which so many of our splendid citizens are bound by the ties of homeland.

Italy asks that the principle of self-determination shall be applied to Fiume, and that her most prosperous Provinces shall hereafter be free from the ever-present menace of attack from the eastern shores of the Adriatic.

For over a century Fiume and its adjacent territory have been independent and entitled to separate representation in the Hungarian Parliament. Its population is almost entirely Italian, all of its officials are Italian, and the people have without dissenting voice expressed their desire to be united with Italy. The fact that an extension of the boundaries of Italy to include Fiume will include some of the former subjects of Austria does not present a logical objection. A somewhat similar situation exists as in the case of Alsace-Lorraine. The Italians are seeking to have returned to them territory which was taken from them by force. Some of the territory has been populated by foreign peoples, as in the case of Alsace-Lorraine the Germans populated those Provinces with Germanic immigrants after seizing them from France. No one questions the right of France to a restoration of those Provinces. No one should question the right of Italy to seek the restoration of Fiume.

It ill becomes the President of the United States to assume to dictate to a nation that suffered as Italy has suffered that she shall not assert her just claims. For years she has been compelled to witness her own people in the Provinces taken from her by Austria subjected to oppression, indignities, and cruelties; she was compelled to submit because she was smaller and weaker than her arrogant and powerful neighbor. Now, when she has won the right to bring them back to her fold by sacrifice and indomitable courage, she should not be subjected to the arbitrary will of a person on the other side of the world who has assumed to set himself up as the arbiter of the destinies of nations and men.

Her native sons who have come to our shores have contributed much to our national advancement; they have built our railroads, great buildings, and public works; they have done the drudgery and the hard, unpleasant work on our public improvements. They and their sons are working together with all of us to make the land that was first brought to light by their countryman, Columbus, the land of fulfillment of the hope that was in their breast when they landed on our shores. They are contributing, by their intelligence, their thrift, and their industry, to its commercial and industrial greatness. They have become a part of the warp and the woof of our national life; they have given their boys to fight for our flag, and have ungrudgingly given of their earnings in answer to every appeal for support that has been made by our Government.

They have a right to expect that our Nation, that was saved a greater measure of sacrifice by the bravery and valor of their former compatriots, shall have our encouragement and moral support in the attainment of their national aspirations.

Objections to Certain Passport Clauses in Diplomatic and Consular Appropriation Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALBERT JOHNSON,

OF WASHINGTON,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 29, 1920.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization I deem it advisable to call the attention of the Members of the House to some legislation attached to the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation act, H. R. 11960. The report of the conferees will be found on pages 6707 and 6708 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for Tuesday, April 27. To the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill the Senate added a section providing for fees amounting to $11 for passports issued to citizens and those who have declared intention to become citizens, and so forth. Also the following provision:

From and after the 1st day of May, 1920, a fee of $9 for each visé of the passport of an alien and $1 for each application of an alien for a visé shall be collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States quarterly—

And so forth.

To these provisions the conferees have added others, notably the following:

SEC. 3. The visé of a passport of an alien may, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of State, be refused if the applicant would be dangerous to the public safety or obviously be liable to exclusion if allowed to present himself at a port of the United States for admission: Provided, That such applicant, if rejected by the officer of the United States to whom the application was originally made, may appeal to the Secretary of State: And provided further, That the issuance of a visé to an alien by a person duly authorized to issue such visé on behalf of the United States shall not relieve said alien or the steamship company transporting him from the operation of any provision of the laws of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I do not object to any legislation that will keep anarchistic or revolutionary, or pauper, or feeble-minded aliens out of the United States, but I feel obliged to call attention to the fact that the provisions added to the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill in conference, superimpose on the immigration laws a plan that will make friction, cause additional and unwarranted expense, and in a way nullify many provisions of the immigration laws.

One may say that the additional expense will be covered by the $10 fee. Perhaps so, but can one imagine the distress of an honest, worthy immigrant boy or girl—say from Scotland—who has paid full fees for the American visé on his British passport; who has crossed the ocean, only to learn at Ellis Island that he must return for want of $60 in cash? That boy has mistaken Uncle Sam's "visé" for Uncle Sam's "O. K." and I for one do not desire to be a party to such proceedings. Consular advices concerning prospective immigrants are all right, but consular rejections, even in so-called "obvious" cases, may be all wrong. Consular advice to prospective immigrants should be helpful, but a proposal for consular "thumbs up or thumbs down" should not be made into law on an appropriation bill.

In my opinion, the way to do this thing is to place the whole immigration and naturalization machinery in the Department of State, where that machinery can operate in connection with the passport machinery. Having adopted a passport system as a war necessity, we are not likely to abandon it. I introduced and advocated strenuously the bill extending the passport control act in so far as it applied to incoming aliens. That extension was granted for the lifetime of this Congress. It was agreed that the Sixty-sixth Congress would perfect a plan for control of immigration and enact same into law before final adjournment, March 4, 1921. To that end your Committee on Immigration and Naturalization has been working on a plan, and has actually under consideration a plan for transfer of the immigration service to the State Department, based on the following, which is one of the recommendations recently made by a subcommittee:

First. The Bureau of Immigration should be separated from such outside influences as have been, are, and will be continually at work in its present environment under the Department of Labor. It is therefore suggested that consideration be given the idea of removing the Bureau of Immigration and the Bureau of Naturalization and perhaps the Bureau of Americanization (now under the Interior Department) to the Department of State, where they could all work in close and harmonious relation with the Consular and Passport Control Service. The advantage of having the foregoing bureaus under one head will readily be seen, as they are all national as well as international in character and service, and would the more easily function under the Department of State than any other. The first two and last branches mentioned are closely affiliated, and it is believed would work to better advantage in a common cause if all were placed under the same departmental head.

The matter of immigration is not alone a labor question; it is a social and racial question, involving our relations with foreign countries and our future. Citizenship is a matter of State if anything is.

Further, the Committee on Immigration has taken testimony on plans for inquiry abroad concerning prospective immigrants.

I shall not discuss here the addition of a $10 fee to the $8 head tax. Neither shall I do more than mention my conviction—and even knowledge—that certain countries are right now issuing passports to dependent women and children to come to the United States, and even assisting in the guise of war bonuses, widows' pensions, and the like, and that they are withholding passports from able-bodied men who have been in the United States and who returned to fight with the colors of their lands when these countries went to war against a common enemy, but who would now return to the United States if they could. Our committee has some interesting evidence on this phase of the immigration question.

I favor a restricted immigration. I favor laws that will deport, and deport quickly, all undesirables. The United States is not ready to shut out all immigrants or to place unnecessary burdens on a reasonable number coming to us.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. T. W. SIMS,

OF TENNESSEE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, April 28, 1920.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I asked the Interstate Commerce Commission to furnish me a list of all railroads that were under Federal control that sought the benefits of the gratuity provided in section 209 of the transportation act of 1920, by which the war rental or compensation that had been paid, or that was to be paid, the railroads by the Government during Federal control, commonly referred to as the "standard return," was to be continued for six months after the return of the railroads to their respective owners, provided application for such gratuity was filed with the commission by March 15, 1920.

I also asked that a list of all railroads that were under Federal control that did not file acceptances under the provisions of said section 209 of the transportation act of 1920. These lists have been furnished as requested, and under the consent given me to extend my remarks I am including them in my remarks. I want to call special attention to the fact that the Southern Railway Co. would not accept the subsidy offered it by Congress, refusing to accept unearned money that would have to be provided by taxation from an already overtax-burdened people. The vast mileage owned or operated by the Southern is almost, if not altogether, in the Southland, the land of Dixie. It is most gratifying to the people of the South to know that the management of this greatest of all railroad systems in the South is so fully imbued with the spirit and courage of the people it serves. The Southern has said, in effect, that it will take its chances of survival by the service it renders to a generous and just people, but will accept charity from no source.

I hope and expect that the Interstate Commerce Commission and the State commissions will deal no less justly but gently with the Southern in its efforts to survive this period of readjustment and reconstruction. May I hope that many of the carriers that have filed acceptances will follow the example of the Southern and proudly refuse to receive one cent of the subsidy provided in section 209?

The Paper Shortage and the Relation of Advertising Thereunto.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES J. THOMPSON,
OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 22, 1920,

Relating to H. R. 12976; the paper shortage; taxing advertising; second-class mailing privileges; and revenue raising to discharge World War extravagances.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, December 8, 1919, Mr. ANTHONY, of Kansas, introduced into the House H. R. No. 10960, to limit the size of newspapers and periodicals entitled to the second-class mail rate.

December 15, 1919, hearings on the bill were held before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of the House of Representatives. At the opening of the hearings Mr. ANTHONY made the following statement:

No more critical situation ever confronted any industry in this country than that which the newspaper publishers are facing to-day. I am a publisher myself, publishing a country newspaper, and the situation was forced upon me, as it has been upon every publisher in my part of the country with whom I have come in contact, and at the request of a great many publishers of the Middle West I introduced a bill which you are considering to-day, which attempts to limit the size of newspapers and periodicals to be admitted to the second-class privilege, in order to conserve the supply of newsprint paper in the country, the demand for which to-day is greater than the apparent capacity of the manufacturers to supply.

The hearings which followed developed the fact that the big advertising agencies of the country were quite hostile to Mr. ANTHONY's bill and its suggestion that the supply of newsprint paper should be conserved by a reduction in the size of all newspapers. Many of the larger publications of the country, through the testimony of their representatives, assumed a similar position. Consequently, Mr. ANTHONY's bill is sweetly sleeping in the archives of the committee, done to death by similar agencies hostile to the Thompson bill, H. R. 12976.

January 20, 1920, I received the following letter from a publisher at my home town:

THE EXPRESS,
Defiance, Ohio, January 20, 1920.

Hon. CHARLES J. THOMPSON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: How about the newsprint situation? Is Congress going to allow the big dailies to hog the trough and do nothing about it? Is there any excuse for a shortage of print paper other than the huge consumption (so shortly after the war) by the big dailies? There was no surplus stock—strikes, shortage of coal have hindered the production of normal supply—hence the situation. With a Republican majority in Congress, no better testimony of the efficiency of their efforts could be recorded as far as newspapers are concerned than the passage of bills now before the House (or Senate) that will relieve the situation. As a Member, it may be possible for your efforts to tell mightily for relief. As a newspaper man, you realize what this may mean to the country. I trust you will do all in your power to see that matters receive the attention they deserve.

Cordially, yours, W. D. TRUMBULL.

March 8, 1920, I introduced House bill numbered 12906, "Providing additional compensation to all soldiers, sailors, marines, and others who served in the armed forces of the United States in the war against Germany and Austria and to provide the revenue therefor."

Realizing full well that Congress would have to tap new sources of revenue if the soldiers of the World War are to receive additional compensation by an act of the Congress, I introduced H. R. 12976, a second bill, to tax advertisers 10 per cent on space purchased in periodicals having second-class mailing privileges and a circulation of 5,000 or more and 15 per cent on advertising not included in the mails and using paper or cardboard. The limitation of circulation to 5,000 or more was to protect the rural press and open the way for a larger volume of remunerative "foreign" advertising to seek their columns.

Almost immediately big advertising agencies, organizations, and their trade journals hurled propaganda against the bill. It drew fire.

Printer's Ink, a splendid advertising journal of New York, sent its representative to the corridors of the Capitol; and, in its issue of March, 1920, devoted several pages to H. R. 12976, quoting freely from Members old in legislative experience, some of whom evidently did not take kindly to the purport of the bill. The bill was introduced as a suggestive measure to guide the committee as to ways and means to conserve the use of paper, cut down the deficit in second-class mail receipts, and possibly curtail extravagant investments in advertising space purchased by those who might have it in mind to use advertising as a means to avoid the payment of excess-profit taxes. Moreover, since it seems that many are grabbing money and indifferent to natural interests, there would seem to be no reason why the ex-service man who served his country should keep his hands out of the game, especially if a way could be provided to raise the money without too great a burden on the people. The purchase of advertising space is a sale, and why should it be exempted so long as it is now proposed to tax other sales throughout the length and breadth of the land? Many classes are thundering at the doors of Congress for raises in wages in the form of the $240 bonus bills, carrying $35,000,000; good-roads appropriations, carrying $78,000,000; additional pension bills for soldiers of the wars of 1861 and 1898, requiring $87,500,000; and, righteously, better salaries for school-teachers. And so it goes. The idea seems to be that the Federal Government can pick out of the air the money to do all these things. Many seem not to realize that the people support the Government and not the Government the people. The big advertiser, it is to be hoped, is not unwilling to shoulder his part of the burden. Congress constantly receives a flood of objections whenever any powerful interests find that there is a likelihood of their domain of activities being called upon to pay, and the Congress is constantly being importuned by interests that want it to do the things that if it does do the people themselves must pay for in cash.

PUBLISHING AND ADVERTISING.

Publishing and advertising now rank seventh in the country's industries, being exceeded only by iron and steel, slaughtering, foundries and machinery, lumbering, milling, and clothing. It is estimated that the revenues to publishers from advertising throughout the United States is approximately a billion dollars per annum.

Advertising may be divided as follows:

Retail advertising, embracing the announcements of merchants, large and small, in their own communities.

General advertising is found chiefly in magazines and reviews and in daily newspapers. Street cars, billboards, and bulletins are employed as accessories.

Mail-order advertising is found in the magazines, the farm and religious press, the newspapers, and in a class of cheaply printed periodicals known as "mail journals," having enormous circulation among people on farms and in villages who are not reached by more costly magazines and newspapers.

Agricultural advertising is similar to the mail-order advertising, and appears chiefly in farm periodicals, and exploits machinery, fertilizers, farm animals, stock foods, building materials, and farm supplies.

Trade-journal advertising appears in the numerous special publications devoted to manufacturing, retail and wholesale, commerce, finance, medicines and the professions, mining, transportation, and so forth.

Periodical advertising includes newspapers, magazines, reviews, trade, denominational, and farm publications, periodicals printed in foreign languages, theater and concert programs, and other publications, of which there are not less than 23,000 of all kinds. In 1914, the year prior to the World War, the output of printing and publishing in this country was valued at $810,000,000, of which it was estimated that fully $255,000,000 represented revenue from advertisements and periodicals.

Advertising in periodicals then exceeded receipts over subscriptions by $90,000,000. Advertising revenues of some of our great publications run into millions of dollars yearly.

H. R. 12976, which has attracted the hostility of big advertising, relates—

(a) To the effect of excessive advertising upon print-paper shortage.

(b) To the $72,000,000 annual loss to the Government in transportation of second-class mail.

(c) To advertising as an untapped reservoir from which the public debt and expenses of the Government might be, in part, reduced.

PAPER SHORTAGE.

Paper shortage is world wide, as evidenced by the following press dispatches, clippings, and comments scissored at random from the public press:

CONTROL OF NEWS PRINT RENOUNCED BY BOARD—ANNOUNCEMENT IN CANADA FOLLOWS COURT DECISION—SHORTAGE WARNING GIVEN BY PUBLISHER.

OTTAWA, ONTARIO, April 8.

The board of commerce has announced that henceforth it will not claim or exercise any control whatever over news-print paper in Canada.

The announcement follows the decision of the supreme court in the Price Bros. case, that news-print paper "was not a necessary of life" and that the powers exercised by the board of commerce as news-print controller were without jurisdiction and inoperative in law.

The board points out that the effect of the supreme court's decision is to render inoperative the order in council constituting the board of commerce.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, April 8.

American newspapers will be without print paper at the end of 10 years unless there is conservation of advertising space, declared Jason Rogers, publisher of the New York Globe, at a meeting of the Cleveland Advertising Club yesterday.

"The output of print paper is dwindling rapidly," he said, "and the outlook is that all the pulp mills of the United States and Canada will not be adequate to meet the demand, even if the supply of spruce timber holds out."

PAPER SHORTAGE ACUTE—UNCLE SAM IS ONE OF THE BIGGEST WASTERS.

More than 1,700 American newspapers and periodicals were forced out of business last year by the shortage of paper. The United States still has about 22,000 publications, but the casualty rate shows no signs of decreasing.

Five pounds of newsprint paper are now needed for every four pounds obtainable. The paper famine has produced famine prices. All over the country newspapers are suspending publication, combining with other papers, or cutting down their size.

The circulation of daily newspapers in the United States now averages 27,000,000 copies a day. Thirty-three pounds of newspaper are being printed yearly for every man, woman, and child in the country. It is an amazing increase compared with the 3 pounds of news print consumed per capita in 1880 or the 9 pounds per capita of 1894.

R. S. Kellogg, secretary of the News Print Service Bureau, says: "It takes 1½ cords of wood pulp for each ton of news print paper. Of the 6,000,000 tons of paper of kinds consumed annually, 2,000,000 tons goes into newspapers. The answer to the news print paper problem is one of forest conservation."

Senator SMOOT is leading a fight against waste of paper by the National Government, whose various departments are printing and circulating yearly about 10,000,000 copies of speeches in pamphlet form.

In three years the Treasury Department sent out 24,058,000 copies of McAdoo's speeches. Among thrilling pamphlets thus franked through the mails is one from the War Department dealing with the library of the Surgeon General.

PAPER SHORTAGE HITS PARIS—BOOK PUBLICATION SUSPENDED AND PAPERS ARE LIMITED TO FOUR PAGES.

PARIS, April 10.

The American newsprint paper shortage is reacting in France, with the effect of materially reducing the publication of new books and making it almost impossible for publishers to issue new editions of either popular, classical, or educational works.

In European countries now it is rare that a person is able to buy a new French book, and when he can, in most cases he finds that the book was printed in Leipzig or in Berlin. Schools and colleges here are having difficulty finding sufficient textbooks for their students, while the price of dictionaries has quadrupled in the last year.

French newspapers, which are limited to four pages daily, are protesting against what they consider a menace to the nation's literary prestige, and call attention to the vast amount of paper used by American newspapers. Until the adverse exchange situation is remedied, however, it is admitted that it is impossible for France to import a large amount of newsprint paper from America or from Canada and efforts are being made to increase the domestic output of news and book print paper.

Members of the Southern Press Association and the American Newspaper Publishers' Association and other similar organizations throughout the land have each vainly endeavored to conserve the supply of newsprint paper by mutual agreement among themselves to practice restraint by the cutting down of the size of publications; but the experience of the members of these organizations indicates that their hectic efforts were futile. Notwithstanding the efforts of these publishers to conserve their stocks of newsprint, the big advertising agencies and clubs throughout the country go merrily on boosting the advertising game.

The following news item is a tribute to as well as an example of their unceasing activities and splendid organization:

ADVERTISING CLUBS MEET—TWO-DAY CONVENTION OPENED IN CANTON—300 DELEGATES PRESENT.

CANTON, OHIO, April 10.

The Affiliated Advertising Clubs opened a two-day convention here last night with 300 delegates present from Rochester, Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Columbus, Hamilton (Ontario), Cleveland, and Canton.

Richard H. Lee, of New York, special counsel of the vigilance committee of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, addressed the opening dinner on "Advertising as a business agent."

Dr. Charles A. Eaton, Brooklyn, counsellor, also spoke.

December 15, 1919, Jason Rogers, publisher of the New York Globe, appeared before the Committee on the Post Office and Post

Roads of the House of Representatives, to testify concerning the Anthony bill. I quote extracts from his testimony:

Mr. ROGERS. I have prepared a statement, an analogous report, on the print paper used as in the Federal Trade Commission report, showing that in 1913 the total production of print paper was 1,655,000 tons in the United States and Canada. The total production for 1919 was 2,100,000 tons, an increase of 26.8 per cent in tonnage. Now, in this statement you will find some figures which indicate that the use of print paper in the circulation of large metropolitan newspapers has gone up very materially. All of this detail is taken from the official reports, showing how they have profiteered in circulation and advertising since the opening of the war.

* * * * * * *

I have in this statement a summary showing the use of print paper in the New York morning, evening, and Sunday newspapers, which shows the conservation under the order of the war industries board of the leading New York newspapers. That also shows whether they complied with the law or not. The averages for the first six months of 1918, and the first six months of 1919; also the average for the month of November, 1919. We will just take for example—you have the figures before you, gentlemen. One paper in New York was ordered to use 276.76 columns. During the month of November they used 486.8 columns, and another newspaper was ordered to use 256 columns; during the month of November they used 364.5 columns. And, for the public records, the Globe was ordered to use 65.75 per cent, and during the month of November we used 65.2 per cent, so we have kept inside.

Mr. RANDALL. For November.

Mr. ROGERS. No; all of the time. We started up——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). Has the war industries board ceased its activities?

Mr. ROGERS. They ran from August 12 to December 15, 1918; but we are still following their recommendations because it is good business to do so.

Mr. MADDEN. Have you had any opportunity to increase the number of columns, or are you restricting the number of columns because you can't help yourself? I think that is a fair question.

Mr. ROGERS. We can't get the paper tonnage. In 1916 we used 9,774 tons. On October 4, 1916, we told the International Paper Co. to cut our supply, and to allow us 700 tons from that time until the end of the year.

Mr. MADDEN. Let me ask you, if you could get the paper, would you increase the number of columns?

Mr. ROGERS. I would not. I believe this statement is backed up by the record. I have shown the figures. I believe it is good business to help the small publishers throughout the country. We used 7,902 tons one year, and the following year 7,942 tons; and this year we got back to 10,000 tons, which approximates what we had in 1916. I have an advertisement of the Chicago Tribune in the Nation's Business, which is mentioned here, stating that they used 670 tons of paper for one issue of the Sunday Tribune, "while the total consumption of newsprint in Canada with its hundreds of newspapers is 250 tons per day."

On the same day and date Mr. ANTHONY, a Member of Congress from Kansas, gave the following testimony to the House committee:

The CHAIRMAN. To what do you attribute the greatly increased size of the Sunday newspapers, and the greatly increased advertising?

Mr. ANTHONY. Mostly to the resumption of business activities which have been held up because of our participation in the war.

During the war a great many of our business enterprises were directly producing war material, munitions, and now they are going back into their normal commercial activities.

Mr. DUNBAR. Have you heard any suggestion that a good deal of these advertisements are the results of a desire to spend money in order to avoid excess-profits taxes?

Mr. ANTHONY. I have heard such talk, and I have also heard criticism that much of the size of the metropolitan papers was due to the advertisement of articles which could be denominated luxuries more than as necessities, and due to the fact that there is a great deal of money in the country.

Mr. MADDEN. After all, this is what you have heard, and it is not what you know, based on facts.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that all?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think that the situation is analogous, exactly, to the state that would confront us if we had only so much flour for our millions of people, and some people would try to grab all of it. Now, we have just so much news print, and the big publishers are trying to grab all of that paper. If certain people should undertake to get all of the flour, we would hang them, or prevent them from obtaining the flour by some drastic penalty. Now, the same situation applies here to the news print, and the Government should protect the small publishers.

Mr. Rogers and Mr. ANTHONY are both newspaper publishers. They deal with the situation relating to the scarcity of news print paper from the viewpoint of men actually confronted by serious conditions.

Newspaper publishers seem to think that the extraordinary sale of advertising space has some bearing on the paper shortage. Some even go so far as to state that advertising is being purchased by some who would evade the payment of the Federal excess-profits tax. The testimony of J. Medill Patterson, managing editor of the Chicago Tribune, along this line is illuminating. The statements of Arthur J. Baldwin are also interesting. He represents the McGraw-Hill Co., of New York, publishers of engineering journals.

STATEMENT BY MR. J. MEDILL PATTERSON, MANAGING EDITOR FOR THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE.

Mr. PATTERSON. Since the 1st of October we have cut 2,500 columns of advertising out of our paper. Now, the result of this is, to a considerable extent, in our city, and it is the same in all towns, that the advertiser that we have refused has gone across the street and used another newspaper. The result is that the other paper, the smaller paper that has not had so much advertising, takes on more advertising, and consequently consumes more white paper, with the result that there is not very much of a saving. The advertisers are now advertising very heavily on account of the excess-profits tax.

Mr. SANDERS. Do you think that the trade generally is using that means to reduce the excess-profits tax?

Mr. PATTERSON. I think everybody is doing it, including the newspapers.

Mr. SANDERS. You would not say that they are dissipating their profits, but it is because it is good business policy.

Mr. PATTERSON. And they can get it off of their taxes.

Mr. SANDERS. You don't know the names of any of those people; they say that it is a good investment; that next year maybe the taxes will be less, and they will have good will.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, you think there is a good deal of that being done to save excess-profits taxes?

Mr. PATTERSON. I think so. I think they are willing to let the Government pay their advertising bill.

Mr. HARDY. They are not doing it in order to spend the money to prevent the Government from obtaining the taxes, but they are giving the newspapers money, buying advertising from the newspaper because it is a good investment, advertising at 50 cents on the dollar.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is it, exactly.

Mr. HARDY. As a matter of fact, they are building up a business now, and they are making a lot of profit, and it will continue to roll around until the first thing they know they will have a very large amount of business.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is true. They are building up a trade-mark, or good will, for years to come. They can do it this year and do it more cheaply.

The CHAIRMAN They can do that because half of the money comes out of the Government.

STATEMENT OF MR. ARTHUR J. BALDWIN, REPRESENTING M'GRAW-HILL CO., PUBLISHERS OF ENGINEERING PUBLICATIONS.

Mr. BALDWIN. I do think that it would help a good deal if you abolished that surplus-profits tax and raised the tax in some other way.

There is another reason for that: Not only that it encourages advertisements, as I have said, but for this reason: It discourages any new enterprises. Now, ordinarily, if you want to go into business—men go into business to make money. Here is a great opportunity to make money in manufacturing newsprint paper; but it takes a couple of million dollars to do it. Not everybody has $2,000,000 to spend; the man who has that much is a man with considerable income. Now, if he takes $2,000,000, and if the taxes are so laid that he can only make a limited amount for himself in the first instance—which will be the effect of the surplus-profits tax—and then if a large part of that return to him is taken away by the income tax, so that all the enterprise will return to him is 6 per cent, then instead of going into the newsprint manufacture he will probably invest in current bonds. That is one of the respects in which great harm is being done in industry, because everything is being done to confirm existing monopolies, because it is very hard for a new man to get into business now.

Mr. MADDEN. Your idea, then, is that the effect of that is to take away the incentive to enterprise?

Mr. BALDWIN. Yes; to take away the incentive to enterprise. There is no greater field to-day for making money than in the manufacture of paper, because paper can be made from various things; it can be made from cotton; it can be made from wheat straw; it can be made from pulp wood, or from southern pine. The only thing is, when you start in a new enterprise, it takes initiative, and capital is not going into a thing unless there is going to be some return; and the incentive is cut off now by our system of taxation—unwittingly, of course—so that I believe nothing further can be done along this line.

Instead of restricting all the while, this occurs to me as a better idea: If you want to conserve sugar, for example, you would not enact a law that no hotel in Washington could accommodate more than 25 guests; and yet that is practically the effect of what this bill says to the advertiser, when you say that the periodicals shall only take so many advertisers and that the rest can shift for themselves.

Mr. MADDEN. The excess-profits tax was a feature of the war, of course?

Mr. BALDWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MADDEN. Everybody in public life realized—that is, everybody here realized—that excessive prices were being charged for everything being furnished to the Government during the war; and you could not stop them from making the excessive charge, but you could take it away from them.

Mr. BALDWIN. Well, I think that bill should be entitled "An act to confirm existing monopolies." You say, "We will not prevent his making profits, but we will take away his profits when made"; and that has a tendency to confirm monopolies, because, in the long run, the laws of economics, if you will let them operate, will work out so as to develop the industry in the proper way and to bring about new enterprises.

WOOD PULP AND THE TRUSTS.

"If the price of newsprint is to be kept at a reasonable figure," says J. H. Thickens, a chemical engineer in forest products, "more efficient methods of converting spruce into pulp must be developed or else a cheaper wood substituted for the former."

A letter addressed to me from the Bureau of Standards, Department of Commerce, gives accurate information concerning various raw materials that may be manufactured into paper, and indicates that ground wood pulp and sulphite wood pulp is being used in the manufacture of grades of paper other than newsprint. Therefore a reduction in the consumption of calendared, book, and various other papers used in magazines, books, and periodicals other than newspapers will indirectly affect the newspaper print supply by conserving the use of the raw materials from which paper in general is manufactured. The letter has a scientific bearing on this question, and reads as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
BUREAU OF STANDARDS,
Washington, April 9, 1920.

Hon. CHARLES J. THOMPSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: 1. I have received your letter of April 7 in reference to the use of spruce wood for newsprint. I will be glad to give you information in regard to the wood used in the manufacture of newsprint.

2. It is to be noted that before the manufacture of newsprint is possible the wood must be converted into pulp. In general, newsprint is made of a mixture of two wood pulps, which are "ground-wood" pulp and "sulphite" pulp. These are used in approximately the proportion of three to one. Ground-wood pulp is the cheaper of the two, and is used to make the body of the sheet, while the sulphite pulp is strong, and gives the necessary strength to the paper.

3. In the "ground-wood" process the logs, after being barked, are placed against a rotating stone roll and the fibers or slivers of wood are ground off from the log. The fibers are then washed and screened and are ready for mixture with sulphite pulp. In the case of the "sulphite" process, the logs, after being barked, are chipped into small pieces, placed in a large vertical boiler, and cooked with an acid cooking liquor under steam pressure. After cooking, the fibers are washed, screened, and bleached, and are ready for the manufacture into paper.

4. Although the greater part of the ground wood manufactured is used in the production of newsprint, there is also a vast quantity of it used in wall paper, box board, wall board, and container board. Although quite a large proportion of sulphite pulp is used in the manufacture of newsprint, the greater part of it is used with other fibers in the manufacture of book and printing papers and similar grades of paper. It is therefore to be noted that the newsprint manufacturer is not the only consumer of ground-wood and sulphite-wood pulp.

5. In 1911, 85 per cent of the wood used in the ground-wood process was spruce However, it has been found by the Department of Agriculture that various spruces, firs, and hemlocks of the West not now being used to any very great extent can be converted into ground-wood pulp. Color is the chief consideration and some of these woods, including jack pine, are not very suitable for newsprint. However, these can be used very effectively for box boards and the like. This would relieve the demand for spruce for newsprint.

6. In 1911, 59 per cent of the wood used in the sulphite process was spruce. The remainder was hemlock balsam, white fir, and sawmill waste. These woods, other than spruce, could be used possibly to a greater degree for news print, thus permitting the spruce wood to be used for other papers.

7. It seems possible that the use of spruce for ground-wood and sulphite-wood pulp began because of the plentiful supply or availability of spruce and the ease of conversion of this wood. It has been demonstrated by the Department of Agriculture (and published in their bulletins 343 and 624), that other woods may be used. It is to be noted, however, that the woods available as a substitute for spruce are, in general, in the West, while the pulp mills are in the East and North. In the West, on the national forest, there is cheap timber and water power which would be available. At the same time it would take from one to two years to build the necessary mills in the vicinity of the national forest.

8. During the past few years a large number of grasses or fibrous materials have been suggested and tested as paper-making materials. Although most of these materials can be made into paper it is a question whether it is commercially and economically feasible. Most of the attempts in the past have failed on a commercial basis, due to the excessive cost of collecting the raw material and converting it into pulp. The yield of paper-making fibers is also quite low. The chief factor in favor of such materials is that they are fast-growing materials, and in some cases are crop wastes. This factor is generally counterbalanced by their bulkiness, low yield, and cost of conversion. These materials might possibly be used for low-grade papers, and thus relieve the demand for spruce wood.

9. It is my opinion that the use of the woods in the West would be of considerable assistance at the present time in relieving the demand for wood pulp. In addition to this, a knowledge of the cause of the decay of wood and wood pulp would be very beneficial, since there is an estimated loss of $5,000,000 a year from this cause.

10. It is hoped that this information will be of some assistance to you and that if there is any further data you desire that I can give you, that you will call upon me.

Respectfully,

A. C. BROWN,
For the Director.

Investigations concerning the newsprint-paper situation have been conducted by the Sixtieth, Sixty-first, and Sixty-fourth Congresses. The most important and thorough investigation was held during April and May, 1908, by a select committee of six Members of the House of Representatives.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN was a member and chairman. The testimony and hearings of that investigation have been handed down to posterity in the form of six volumes of approximately 600 pages each, closely printed, and in size 6 by 9 inches. Mr. MANN is a Member of the present Sixty-sixth Congress. On the floor of the House recently he spoke on the subject of the print-paper situation. He is perhaps the best posted man in Congress on the subject.

He said, in part:

The situation concerning print paper in the United States to-day is very deplorable. Whether it can be remedied by a more equitable distribution I do not undertake to say. Newsprint paper is made out of ground pulp wood. Ground pulp wood is made out of spruce wood, in the main, with some balsam fir used with the mixture.

Spruce wood is very limited in area in the eastern portion of the United States. It does not do very much good to have large quantities of spruce wood on the Pacific coast or up in Alaska, because freight rates become almost prohibitive. The great supply of spruce wood on this continent is in Canada. Immense forests of spruce wood are there, and the paper mills supplying the newsprint paper for the United States are located principally in Maine, New York, Wisconsin, and Canada. Up to a few years ago we had a tariff on print paper of $6 a ton.

When the Underwood tariff law was passed it took off the duty entirely on print paper of a value of less than $2.50 a hundred. The result of all this has been that the paper manufacturers on the one hand have been afraid to establish new manufacturing plants in the United States because their supply of pulp wood would have to come from Canada, and they were afraid they could not compete on even terms in the manufacture of newsprint paper in the United States without any tariff at all. For a time after the passage and before the passage of the Underwood tariff law large companies acquired great areas of pulp wood alone in Canada, partly with the view of supplying their mills in the United States and partly with the view of establishing newsprint paper manufacturing establishments. But no one knew what the Canadian Government might do. It might at any time, if it chose, either put an export duty on pulp wood or an export duty on print paper, or an embargo on either one.

I doubt if there is any method of relieving the situation temporarily or immediately, but I think if we could, through international relations with Canada, satisfy the men who are in a position to go into the business and who have the money to put into the business that they could have suitable relations between this country and Canada with reference to the manufacture and bringing in of print paper, so that they would put up new mills in Canada, where the print paper can be most cheaply manufactured by the side of the pulp wood, which they now have under lease or ownership, there would be a plentiful increase of print paper.

Mr. MANN says the shortage exists simply because the demand exceeds the supply. My colleague, the Hon. EDWIN D. RICKETTS, of Ohio, has also made a thorough study of the situation. He believes in licensing the corporations manufacturing paper under a Federal charter. I quote extracts from a lengthy and able speech he made on the floor of the House the 19th of March, 1920:

I have heard a number of excuses made here by Members on the floor of this House with reference to the high cost of print paper, and one of the excuses I heard that seemed to be of some force and effect was this: That there was a lack of wood pulp and other materials which are necessary elements going to make up the manufacture of newsprint paper. I investigated that matter thoroughly, and I found that there was no reason on earth for offering such an excuse as that. Before I have finished my address I will be able to show you why that excuse is not justified. I have never been in favor of licensing the corporations of this country heretofore. I have rather thought that the Government ought not to go that far in controlling these large corporations, which have a tendency to combine their interests and thereby stamp out competition and fix the price of the commodities they manufacture. But the time has come when we must in some way determine who these stockholders are and with what corporations they are connected, and how much stock they have, what their prices are, and how they manage or conduct their business; either that or we must have a strict enforcement of the law that will punish those who violate the principles laid down in the Sherman antitrust law as supplemented and amended by the Clayton Act.

The cost of print paper for the past five years has been a subject of the greatest concern to the stockholders, owners, and editors of local and country newspapers. Many editorials have been written on this important subject, in which a general complaint has been made and in which it has been openly charged that the News Print Manufacturers' Association and the International Paper Co., and other paper companies subsidiary thereto, are controlling both the quantity of paper manufactured and the sale price of the same in the market, in open violation of the Sherman antitrust law, as amended and supplemented by the Clayton Act.

In addition to this general complaint through the press of the high cost of print paper, the Federal Trade Commission made a thorough investigation of the cost of newsprint paper in the year 1916 and in the first part of the year 1917.

As a result of this investigation, two cases were made out by the Government, through the Department of Justice, against more than 50 paper manufacturers, both of the United States and Canada, and on April 12, 1917, an indictment was lodged against these various companies charging them with flagrant violation of many of the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law. This case was disposed of in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York on pleas of nolo contendere, and the court imposed fines upon the defendants aggregating $11,000. It is needless to say that these fines were immediately paid by the defendant manufacturers. They were glad to pay them; and, while these fines are in a measure only nominal, yet they are significant, because the payment thereof is an admission of guilt on the part of the defendants. Guilty of what? Guilty of violating the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law. When? During the war period.

It is startling, indeed, to note that the paper manufacturers of this country and of Canada were in a great combine during the time that the United States and Canada were engaged in the great World War. Startling, is it not, to think of the fact that men who posed as American citizens and men who posed as Canadian citizens were making illegal and unjustifiable profits out of the newsprint-paper business at the cost of the blood of our soldiers who were fighting our battles in order to preserve our rights. War had been declared by the United States on April 6, and six days thereafter these various defendants were indicted. Indicted for what? For willfully violating a Federal statute for the sole purpose of fleecing the small newspapers in the country out of their money, in open violation of law. No doubt prior to that time they had made millions of dollars in the way of profits taken illegally from the owners and editors of small newspapers throughout the country, located in the smaller cities, towns, and villages.

At the same time the Government, through the Department of Justice, filed a suit in equity against these various defendants, praying for an injunction against further violation of the Sherman antitrust law. The civil case was disposed of by a consent entry in the form of a court decree granting the relief prayed for in the Government's petition. At the same time an agreement was entered into between the Attorney General and a number of manufacturers of newsprint paper which provided that said manufacturers would dispose of their product under certain terms and conditions during the period of the war and for three months thereafter.

Why did these various defendants consent to a court decree enjoining them from further violation of the Sherman antitrust law? It is because they were guilty, and by agreeing to the entry they admitted their guilt.

Of course, the indictment against these defendants and the institution of a civil suit for relief in equity by injunction had for a time the effect of reducing the price of newsprint paper. However, the reduction in price was short-lived. This Paper Trust combination could not forbear taking from its customers unlawful, unreasonable, and unjustifiable profits, and to-day the small newspapers of this country are forced to purchase newsprint paper at any price the Paper Trust may see fit to demand. This great combination of capital is still in the profiteering business. It is still pursuing its method of fleecing the owners and editors of the small newspapers throughout the country out of their money. They are determined to destroy them, law or no law. The most recent price quoted is 11 cents per pound or $11 per hundredweight. Many newspapers throughout the country, on account of the high price of newsprint paper, have been forced out of business. Many of them have been compelled to combine with other papers in order to be able to meet the price demanded for newsprint paper.

Mr. RICKETTS maintains that the cause of the shortage is because there is a Paper Trust and intimates the remedy is to so amend the antitrust laws now on the statute books as to penalize with jail or penitentiary penalties rather than mere fines. If there is a paper trust might not there also be an advertising trust? If there is a trust or combination in this or any other line it might be effective to so amend the Sherman antitrust law, as amended by the Clayton Act, as to substitute for mere nominal fines jail or penitentiary sentences against offending directors, agents, and officials of these corporations, together with jobbers handling their wares.

ADVERTISERS UNWILLING TO HELP PAY OBLIGATIONS TO SOLDIERS OF ALL WARS.

Advertisers opposing the Thompson bill to tax advertising say it will not reduce space used in advertising and thus automatically conserve paper. If this is true, they must have other reasons for opposing it. Is it because they do not wish their great business to help pay the burdens of the war debt and assist the liquidation of the mighty obligations to the soldiers of all wars, which the Nation is now seeking to liquidate?

Let us for a moment pause and contemplate what our Government as a result of its wars is obligated to pay out during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and how a tax on big advertising would help pay it. I will deal only with the items covering ex-service men and pensioners. The total amount estimated to be required for the fiscal year 1921 in the various appropriation bills and for the several departments of the Government for soldiers and beneficiaries of soldiers of all wars in which the United States has been engaged, including the payment of pensions, war-risk compensation, maintenance of soldiers' homes, medical and hospital treatment of soldiers, and vocational education, but exclusive of the construction of hospital buildings and the expense of maintenance in the District of Columbia of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and the Bureau of Pensions, is as follows:

Payment of pensions by Bureau of Pensions under existing laws	$214,020,000
Additional amount for pensions under Fuller bill	65,000,000
Additional amount required for pensions under Sells bill	12,500,000
Maintenance of national soldiers' homes	5,274,000
Aid to State or Territorial soldiers' homes	1,000,000
War-risk insurance, compensation for death and disability, miscellaneous expenses	197,865,600
Public Health Service, care of war-risk patients	10,000,000
Federal Board for Vocational Education, vocational training	135,000,000
Total	635,659,600

The power to tax is the power to dissipate and even the power to destroy. A mild tax on advertising, say 10 per cent, would have a tendency to teach advertisers to tell their stories in less space and thus conserve the use of paper and curtail the enormous waste now quite evident and admitted. Why should not the Government use its taxing power to endeavor to prevent needless waste of precious raw materials? Are we not the most wasteful and extravagant nation on the face of the earth? And should we not have some of the millions in revenue that such a tax would produce directly and save the people's money indirectly by cutting down the enormous losses sustained by the Post Office Department in carrying advertising through the mails at second-class rates?

ADVERTISING LARGE FACTOR IN TREMENDOUS LOSSES TO POSTAL REVENUES OF THE GOVERNMENT.

The Hughes commission estimated the loss to the Post Office Department by the transportation of second-class matter through the mails at $72,000,000 per annum. I will give you one concrete example to illustrate the point. The Saturday Evening Post, published by the Curtis Publishing Co., at Philadelphia, has a circulation, weekly, of 2,020,930 copies. Each copy weighs 20 ounces—a pound and a quarter. Seventy-five per cent of each issue is dispatched through the postal zones at an average of 2¾ cents per pound—second-class rates. And 2,020,930 copies weigh 2,526,162½ pounds, 75 per cent of which weigh 1,894,622 pounds, which are mailed to various points throughout the land at a cost of $52,132 per week to the publisher. It costs the Post Office Department 8 cents per pound to transport these mailings, for which it receives but 2¾ cents per pound for its services. Eight cents a pound means $151,569.76. The difference between that figure and $52,132, which the publisher of the Post pays the post office, is $99,437.76, which the Government is losing each week; or, the great sum of $5,170,765.52 per year. I think the Saturday Evening Post weighs more than 20 ounces to the issue now. If so the loss to the Post Office Department is still greater.

A copy of the Saturday Evening Post of March 27, 1920, contained 77 pages of reading matter and 113 pages of advertising pure and simple. Its reading-matter pages weighed ½ pound and its advertising pages ¾ pound to the issue. That is to say, that issue of March 27, 1920, approximated 1,010,465 pounds of reading matter and 1,515,697½ pounds of advertising carried through the mails at second-class rates at a tremendous loss to the Government. Do you not think a tax on advertising would curtail the number of advertising pages in the Saturday Evening Post and thus conserve paper, produce revenue to help pay the Nation's heavy obligations, and curtail the loss of money by reason of less weight for the Government to transport through the mails? Why is it wrong to tax advertising—an untapped source of revenue?

BUSINESS MEN OF THE LAND AGGRIEVED AT THE SITUATION.

The business men of the country feel aggrieved at the situation as is evidenced by the following letter reproduced from the hearings recently held before the Post Office and Post Roads Committee of the House:

FULTON, MO., May 1, 1919.

Postmaster General BURLESON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am sending you herewith copy of the Saturday Evening Post by first-class mail. You will see by the stamps attached how much the Government charges the business men of the country for carrying the same weight through the mails. If you will have one of your clerks look through this magazine you will find that it contains 182 pages, 112 pages of which are advertising, 70 pages of reading matter, some of which is worth reading, but very little of which is educational.

It is very hard for the business men of the country to understand why they are so grossly discriminated against in the matter of postal rates. Why the Government should subsidize such publications as this and hundreds of others which are even less worthy is past finding out.

Is it any wonder that the business interests of the country are finding fault with the administration for permitting such unjust and unbusinesslike methods to continue?

Why should the Government run delivery wagons all over the country carrying such publications as this at such an enormous loss? The advertising contained therein will probably assist in selling millions of dollars worth of goods. A large part of these goods will in turn go out through the mails by parcel post, thus imposing an additional loss on the Government which is passed on to the long-suffering business men of the country.

Is this because the business men have no way of protecting themselves, or because the magazines and other publications "put up a bluff" and "sandbag" the Government into acceding to their demands?

Mr. Burleson, this system is not businesslike or just. Can it not be corrected?

Yours, very truly,

THE CALLAWAY BANK,
W. C. HARRIS, President.

In this connection the testimony of the First Assistant Postmaster General, John C. Koons, is confirmatory and interesting. Appearing before the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads recently, he was questioned and testified under oath as follows:

Mr. RANDALL. You stated that a copy of the Saturday Evening Post had 112 pages of advertising. They get $7,000 a page for that?

Mr. KOONS. My understanding is that the rate is $10,000.

Mr. RANDALL. We will take the old figures, and on that basis they get $784,000 for the advertising in that issue of the Saturday Evening Post, and if they have a million subscribers—and they have got more—but I will say if they have 1,000,000 subscribers, probably that publication weighing a pound, at 10 cents a pound, instead of paying what they are now paying, would only pay out $20,000 in postage as compared with $784,000 revenue in advertising.

Mr. KOONS. I think you have made an error, Mr. Congressman, in the computation of the postage. You said $20,000; it should be $200,000?

Mr. RANDALL. That should be $200,000.

Mr. KOONS. The Saturday Evening Post is running from 180 to 185 pages in each issue. My understanding is that that is the maximum number they can run, that is, that they have facilities to print. I can not say that that is correct, but that is my understanding. It runs 100 to 105 pages of advertising. Their rates were formerly $7,500 a page, and my understanding is now that their rate is $10,000 a page. So that on a single issue of their magazine they receive more than $1,000,000 for the advertising, and on the number of pounds mailed we would lose about $150,000 each issue in carrying it through the mails.

Mr. PAIGE. A year?

Mr. KOONS. No; for one issue. I do not mean that the amount received for advertising is all profit—they receive $1,000,000 for the advertising, and the Government loses about $150,000 in carrying the issue.

Mr. GRIEST. Do you have any information as to the actual profit on such a number?

Mr. KOONS. We have never been able to get that.

Mr. PAIGE. They are perfectly solvent, however, so far as you know?

Mr. KOONS. As far as I know, they are in very good condition financially.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to me Mr. Curtis testified several years ago before the committee that their profit was $500,000 a year net.

Mr. HARDY. Before the income tax was put on, but since then their profits have increased.

Mr. KOONS. I think at the time this bill was under consideration, in 1917, their advertising rate at that time was $5,000 a page, and now it is $10,000, an increase of 100 per cent, and they are doing, I presume, twice as much advertising as they did then. So that it has evidently increased.

Mr. GRIEST. Of course, their operations are very much more costly.

Mr. KOONS. Yes; their operations are much more costly; there is no question about that.

The CHAIRMAN. But the cost of paper has not increased so much?

Mr. KOONS. No. I was surprised at their testimony before your committee on that.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the news print hearings?

Mr. KOONS. Yes, sir; the news print hearings, where I think they testified they paid less than 7 cents for their paper—perhaps it was 6¾ cents.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it not 5¾ cents?

Mr. KOONS. But on the basis of $150,000 a week loss to the Government on that one publication, the Government would lose approximately 52 times that, or $7,000,000 a year, in handling that one publication.

The Saturday Evening Post was simply used as an illustration of the advertising situation in the United States. I have received many letters from big advertisers and manufacturers condemning my bill, but it is quite evident they do not fully understand the situation in all its ramifications. Many of the letters received, in fact, nearly all from such sources, indicate they have been prompted to flood Members of Congress with "protests" at the behest or promptings of the big advertising agencies whose clients they are.

Letters to me are not all "protests," however. I submit one, which has an entirely different ring to it, as follows:

98 TRACEY AVENUE, NEWARK, N. J.

The Hon. C. J. THOMPSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Please accept my appreciation of your bill to raise revenue through taxing advertising.

In New York City, in the trade publication field alone, there are trade papers running from 150 to 300 pages of advertising and only 30 to 50 pages of editorial. Their sole purpose is evidently to fill the pockets of the publisher, for it is not humanly possible to read 200 pages of advertising each week. Papers like Iron Age, Power, Machinery, and American Machinist are so full of advertising that one has difficulty in finding the reading matter.

Ask your secretary to secure a copy of Iron Age and consider this immense weekly paper with advertising pages five to ten times the amount of reading matter.

Advertisers would certainly prefer this tax to a tax on surplus or individual incomes, and it could be collected more economically and without evasion.

There is too much waste in advertising, too much large space, too much money spent to evade income tax. Trade papers, almost without exception, do not give advertising agencies any commission, so that they could easily afford to pay 15 per cent. Other advertisers would simply use less space and get as good results.

You deserve the approval of all fair-thinking men.

Yours, truly.

MARCH 18, 1920.

REMOVAL OF TARIFF FOR TWO YEARS.

The Ways and Means Committee of the House recently recommended the Hull bill to remove the tariff on paper for two years. The bill passed the House, but it will avail nothing. Who is going to spend $2,000,000 to put up a paper mill and then have only one year to operate? It takes a year to erect a paper mill. What the Ways and Means Committee ought to have done long ago was to revise the taxation system, or attempt to revise it. There is a crying need for such legislation, but, of course, the next Congress and the next administration will have that all to do. March 24, 1920, the Business Men's National Tax Committee held a meeting in New York and passed the following resolution, and cut out some real work for the Ways and Means Committee:

Resolved, That we urge upon Congress to promptly repeal the excess-profits tax, the surtax, and all excise, special, and stamp taxes of the revenue act of 1918, and to substitute for those war taxes a gross sales, or turn-over tax, and a graduated income tax on personal incomes, with an increase of "specific exemptions" on personal incomes;

CONCLUDING OBSERVATIONS.

Congress is being criticized for not taking care of this, that, or the other wrong, including the scarcity of paper. The people are even cursing and damning members and departments of the Government for presuming to use print paper in disseminating knowledge, while the advertiser profiteers and howls when it is suggested that he be taxed for good and sufficient reasons. The country is upside down and beside itself. There is a tremenduous state of unrest. Everybody is against that which is and wish to set up that which is not. Big advertising continues to profiteer with impudence and imprudence while there is a tendency to mobocracy and revolution throughout the land.

My bill to tax advertising, introduced as a suggestive measure, may or may not be just the thing to correct the paper shortage; but it is the best thing I have yet seen introduced in Congress by any Member. It is constructive. It is an effort to do something and it is better to do something once in a while, though critics may say you are worng, than to sit idly down to do nothing for fear you may make a mistake or prove to be ridiculous in the eyes of meticulous meddlers.

I have sought to point out that advertising as now conducted in America is wasteful, extravagant, and an indirect loss to the Government from several angles. Why not tax it for the revenue it will produce rather than tax the necessaries of life—the clothes you wear, the food you eat, the refreshments your wife and children take? It is a pitiless and pusillanimous sight, a great Government taking pennies from little children at the ice-cream parlors and soda fountains throughout the land while big advertisers and big interests are in some instances escaping excess-profits taxes through advertising investments. Advertising is profiteering and glutting itself with a consumption of paper. The supply of spruce wood for paper pulp stands to be exhausted in less than 17 years at the rate it is being riotously and greedily wasted. A mild tax on advertising, such as is proposed in the Thompson bill (H. R. 12976) would have a tendency to put on the brakes. A mild tax such as proposed in H. R. 12976 would have a tendency to nurture, protect, and conserve the country press of the land and prevent it from being driven out of business. And advertising would be made to pay its share toward the maintenance of the Government and the discharge of the expenses of the World War which will probably aggregate, when all deficiencies are finally reported in to Congress, the tremendously enormous sum of approximately $61,500,000,000, which includes $10,000,000,000 with accrued interest loaned to our allies.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. TOM D. McKEOWN,

OF OKLAHOMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 26, 1920.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see that the bill providing for the allotment of the lands of the Crow Tribe of Indians contains a provision for the sale of the land of deceased Indians to discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines of the late war who will actually settle on said lands on annual payments covering a period not to exceed 20 years, and in this connection I beg to call attention to the fact that on May 23, 1919, during the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, I offered an amendment to that bill of similar import for the Five Civilized Tribes, to which amendment a point of order was sustained. The amendment offered at that time was as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Amendment offered by Mr. McKEOWN: On page 56, after the period in line 6, insert new paragraph, to read as follows:

"'Whenever requested by any restricted allottee of the Five Civilized Tribes or his legal guardian, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to offer for sale to the highest bidder at public auction, after due advertisement of the same, such parcels of land described in said request, under such rules and regulations as he may promulgate: Provided, That there shall be retained not less than 40 acres of the best tillable land, to be designated by said allottees or their legal guardians and approved by the Secretary of the Interior as a permanent homestead, which shall be inalienable and nontaxable in perpetuity so long as the same is retained as a homestead by said allottee or his descendants: Provided, That soldiers of the war of 1917 and persons who become bona fide residents of said lands may purchase the same upon installments of interest and principal, payable annually, for a period not less than 5 years nor to exceed 20 years: Provided, That the money accruing from the sale of said lands of the said restricted Indians be paid to and be under the control of the Secretary of the Interior, to be disbursed in his discretion in making permanent improvements upon the homestead and equipping the same for occupancy and cultivation, and for such other use and benefit of such restricted Indians as the Secretary of the Interior may deem best: Provided further, That said moneys when paid to said restricted Indians or their heirs shall be exempted from any lien for attorneys' fee or other debt contracted prior to the disbursing of the same.'"

At that time I called the attention of the Members of the House to the great necessity for some legislation of that character. Believing that the Bureau of Indian Affairs could grant relief in this matter by rules and regulations I addressed a letter on August 2, 1919, to the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which letter is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., August 2, 1919.

The honorable COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Department of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SELLS: Pursuant to my recent conversation with you in reference to a plan by which the restricted Indians who have large holdings of lands in Oklahoma may be permitted to dispose of a portion of their lands in order to better improve their remaining tracts for farming purposes, I wish to submit the following observations:

There are many cases where owing to their large acreage of agricultural lands held by restricted Indians, that the Indian is not encouraged to engage in farming himself but is content to rent or lease his lands for agricultural purposes, which results in encouraging the Indian in indolence and causes his lands to be worn out, and will ultimately result in a very great deterioration in the character and value of his holdings. A man who can only rent or lease lands in the natural course of events will endeavor to secure as large a crop production as possible during the time he is permitted to occupy the farm without regard to the results upon the land. On the other hand, there are in my district in Oklahoma many tenant farmers who will actually live on the lands and are engaged in farming and stock raising, who do not own homes, because they do not have an equal opportunity to purchase the same. They are not able to raise their families and accumulate sufficient money to buy outright a piece of land when the same is put on the market for cash or very short terms. Many of these men have lived in that country for a long time and have been hoping each year that they will have an opportunity to buy the lands they live on for a home. Of course, not all of them can be cared for, because some of them no doubt till lands that the Indian citizen would not want to dispose of.

I recognize the fact that there is no law at the present time by which the restricted Indian citizen could be compelled to dispose of any of his acreage, and I would not desire to ask for any such legislation, but in my judgment there are a sufficient number of them who do desire to dispose of some of their acreage in order to improve and make real homes out of the remaining portion of their allotments, where they themselves can engage in actual farming, and begin to teach and train their children in the business of actual farming and stock raising.

Heretofore the prime reason for the removal of restrictions and the selling of any portion of the acreage of restricted Indians has been the need of cash money to improve his home or to maintain himself during his lifetime, and for that reason there might be some reluctance in adopting the system I propose, but in view of the broad powers of discretion vested in your department in such matters I feel sure that in all cases where the ready cash is needed the same could be forthcoming from the purchase of these first-lien vendor notes by other restricted Indians who have large funds of individual money in the care of your department, and this would result in the returns of larger interest rates and upon security which I would denominate as gilt edge.

The method that I urge is that the restricted lands when sold should be sold to the highest bidder at public auction, with a provision that where the purchaser is a returned soldier, sailor, or marine, desiring the land as a home, or any bona fide farmer could purchase the same upon at least a 10-year term at a reasonable rate of interest. This method would result, in my judgment, in bringing to the Indian a large increase in the purchase price of his land, and at the same time give the actual farmer an opportunity to buy himself a home.

Where the lands would be sold for cash or on short time, the only way that the tenant farmer with small means can buy is to arrange with some person who has sufficient money to buy in the land and then resell it to him upon terms, and in these cases the man who furnishes the money buys the land for a less sum than the Indian could obtain if sold on time, and the tenant farmer oftentimes is compelled to pay a much larger price for the lands than he would if buying in the first instance at auction.

The passing of the title to the purchaser with mortgage or deed of trust as security would place the land on the tax roll of the States, thereby increasing the taxable property and assist in the material and rapid development of the community, and thus enhance in value the security. A liberal policy encouraging restricted Indian holders in getting good homes built, with good machinery, stock, and cattle at an early date, would tend to put them in a position to better take care of themselves and their children against the time that must ultimately come when all tribal connections must be severed and wound up and there will be no more per capita payments to look forward to in the future. Owing to the high prices of real estate now prevailing due to the demands of the products of the farms, it would appear to me to be an opportune time to inaugurate this system. In view of the fact that the returned soldier in Oklahoma, in many cases, would prefer to own a home in the vicinity of his own or his wife's kin people, this system would result in offering to him special inducement to embark upon the career of agriculture and stock raising.

One of the perplexing problems that confronts us as a Nation is the abandonment of farms and the overcrowding of the city, and any system instituted by the Government through any of its departments that would tend to turn the tide from the large cities to the rural communities will pay many thousandfold in final results. Believing as I do that home ownership in the United States is one of the crying needs of the day, I urge upon you, Mr. Commissioner, the importance of this suggestion, in the hope that it will have your favorable consideration.

With much respect, I am,
Cordially and sincerely, TOM D. MCKEOWN.

Failing to secure any action on the part of the Bureau of Indian Affairs touching this matter, I have introduced the following bill:

SECTION 1. That the Secretary of the Interior, with the consent of the Indian allottee, be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to offer for sale to the highest bidder at public auction, after due advertisement of the same, any part of the allotment of such restricted allottee of the Five Civilized Tribes: Provided, That there shall be retained not less than 40 acres of the allotment to be designated by said allottee and approved by the Secretary of the Interior as a permanent homestead, which shall be inalienable and nontaxable in perpetuity so long as the same is retained as a homestead by said allottee or his descendants: Provided further, That any person who will actually settle on said land and become a bona fide occupant thereon may purchase said land upon annual payments at a rate of interest not to exceed 6 per cent for a period not to exceed 20 years, as may be agreed upon under such rules, regulations, and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: And provided further, That no sale be approved to any person who owns at the time more than 160 acres of tillable land: And provided further, That the moneys derived from said sale, when paid to said restricted Indians or their heirs, shall be exempt from any lien for attorney's fee or other debt contracted prior to the disbursement of same.

This bill has been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, where I hope the same, in view of the provisions in this bill, will receive favorable consideration.

Mr. Speaker, the enactment of this legislation will afford the man who is tilling the soil and actually farming an opportunity to buy a home, and in view of the restriction against the approval of sales to any person who owns in excess of 160 acres of tillable land will mean that it will be sold to the small landowner, who will actually till the land. I can not urge too strongly that the bill be favorably reported and enacted into law.

The complaint that is lodged against the present method of disposing of these Indian lands is that the land speculator is enabled to procure the lands long before the actual farmer residing on the same is aware that the land is for sale. For that reason no piece of Indian land ought to be sold by the Government without due notice of the sale having been made to the occupant of the land and such occupant given an opportunity to buy the land for a permanent home.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ISAAC SIEGEL,
OF NEW YORK,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Thursday, April 29, 1920.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, for many years the people of the United States have protested most emphatically against the enactment into law of legislation which had never received full and proper consideration, either upon the floor of the Senate or upon the floor of the House, but which is added when bills go into conference.

Amendment 15 of the conference report contained in the bill making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service and reported in pages 6707 and 6708 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 27, 1920, contain provisos which practically reverse the immigration policy of the United States, and instead of having immigrants examined when they arrive here it places the power to exclude them in the hands of the American consular officials abroad. In addition thereto, it raises the fee for a visé of a passport to $10. The alien when he arrives here pays $8 under the immigration law, and although $10,000,000 of profit above all appropriations have been made from immigration, this additional burden is to be placed upon immigrants coming here when the country is demanding and needing more labor. Exemptions are made for Canada, Mexico, Cuba, and other adjacent territories. In addition thereto, the attempt is made to repeal that part of the act of March 2, 1907, relating to citizenship.

The House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization has been holding hearings and giving the matter very thorough and close attention. This is entirely new legislation, and the attempt is made to establish once again a very bad precedent. From the beginning of this Republic up to date American citizens have always been permitted to leave the United States with or without a passport, in their own discretion. Now every American citizen desiring to go abroad will be compelled to obtain a passport and pay $10 for it. When the attempt was made to raise passport fees to $5 in the House it was ruled out of order by the Chair, both in the Committee of the Whole and in the House, yet this new legislation making it $10, which the House has not had the opportunity to either consider or discuss, is about to be enacted into law unless contrary action is taken by the House when the conference report comes up for consideration.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM E. MASON
OF ILLINOIS,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Tuesday, April 20, 1920.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, after listening to the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee tell why we should appropriate three hundred million for the railroads and should not appropriate a billion for the relief of our soldier boys, I feel I can not be silent and must protest against some of his conclusions. He says, "Do you want to reduce the high cost of living?" I answer, "Yes; and I want the soldiers who fought for us to live while we are reducing the high cost of living." We took these boys away from their work and kept them away while those at home were making the highest possible wages. We bring them back and set them going in the race for life handicapped. They ask no charity; they ask to be treated as well as you treat the railroads in this bill. He tells about the badge of service being greater than the badge of bonus. True, they have the badge of service; they earned it; we can not take it away. We should wear the badge of gratitude. The people believe in it. The gentleman from Iowa would place our boys on a "pinnacle of glory" on account of their sacrifice. Bread and meat do not grow on "pinnacles of glory." Why not let the railroad owners make some sacrifice and live on pinnacles?

You took over the railroads, gave them full pay, and now pay for all losses. No sacrifice there. You passed a bill here the other day turning back their property and changed the law under whip and spur and guaranteed 6 per cent on the value of their property. The value of their stocks has been gradually increasing. No sacrifice there.

Now, it so happens they both appear before us, the railroads and the soldier. Neither one of them beggars, but both asking for justice. You say to the railroads, "Here is three hundred millions on account," and to the boy who asks simply to be made partially even for his losses, "Hop up on a pinnacle." The railroads say, "Thank you, Mr. Congress," and the boy says, "Thank you, I prefer potatoes to pinnacles."

In conclusion, when you made admirals and generals at the close of the war you spent thousands of dollars in increased pay. You put them on a pinnacle, but there were potatoes and bacon and eggs on their pinnacle. We did right. Why stop now? We began at the top and stopped; now I am told we are to begin at the bottom and stop, leaving out the officers. I can not and will not support such a proposition. That would be class legislation of the worst sort. I do not know a single officer who did not make a financial sacrifice. I know a major—I see no objection to giving his name; it is Maj. Ridgway, of the One hundred and thirty-second and part of the time One hundred and thirty-first United States Infantry. He was decorated by our Government and by France for bravery, for actual service in action. He is still seeking employment to support his family. He is not alone; he is one of many.

I know many officers who came back poorer than they went away. They ask no charity. Treat them just as you treat the railroads and make them at least partially even. I am told that it is intended to make a rule which will prevent even a vote on an amendment which I shall offer including officers. I hope I am misinformed, for I feel it my duty to oppose such a rule.

The adoption of such a rule means that by a majority of one or two our committee fix a bill and refuse a majority in the House a chance to amend it so it will include all. This is Wilsonian democracy. I am not for it.

I hold here a letter from President Sperry, of the Private Soldiers and Sailors' Legion. He takes fair ground of an equal lump sum "to all privates, officers, and nurses alike." He pleads for the bonus bill to stand alone, and "treat all alike," and says truly "any attempt to divide the men into classes is bound to have a bad effect." I agree with him. He may be "only a private," but I recommend you to read his statement before the committee for common-sense statement. To include the officers will cost more, you say. Yes; of course. When you declared war you taxed our people billions upon billions in money, you filled over 70,000 graves in France with American youth, you broke the hearts of American women—mothers and wives. If anyone dared to suggest honest and careful expenditure of money, your favorite answer was, "Win the war and damn the cost." Now that the war is won by our soldiers, with the Government pocketbook open to save the railroads from loss, and we ask the same treatment for the soldiers, the patriotic economist says: "We have won the war, and that will cost too much."

Gentlemen talk about liberal treatment given to our soldiers. I am familiar with pension legislation for 40 years. We have not been liberal, either to the Civil War, Spanish War, nor to the World War veterans. Laws are still on our books which discriminate against the enlisted man in favor of the Regular Army. I do not believe we do too much for the Regular Army, but we have done too little for the National Guard, the volunteer, and the drafted man. Please do not tell me we are "catering to the soldier vote." We are appealing to the American conscience. I do not believe in waiting for Decoration Day to glorify our dead soldiers. We can show a greater honor for the memory of our dead by dealing justly with their living comrades. Gentlemen say, "They will spend it for luxuries," and so forth. Well, Mr. Speaker, we trusted them to defend the honor of our country in battle; we ought to trust them to spend the money we owe them.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WHITMELL P. MARTIN,

OF LOUISIANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, April 20, 1920.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I am most pleased to see that both House and Senate have retained in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill the item increasing the appropriation for the sugar work being conducted by the Bureau of Standards from $20,000 to $30,000.

The initial appropriation for this work was made in 1918, and was inserted in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill by Senator SMOOT, of Utah, and I joined in urging the conferees of the two Houses to retain this appropriation. Subsequent developments have shown that this has been a splendid investment on the part of the Government.

The appropriation for 1918 and 1919 was $20,000, but the development of this work proved of such far-reaching importance to the sugar industry, and the demands made upon the Bureau of Standards were so great and insistent, that an increase of this appropriation became imperative, and the Appropriations Committee of this House, when the matter was presented to them, agreed to raise the appropriation to $30,000.

I have followed this work with deep interest, and at my request the Bureau of Standards has kept me informed on both the scope and progress of this work.

Believing that the country should know of the splendid work that has been done by this bureau with this small appropriation and should be informed of its far-reaching importance to an industry the importance of which is now being realized by the world, I shall give some facts and figures which I feel will prove of general interest.

MEMORANDUM ON THE SUGAR WORK OF THE BUREAU OF STANDARDS.

Perhaps no single world industry has been so completely disorganized and disrupted since 1914 as the sugar industry. About one-half of the world's output of sugar came from beets grown in Europe. With the opening of the great conflict 50 per cent of the available supply was practically eliminated, and the European output is to-day practically no greater than at any time during the war. It is thus not to be wondered at that the domestic sugar industry in the United States was suddenly called upon to increase its output in every conceivable way. The same applied to Cuba and the remainder of the West Indies and other North and South American countries. As a result of this inevitable and necessary expansion, the sugar organization of the Bureau of Standards has had most unusual and unexpected vital demands made upon it for service to the public and to the industry.

STANDARDIZATION AND DEVELOPMENT OF APPARATUS.

All sugar the world over is bought and sold on the basis of tests on a complicated optical instrument known as the saccharimeter. It permits of quick, easy, and accurate testing of sugars as to their sucrose content. For many years Germany, due to the superiority of her product, has had a practical monopoly on the production of saccharimeters and accessory apparatus. No instruments of this character have ever been successfully constructed in the United States. The making of the difficult optical parts has never been understood in this country. There has thus been since 1914, in spite of the enormous expansion of the sugar industry, no new saccharimeters available. To meet this desperate situation the Bureau of Standards during the war began investigation of the problems incidental to the manufacture of the saccharimeter, such as cutting and polishing quartz, Iceland spar, and other optical materials, and of locating sources of supply for these materials. From what appeared to be a hopeless situation, the bureau was able to successfully solve, one after another, the many problems incidental to the construction of the modern saccharimeter. As soon as this was accomplished the bureau began to readjust and restandardize discarded instruments for the industry, with the result that during the past few months alone saccharimeters, with a market value as instruments of more than $100,000, have been adjusted and standardized and returned to the industry. The value of these instruments to the public and to the industry can scarcely be estimated. At the same time, the bureau has taken up this problem with the various American manufacturers and rendered to them the assistance necessary to enable them to get a start in the manufacture of this class of apparatus. An American saccharimeter industry will therefore soon become an accomplished fact. So great have been the demands on the bureau for work of this character, and especially for the standardization of saccharimeters, which are vitally necessary to our enormously increased production of sugar, that the small appropriation of $20,000 available this year has been wholly inadequate.

COLLECTION OF REVENUE ON SUGARS.

The Bureau of Standards supervises the scientific work of the customs laboratories of the Treasury Department in the collection of the revenue on sugar, amounting this year to about $90,000,000. In this work it is vitally necessary to constantly maintain the work of the different laboratories on a parity in order that imported sugar will pay the same rate of duty, no matter at what port it may arrive. Such a delectable condition has been brought about, and practically all expensive litigation and possibility of fraud eliminated by maintaining at the Bureau of Standards a check laboratory, where each 24 hours, with every facility known to science, a sample of sugar is tested from each of the customs laboratories. The local tests at the ports on the same sample are required to check with the results of the tests made at the bureau. Ever since 1914 the amount of imported sugar and molasses has been steadily increasing, and the funds available for carrying on this work at the bureau have become wholly inadequate. An increase is imperative or the work must suffer.

SPECIFICATIONS AND DEFINITIONS OF REFINED SUGARS.

The sugar industry is the world's oldest scientifically conducted industry, but in spite of this fact there has never been a set of standard specifications and definitions for the various grades of refined sugar. As a result both the consuming public and the honest manufacturer have suffered. The dishonest manufacturer has taken advantage whenever he saw fit to substitute an inferior product for that which the purchaser would like to have obtained. With a portion of the small appropriation which Congress made available for sugar work last year the bureau set about the difficult task of preparing scientific standards and specifications for refined sugars. At the present time there are more than 40 such sugars on the market in this country alone. The amount of work involved in this task is very great, and a number of difficult research problems in connection therewith require solution. In spite of these facts the progress of the work has been very satisfactory, but it will be impossible to carry the work through to a successful conclusion unless additional funds are available. The establishment of these specifications and definitions seems to be about the only way that the purchaser of sugar can succeed in getting what his contract calls for. The term "refined sugars," covering as it does all of the 40 sugars previously mentioned, is so broad and elastic that the seller is able to make substitutions at will.

STANDARDIZATION OF QUARTZ-CONTROL PLATES.

In order to insure the results obtained in the daily use of the saccharimeter being reliable, the instruments are standardized locally several times a day by the use of standard quartz-control plates. These control plates have a fixed and unchangeable value in terms of sugar and permit of the user obtaining the daily correction for the reading of his saccharimeter. The Bureau of Standards has become the recognized authority for the standardization of quartz-control plates to such an extent that foreign manufacturers send their plates to the bureau to obtain their international value. As a result of the expansion of the sugar industry, the demands on the bureau for standardizing the quartz-control plates of the domestic industry have greatly increased, and additional funds are necessary to carry on this work.

STANDARDS FOR THE ARMY MEDICAL SERVICE.

During the war the use of a number of the so-called rare sugars has enormously increased for bacteriological and medical purposes. These sugars are exceedingly costly and difficult to obtain, the principal reason being the lack of standard specifications and knowledge of their physical constants. It is therefore necessary, in order to standardize these sugars for this work, to measure their physical constants. Once this data is available the manufacturers in this country, who are anxious to develop the rare-sugar industry, will have definite standards to work with, and these costly materials, for which we have been dependent on Germany, will be supplied by a domestic product. This work is so important to the general health of the Nation, and particularly to the Army hospital work, that funds should at once be available to permit of the necessary research.

SCIENTIFIC CONSTANTS OF THE SUGAR INDUSTRY.

The fundamental constants upon which the testing of sugar is necessarily predicated, as well as the analytical laboratory work and factory control, have been investigated by the Bureau of Standards as rapidly as funds would permit. The amount available for this work has been growing less and less, owing to the demands for emergency work as a result of changed conditions due to the war. The most elaborate, careful research work is necessary in the determination of these constants. The bureau should have a fund of not less than $10,000 annually for work on sugar constants alone. As a result of the determination of the value of one constant, namely, the 100° point of the saccharimeter, an error of more than one-tenth of 1 per cent was discovered. As a result of this error, the Government has for many years been losing more than $70,000 annually in revenue, and the producers of sugar have lost many millions of dollars. The bureau has restandardized all of the instruments in the United States Customs Service and corrected this error, with the result that the revenues are now increased annually from this one fact alone by two and one-half times the small sum which has been available for the bureau's entire sugar work. All instruments and apparatus coming to the bureau for test and standardization are also now standardized on the new and correct value, with the result that the producers of sugar are obtaining for the first time just compensation for their product.

STANDARD TABLES.

The standard tables used throughout the sugar industry and in analytical laboratories have not been revised in many years. The demands for this work are most pressing, and during the past year an attempt was made to start this work. Lack of funds has prevented its being carried to a successful conclusion.

WORK DOES NOT CONFLICT WITH BUREAU OF CHEMISTRY.

The sugar work at the Bureau of Standards is confined to such physical and chemical work as is incidental to and necessary for the preparation of standards for the Government, the public, and the industry. There is no other known Government activity whose work could conflict with this work. The only other Government bureau which is even interested in the subject of sugar is the Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture, which has under its jurisdiction the enforcement of the pure-food law. The Bureau of Standards necessarily does not touch upon any of the problems incidental to the use of sugar as a food, such as the food value of sugar, the effects of adulteration, and so forth. The bureau's work is largely physical, and pertains naturally in a great degree to the determination of the physical constants of the sugars. It is perhaps unnecessary to state that the bureau is not interested in the agriculture of sugar.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM B. McKINLEY,

OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 1, 1920.

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have noticed that the Senate is about to consider the budget bill which passed the House some weeks ago. This leads me to the hope that within the very near future we shall have on the statutes an adequate law for the control of our Government's fiscal operations, a law which will bring income and outgo into a relationship with one another. In connection with the pressing need for such a law I have been very much interested during the last few weeks in a series of articles on budgetary reform printed by the Washington Herald. These articles, eight in number, were written by Mr. Elisha Hanson, formerly assistant Washington correspondent of the Chicago Tribune and now clerk to the Senate's special committee on the budget. They are filled with information which should be of value not only to Congress but the country as well. Although written impassionately and without political bias, they disclose some startling facts relative to the financial history of our country. One of these which struck my attention is that we have never had an administration of either or any party which seriously has given its attention to economy. Congress, although criticized in the press and by many public speakers, is the only branch of our Government, as Mr. Hanson points out, which in the past has effected savings in Government expenditures. Mr. Hanson further indicates that in the future, as in the past, the people must look mainly to Congress for protection against improper demands of the Government.

THE NEED FOR A NATIONAL BUDGET.

(By Elisha Hanson.)

Article No. 1.

With practically the rest of the world bankrupt or on the verge of bankruptcy, the United States Government will have to take a more drastic hold on its financial resources in the near future if it desires to avoid the same predicament. This does not mean that President Wilson or Mr. Houston, the new Secretary of the Treasury, will have to mend their ways any more than it means that Congress will have to change its ways.

If America is to avoid national bankruptcy, Congress and the Executive must get together on a real program of fiscal administration. The Executive must see to it that its demands for money are cut down to the lowest point commensurate with proper service. Every loose end of governmental spending must be tied up and every source of wastage stopped. Some moves in these general directions have been made but as yet neither Congress nor the executive branch of the Government has grappled with the situation as it should.

BIG INCREASE ASKED.

The war ended, so far as fighting was concerned, on November 11, 1918. Yet the executive branches of the Government which are largely concerned with peace-time work, such as the Department of Agriculture, and which seized upon the war to spread themselves all over the map, have asked Congress to grant them an increase in appropriations over the last year of the war amounting to the enormous sum of $665,568,606.41—a sum almost equal to the total cost of the Government 15 years ago.

Only two departments of the Government—the Navy Department and the Post Office Department—are seeking smaller appropriations for the ensuing fiscal year than they had last year.

Congress is not going to grant this enormous increase in appropriations. That much is certain. According to Mr. MONDELL, the leader of the House, Congress will chop at least $1,000,000,000 off the amount sought by the departments.

NO MACHINERY FOR "CHOPPING."

But in chopping it off Congress will hack here, there, and elsewhere without any scientific consideration of the whole amount of money needed for the operation of the Government and without any consideration, say, as to the greater desirability of an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture as compared with an appropriation for the Department of Labor. Congress has no machinery now for the consideration of such problems and as yet it has not indicated an intention of setting up such machinery.

Congress will proceed to chop appropriations just as it has chopped them in the past. Each committee which considers appropriations will cut down items or eliminate items in the bills before it. But these committees will not confer with other committees, and there are between 25 and 30 of them, all told, which are handling other appropriations.

NINE BILLIONS NEEDED.

Mr. MONDELL, in a speech before the House several weeks ago, graphically illustrated the problem before Congress. He informed the House that for the ensuing fiscal year the United States is facing the necessity of raising the stupendous sum of $9,086,358,574.62.

As against this, the Secretary of the Treasury, in his annual report, estimates the receipts of the Government from all sources at $6,035,850,000.

If Mr. MONDELL'S figures are correct—and it is not unlikely that they may be enhanced still further—and if the Secretary's figures are correct—and it is probable that they are optimistic—the United States on June 30, 1921—16 months away—will have a hang-over deficit for one fiscal year of $3,050,508,774.62.

This deficit is greater than the entire public debt at any time in the history of the country prior to April 6, 1917, when we entered the World War. The interest on it alone will be greater than the amount of money needed to run any one of several of the Government departments prior to our entrance into the World War.

ALLIES UNABLE TO PAY INTEREST.

At the time Mr. MONDELL made his speech it was rumored but it was not certain that our allies and associates in the World War would default on the interest on the money which we advanced them during the conflict and following the armistice. Since then their inability to pay has been made known, and the Secretary of the Treasury has asked authority from Congress to fund over these interest payments for several years, adding them to their total indebtedness.

This means that approximately $500,000,000 in interest due the United States will not be paid during the time of funding, and that the American Government will have to raise just that much additional money by taxation during each of the funding years. The loans to the Allies were made through an exchange of credit. We loaned them our bonds and took their bonds as security. They are unable to meet the interest payments on their bonds, which our Government holds as security, but the United States must pay the interest due to the American people who bought the Liberty bonds which were loaned to foreign Governments.

BURDEN ON AMERICAN PEOPLE.

The longer the Allies default in their interest, just that much greater will be the postwar burden of taxation on the people, and just that much higher will be the cost of living in this country. Historically it has been proved that proportionately as taxes increase the cost of living goes up, no matter how the taxes are levied, and that, conversely, when taxes go down the cost of living will go down.

Loaning to foreign Governments now has been brought virtually to a stop. Except for the food loan to Austria and Poland, it will not be renewed, whatever the demands upon us may be, for the people and Congress have expressed their opposition to further foreign loans.

From the above brief outline it can be seen that the Government faces a tremendous problem. It must bring its outgo within its income. It must make provision for the retirement of the tremendous war-time debt. It must provide for a real control by the Executive of outgo as well as income, such control to be supervised by Congress.

And, in addition to this, it must, as it has had to do following all prior wars or crises in the country, make plans for the funding of the enormous war-time debt at lower interest rates just as soon as business and industrial conditions warrant such a step.

For the first time in the history of the country its financial condition is such that the people are thoroughly awake to the dangers confronting it. The people are willing to help. Congress is willing to help. The President is willing to aid. The problem is for all three to get together. That problem will not be solved in a day or a week or a month. It may not be solved in a year; but it will be solved or we shall go bankrupt, just as other countries virtually have done.

Article No. 2.

Financially the United States to-day occupies with respect to Europe the same position which Europe occupied with respect to us at the close of the Civil War. We have a tremendously favorable trade balance; so favorable, in fact, that it is dangerous. We are a great creditor nation and we do not care to assimilate any more European loans.

At the close of the Civil War the trade balance was against us and in favor of Europe. We owed Europe some money—not so much as some of our financiers would have had and more than others desired. The Government would not have objected to raising additional funds in Europe, but European Governments and European financial experts were skeptical as to the future.

COST OF WORLD WAR.

Thus far and only thus far, however, will the comparison hold good. Bad as the situation seemed then, there are elements in it to-day which make it far worse, notwithstanding the fact that we are a creditor nation and that we have a tremendous balance of trade in our favor.

According to the last annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury, the total cost of the World War to the United States, including foreign loans, was $32,830,000,000.

Foreign loans on October 31 last amounted to $9,406,000,000. If these are subtracted from the aggregate cost, as set forth by the Secretary, the net cost would be $23,424,000,000. But this is a cost which is figured only for the months of actual fighting—that is, from April, 1917, to November, 1918.

Inasmuch as the foreign loans have not been paid and this country must carry not only the loans themselves but the interest due upon them for several years, it is but proper therefore to figure the cost of war at the figure set out by Secretary, now Senator, GLASS at $32,830,000,000.

STATISTICS ON EARLY WARS.

The Revolution, through which we won our independence, cost, in round figures, $80,000,000—less than we spent in any one week of the World War following July, 1917.

The War of 1812 cost, in approximate figures, $128,000,000, or just about one-tenth of what it cost the United States to wage war against Germany during the one month of June, 1918.

The Mexican War cost was only $63,605,621. In fact, during the period of May 1918, to November, 1918, our Mexican War expenditures would have been eaten up in about 36 hours.

The Civil War, raging more than four years, was about as expensive in money as two months of the World War, the aggregate cost of the conflict to the Union side being $3,500,000,000.

No accurate data are available as to the exact cost of the Spanish-American War, but it is safe to say that it was well under $500,000,000.

DEBT TENFOLD GREATER.

These figures serve to show how enormously expensive it was for America to enter the World War to preserve itself against aggression from Germany. They further show that the national debt which has been piled up as a result of the conflict is far greater, proportionately, than at any time in our history.

In other words, while our population now is slightly more than three times that of the country at the close of the Civil War, our debt is more than ten times greater than the debt then.

The annual interest charge on the public debt, as it stood on June 30, last, was $1,052,333,621.15—a sum greater than the total expense of our entire Government for any single year of its history up to 1916. Add to this approximately $500,000,000 interest due from the Allies each year which they can not pay, and our interest obligations alone are half again as much as our entire expense of government before we entered the World War. We must meet these before we provide for our normal expenses.

PEOPLE AWAKENING TO PROBLEMS.

Up until the date of our declaration of war against Germany the average man and woman in this country had never been brought into direct financial touch with the Federal Government. Their pocketbooks had never been pinched. We got along easily by raising several hundred millions from customs, an equal number of millions from internal revenue, and a little later additional millions from rich people who came within the provisions of the first income-tax laws.

The situation is vastly different to-day. There is hardly a man, woman, or child who has not been brought into direct financial touch with government.

NONE ESCAPED TAXES.

There was not a man, woman, or child in the country, who lived one day during the last year, who didn't pay an indirect tax of one kind or another to the Government.

The demand is coming from all sides now for a change in policy, for a reduction in taxation, for a reduction in the high cost of living, and for a more efficient financial administration of our affairs.

The per capita receipts of the Government from taxes and the per capita disbursements of Government funds increased steadily from 1860 to 1917—out of proportion, in fact, to the increase either in wealth or in population, but still not enough to awaken any wide interest in the trend of affairs. In 1860, the year before the Civil War broke out, the per capita receipts were $1.78 and the per capita disbursements $2.01.

GREAT DEFICIT CREATED.

In 1916, the year before the World War broke out, the per capita receipts were $7.62 and the per capita disbursements $7.08.

In 1918 and 1919, however, the receipts far exceeded anything ever dreamed of by American public financiers before, but at the same time the disbursements completely ran away from the receipts and piled up a tremendous deficit, which had to be met by the creation of our gigantic national debt.

During the last 20 years State and municipal taxes have been increasing out of proportion to the increase in population and wealth, and also out of proportion to the increase in Federal taxation and disbursements.

Men who have given study to the problem believe the time is near at hand when there must be some action relating to a division of tax fields, so as to assure the States and municipalities of adequate revenues while the Federal Government is working at the problem of reducing its outgo to a point lower than its income.

Article No. 3.

The urgent need not only for a more careful but a more scientific handling of Government moneys was demonstrated in the years immediately preceding the World War. During the war, while the whole country was engaged in an orgy of spending, this need was lost sight of. It is more urgent now than ever, and unless a change in policy is effected, national bankruptcy will be the alternative. We can not go along throwing money about carelessly in the future as we have done in the past.

President Taft saw the way the wind was blowing and appointed a Commission on Efficiency and Economy to make suggestions for a change. This commission reported, but Congress, never in a mood to listen to reform unless it has to, needed no urging to ignore the report.

The Democratic Party at its convention in 1912 pledged itself not only to tariff reform but to fiscal economy. And after winning the election the Democrats proceeded to forget their economy pledge just as any party would have done, and as every party has done in the past, when it is to party interest to forget.

FROM ONE TO TWENTY BILLIONS.

Back in McKinley's time we had our first billion-dollar Congress. The country was amazed. In Wilson's first term we had our first billion-dollar year, and we proceeded from that during the war to a twenty-billion year. It will be impossible to revert now, either to a billion-dollar Congress, which appropriated for two years, or to a billion-dollar year, for the interest on our war debt alone is greater than a billion annually.

An idea as to the steady increase in appropriations can be gained from a table showing those made for the Roosevelt, Taft, and Wilson administrations, up to and including the year 1919. This table follows:

Theodore Roosevelt:
1905	$755, 350, 207. 00
1906	752, 163, 780. 00
1907	766, 424, 575. 00
1908	850, 880, 415. 00
William H. Taft:
1909	905, 132, 383. 00
1910	911, 025, 594. 00
1911	913, 098, 258. 00
1912	925, 695, 713. 00
Woodrow Wilson:
1913	867, 737, 255. 00
1914	1, 006, 662, 216. 00
1915	1, 052, 848, 682. 00
1916	1, 072, 894, 093. 23
1917	3, 046, 183, 746. 19
1918	21, 813, 356, 508. 39
1919	18, 514, 000, 000. 00

There are many avenues for economy open both to Congress and the administration. Neither the administration nor Congress can effect a complete cure of present bad practices, however, without the help of the other. And it is not unlikely that the people, through the press, will have to come forward from time to time to brace up one or the other in a program of saving.

MILLIONS FOR "PORK."

For many years past there have been annual protests against pork-barrel legislation. The two greatest pork-carrying vehicles in normal times are the omnibus rivers and harbors appropriation bill and the omnibus public buildings appropriation measure. Both ought to be abolished. Until they are, the people stand likely to contribute millions a year for pork, which otherwise might represent a saving in taxes.

Rivers and harbors appropriations during the last seven years were as follows:

Year:	Amount.
1913	$41, 073, 094
1914	20, 000, 000
1915	25, 000, 000
1916	40, 598, 135
1917	27, 726, 150
1918	23, 771, 900
1919	33, 378, 364

This table represents a total of $211,547,643. Whether or not all of these appropriations were needed will always be a mooted question.

HOW MONEY IS WASTED.

No one, of course, claims that the entire rivers and harbors work of the country should be abandoned. Neither will anyone with common sense say the Government should abandon public buildings construction, where such buildings are economically more advantageous to the Government than rented quarters; but everyone who has studied both the public buildings and rivers and harbors measures of the past, unless he be biased by personal interest, admits that some change in the manner of considering projects and appropriating for them should be effected. Money has been voted by Congress to make navigable many streams which would make better roadways than waterways. Had the road-building movement started a few years earlier, it is not at all unlikely, according to some of the critics of rivers and harbors bills, that the advocates of some of these dry navigation projects would have urged Congress to vote money for paving the beds of the dry creeks instead of dredging them. Be that as it may, it is interesting to trace the ramifications of some of the pork grabs which finally, in one way or another, have got through Congress.

THE MUSCLE SHOALS CASE.

The greatest grab of all time, according to Representative FREAR, of Wisconsin, was the haul made by southern Senators and Representatives for the development of the now notorious Muscle Shoals in the Tennessee River. The special House Committee on War Expenditures has been investigating this and has developed the astounding fact that up to the present time the sum of $70,188,187.73 has been spent on this project. According to members of the committee, there is grave question as to its future value.

Muscle Shoals is typical of some of the great grabs. Among the little ones—dry creeks snagged out, or wet ones straightened out—were the Big Sandy, where it cost the Government $350 per ton for every ton of commerce carried on it in 1913; the Scuppernong, Kissimmee Creek, Absecon Inlet, Raccoon Creek, the Big and Little Pedee, the Santee, and so on. Fine-sounding names all of them—names which drew down thousands of dollars—but projects which commercially never will amount to anything, according to Mr. Frear.

Had the public not aroused itself, the tremendous appropriations which were authorized during the last six years would have been doubled or trebled.

EIGHTY MILLIONS SAVED.

Four omnibus bills during the Sixty-third and Sixty-fourth Congresses, aggregating $170,000,000, were either defeated or reduced with a final saving to the Federal Treasury of $86,000,000. But for the attacks made on these measures by courageous Senators and Representatives, and an enlightened press, all of them would have gone through as introduced.

Up to 1917, nearly $1,000,000,000 had been spent on rivers and harbors in the country, and that with a constantly decreasing inland waterway traffic.

Turning from one form of pork to another, it is well to take up the public buildings appropriations.

Former Secretary McAdoo, while he was in the Cabinet, started a vigorous battle on this particular species of waste. In his annual reports to Congress for 1915 and 1916 he pointed out that within two decades the sum of $180,000,000 had been spent on public buildings' construction; that much of it had been wasted; and that the time had come to stop forever omnibus public buildings bills.

The former Secretary pointed out that at that time (1916) there were more than a thousand Government buildings being maintained, with a new building added at the rate of one every four days. In the small towns, he said, the Government was suffering a loss from operating expensive buildings which were not needed, while in the cities it was losing money by being compelled to rent quarters where the Government's business had outgrown its old structures.

INSTANCES OF GREAT WASTE.

Mr. McAdoo then advised Congress that the Government had purchased a site in Pittsburgh, which at the time of purchase was entirely unsuited for its business. The sum of $1,000,000 was appropriated for this. Later he was ordered to sell the same site for not less than $750,000, and there were no bidders at those terms.

In Williamson, W. Va., a site was purchased in 1911 which was so far below street grade it later had to be abandoned.

In Seattle, Wash., a site was purchased on the "tide flats" for $160,500. Later an appropriation of $300,000 was put through for a building, and then when plans for the building were taken up for discussion it was discovered that the site not only was submerged but so far from the railroad station it would cost the Government an additional $19,000 a year to haul mail back and forth.

These are only particular items from an omnibus bill. Not one of them could have stood on its own legs. All of them got in because the other fellow didn't want his pet item attacked and wouldn't attack that of anyone else. It is no wonder Mr. McAdoo spoke out against the system. It is no wonder Mr. FREAR, former Senator Burton, Senator SHERMAN, Senator KENYON, and others have derided it. But it is a wonder that the people still permit it to operate. They do, and until they voice their disapproval it will continue indefinitely.

Article No. 4.

The United States entered the World War without a carefully prepared fiscal policy. It went through the war without such a policy. It came out without one. And it is still without one. The development of such a policy unquestionably is the greatest single problem which confronts our Government to-day—greater, even, than the railroad question, the condition of unrest, and the high cost of living—for contingent upon its solution is the solution of all of the other interrelated difficulties of domestic reconstruction.

ALL ASKED FOR MORE MONEY.

Every department of the Government seized upon the war to get money out of the Treasury for this activity or that.

Of the various departments, the War Department unquestionably was the greatest spender. But now that the war is over it is well to ask ourselves why the expenditures of the Department of Commerce, with a steadily decreasing normal commerce, should have increased 40 per cent, and why those of the Department of Labor should have jumped 400?

It is impossible to analyze all of the expenditures of all of the departments at this time. It is a fact, however, that none of these departments had a carefully worked out fiscal program; that the administration had no such program for all of them; and that the spending of money was entirely unrelated to the method of raising it.

We now have some very definite information concerning the expenditures by the War Department.

MILLIONS WERE WASTED.

Leaving out the political bias of the latter, it is an unquestioned fact that millions, probably billions, were wasted by the War Department by reason of its fiscal unpreparedness. What was lost by reason of our military unpreparedness is another matter still.

Brig. Gen. H. M. Lord is the director of finance in the War Department. Only a few weeks ago he appeared before the select budget committee of the House of Representatives and made an argument in favor of a reform in our methods of carrying on the Government's financial activities. Gen. Lord supervised the expenditure of more money during the war than any other man in the world. Here is what he had to say of his task:

"The War Department, since April 6, 1917, has had appropriated for its use $24,304,388,343.97.

"The War Department entered this war without any fixed and determined or carefully digested and prepared financial system. It was impossible under the statutory organization existing to have such a system.

BUREAUS IN COMPETITION.

"There were at the beginning five statutory bureaus, each independent of the other, each making its own contracts, doing its own purchasing, and making its own disbursements—doing its own accounting, with as many different methods as there were bureaus. As a result, they were competing with each other in a field, in a market, where the supplies in many cases for which they were competing were restricted in amount. Later on, under the Overman Act, these 5 independent bureaus were increased to 12, each proceeding in the same way."

Imagine it! Think of any great financial organization, the United States Steel Corporation, for instance, dividing itself up into five independent concerns, each one of them going out into the open market and competing with all the others.

True, during 1918, some sort of a reform was achieved, but at the present time the reorganization bill which is pending in Congress, and which has the approval of the department, according to Gen. Lord's statement, provides for a number of independent supply divisions within the department.

UNPREPARED FOR WAR.

The War Department was chiefly engaged in spending money, not in raising it at all. The Treasury Department was not only a great spender during the war but was responsible for raising the billions which all of the departments spent. We had been an onlooker of the World War for nearly three years before we went into it. Yet when we went in the Treasury Department had not formulated, the administration had not computed any responsible estimates as to the cost to this country, the amount to be raised from taxation and the amount to be raised from issuing bonds.

For more than a year after we got in, with a wretchedly poor revenue measure on the statutes, a measure which all who possessed proper information knew to be inadequate, inequitable, and insufficient, the Treasury Department had no plans for amending that act, or of establishing a proper relationship between taxation and bond issues, between receipts and expenditures.

NO FIXED FINANCE SYSTEM.

As the departments called for money Congress appropriated the sums asked. But when congressional leaders, cognizant of the defects in the revenue law, sought advice from the Treasury Department as to methods of raising the funds appropriated, they were turned away without any satisfaction. The War Department, as Gen. Lord said, had no "fixed and determined or carefully digested and prepared financial system." Neither had the Treasury Department.

On December 5, 1917—eight months after we entered the war—Mr. KITCHIN, the Democratic leader of the House, frankly admitted that the administration had no financial program ready for the consideration of Congress.

During January, 1918, Mr. KITCHIN conferred with Treasury Department officials, called their attention to the need for a revenue program, and asked for suggestions.

"Finding that it was not the policy of the Treasury or of the administration to undertake the passage of a revenue measure at this session of Congress," he said later, "and knowing, too, that a large majority of the House and Senate was opposed to such an undertaking, I ceased further insistence upon its consideration."

FISCAL PROGRAM URGED.

Mr. KITCHIN, however, took the precaution of issuing a statement to the public declaring his belief that the war-revenue act should be amended and that the administration should formulate a fiscal program.

But it was not until May 10, 1918, that the Treasury Department submitted suggestions for legislation to provide additional revenues to meet increasing war expenditures. By that time the Treasury wanted more money and wanted it at once.

From May until October the issue was fought out between administration and Congress, with the result that in the fall we had thrust upon us the present inequitable and unjust tax law.

To-day the whole country is demanding the repeal of certain provisions of this law, particularly the excess-profits sections, which economists assert to be more responsible than any other one cause for the high cost of living. The failure of the administration properly to plan a fiscal program before we entered the war, its failure to work out one during the war, and its inability to do so since have put the country into a position where it must continue for months, at least, to contribute billions in taxation and additional billions to the profiteers, who take advantage of the existing revenue measure to avoid their own financial responsibilities and pass them on to the people.

Article No. 5.

It is a peculiar fact that governments, after their enormous expenditures during war times, usually enter upon a postwar period of financial extravagance. Somehow or other they do not seem able to readjust themselves to an economical basis after the strain of a great war, but continue to expend money almost as madly as during the stress of conflict. Our own Government is no exception to this rule.

Following the Civil War the average annual expenditures of the United States jumped several hundred per cent over the average for the years immediately prior to the war. Not all of this increase was due to the enormous debt piled up during the war. Expenditures jumped again after the war with Spain, but not so much as they did following the War of the Rebellion.

If the figures of Mr. MONDELL, the majority leader in the House, are accurate, our present administration is seeking nearly eight times as much money to conduct our Government during the ensuing year as was appropriated for it to spend during the year 1916, immediately prior to our entrance into the World War.

HUGE EXPENDITURES PLANNED.

If the administration's own estimates are to be considered correct—and, as Mr. MONDELL points out, they neglect to include such items as the Railroad Administration deficit and the huge deficiencies of the other departments—Mr. Wilson and his Cabinet administrators are seeking more than four times as much money for governmental operations next year as was given them for the year immediately prior to the war.

Mr. MONDELL'S estimate of expenditures totals $9,086,358,574. The administration's estimate aggregates $4,865,410,031.62, but this does not include the deficit in the general fund, continuing appropriations authorized but not actually made, the railroad deficiency, or the contemplated increase in compensation for various Government employees, civil as well as military.

As against these two estimates there stands the total expense of the Government in 1916 of $1,072,894,093.23.

Eliminating the interest on the war debt, approximately $1,017,000,000, and eliminating the normal increase in the cost of government, say, of $200,000,000, there remains to be accounted for the sum of $2,289,894,093.23.

Is all of this necessary?

The Republican leaders in the House, apparently thinking the contrary, decided that without awaiting explanations from the departments, they would make a 25 per cent cut in all estimates of appropriations sought by the departments and declared by the administration to be necessary.

Looking into the larger appropriations sought this year, it will be seen that the State Department wants more than twice what it got in 1916. In the latter year it got from Congress $6,444,594.11. It is asking of the present Congress $12,920,600.91.

BIG INCREASES SOUGHT.

The Department of Agriculture is not so modest as the State Department. It got $28,031,540.33 in 1918, and is seeking this year $72,568,102.

The Department of Commerce is asking a 300 per cent increase, the Department of Labor almost a 300 per cent advance, and Department of Justice a 75 per cent increase, and the Department of Interior a modest one of 50 per cent.

As pointed out in an earlier article, only two of the departments of the Government are seeking smaller appropriations from this Congress than those they got from the last. These two, be it noted, are the Navy and Post Office Departments. The amounts they seek, however, are far in excess of what they got in 1916.

Certainly with the war over it would seem that many of the departments should curtail their expenditures. Or, if as a result of the ending of the war it is but proper that they should broaden out the scope of their peace-time work, it is equally fitting to ask why then they seized upon the war to obtain very large increases in appropriations from Congress during the period of the struggle?

SOMETHING WRONG IN FISCAL PLAN.

Something is wrong somewhere in the financial planning of each of the departments, for it is a fact that all of them used the war to obtain larger appropriations from Congress, and now that the war is over they are attempting to get still greater amounts of money on Capitol Hill.

The Navy Department and the Post Office Department virtually established a precedent when they sought reduced appropriations from the present Congress. As Mr. Fitzgerald, the able former chairman of the House Appropriations Committee; as Mr. KITCHIN, the former Democratic leader; and as Senator SMOOT have often pointed out, the executive branch of the Government has never made any effort to reduce expenses up to date. All the reducing that has been done has been done by Congress, despite its pork-barrel rivers and harbors and public buildings bills. Even the most notorious items in these measures, upon investigation, will be found to have some sort of Executive approval attached to them.

Within the last few months two select committees of Congress, those of the House and Senate, considering the problem of reform in our fiscal system, have developed much information which should not only be of the greatest value but of the most vital interest to the entire public.

NO VETOES FOR ECONOMY.

During the House committee hearings Mr. KITCHIN made this remarkable statement:

"I have never known a President to veto a bill because it was appropriating too much or because it had this or that amount of an appropriation in it. The administrations, all that I have served under, and I have served under Mr. Roosevelt, Mr. Taft, and the present President, have asked for many millions more than Congress has been willing to give."

Mr. KITCHIN referred to statements made by former President Taft and by President Wilson, to the effect that they wanted a budget system put into effect to keep Congress from appropriating extravagantly.

"What we need in this country," he said, "is a budget system for the administrations, to keep them from demanding so much. We ought to have some man in the administration looking at the problem from the standpoint of economy, and how to get the maximum service at the minimum cost. Under our system now, from the President down to the least little bureau, they are spenders; they are taught to spend, and not to save."

ESTIMATES MADE HASTILY.

There is no man in the Government to-day whose chief business is to investigate the reasonableness, the necessity of appropriations sought by bureaus and departments. Congress, through its committees, is not in position to make such investigations. At best, it can only give the estimates sent it the hastiest sort of a survey. Consequently, large congressional cuts usually fall into the class of horizontal decreases, rather than decrease based upon a consideration of the whole contemplated outlay for Government during one year, and the proportionate value of each particular service therein.

The Republican majority in Congress hopes to go before the country in the approaching campaign with a record of having lopped off at least $1,000,000,000 from the total amount of appropriations sought by the administration. Such a record unquestionably will be worthy of consideration and to a certain extent it should win the approval of the voters.

EFFICIENT SYSTEM NEEDED.

They will perform a more noteworthy feat, however, if, in addition to slicing expenditures, they create a system whereby in the future there will be an established relationship between income and outgo, wherein the President will be more responsible to the country than he is now for the money expended by his administration assistants, and in which Congress itself will function more scientifically and with better advice in the matter of reducing the appropriations actually voted below the amount of the appropriations sought.

Article No. 6.

The future handling of our Government's finances is certain to be one of the major issues, if not the paramount one, in the approaching presidential campaign. Something must be done to get away from the present chaotic system to which there is no head or tail, but in which there are innumerable leaks, from which wastage springs almost at all times.

Both of the greater political parties are almost certain to promise reform. In fact, both promised it in 1912 and repeated the promise in 1916. The one in control of the executive department since 1912 has shown no indication of keeping either of its promises. The other, in control of Congress since the 1918 elections, is between the devil and the deep blue sea in its effort to keep its pledge of economy.

NO REAL FISCAL PROGRAM.

The Wilson administration, according to admissions of its own executives, has been without a real fiscal program from the very beginning. In that respect it is not vastly different from other administrations which have preceded it, but in 1902 it was pledged to a return to Democratic simplicity in the matter of governmental expenditures and Federal taxation. In 1916, practically admitting its failure to make that return, it promised to do so if given another chance. Then the war engulfed it and it is still suffering from the financial intoxication of the war period.

A BILLION-DOLLAR PROMISE.

It is important to remember that with all of its wastefulness, with all of its haphazard methods of handling appropriation measures, Congress has been the real economizing force in our Government ever since the first days of the Government. There probably never has been a session of Congress in which Congress did not appropriate less money than was sought by the executive branch. But, likewise, there has seldom been a session when Congress has not appropriated money which was not even sought by the executive branch.

MAKING HORIZONTAL CUTS.

During the last few weeks Congress has proceeded manfully to the task of making its horizontal cut in appropriations sought by the departments. During those same weeks, however, it has been grappling with great financial demands, which have not the support of the administration, and to some of which inevitably it must yield.

The administration did not suggest to Congress either the necessity or the desirability of passing a soldiers' bonus law. But Congress unquestionably will enact such a law. In all probability it will not call for an immediate outlay of cash, but rather for the distribution of bonds, either in fixed or varying amounts, bearing interest, to the soldiers who served in the World War. Even though the face value of the bonds will not have to be paid for 30 or 40 years, the interest on them will have to be met.

This interest will mean an additional burden for the Federal Treasury, but it will be a much lighter burden than a direct appropriation for the immediate distribution of cash.

UNITED STATES CAN NOT AFFORD BONUS.

Congress' attitude toward the bonus bond issue is not difficult to analyze. There is hardly a Member but who will admit the Government can not afford to give the soldiers an additional cash bonus. It will be remembered, they point out—though the public may have forgotten it—that Congress voted a cash bonus of $60 for every man in the military and naval service during the period of the war upon his honorable discharge. Furthermore, the strain on the Public Treasury is such that another cash bonus is impossible. So far as the bonds are concerned, they will mean little to the men who do not need the money, and they are sure to disappoint those who do, for the reason that it is a moral certainty they will not bring face value if put up for sale or offered as security for loans. Liberty bonds have fallen off in value since issued, and while it is the general expectation that they will regain par at some time, many expert financiers expect them to fall still lower. But Congress, and by Congress I mean the two great parties in Congress, feels a debt of gratitude to the men who served in the war, and beyond that they want to put the veterans under some obligation to themselves.

100 BONUS BILLS.

Therefore the Ways and Means Committee is proceeding to the consideration of the hundred or more bonus bills which have been introduced. At an appropriate time before the next election a bonus bill will be passed, and after it becomes law each party will vie with the other for the credit due.

While Congress is planning to care for the soldiers of the World War it is also facing demands from the old soldiers who served in the Civil War and from men who were in the Spanish-American War.

VETERANS' LAST DEMAND.

The Fuller bill, increasing materially Civil War pensions, has passed the House and is now before the Senate Pensions Committee. This measure in some form or other very likely will be put on the statutes before the election. The old men are demanding it and are frankly stating it will be their last demand. It will add a number of millions to the annual outlay for the next few years.

The Spanish-American War veterans haven't been so precise in their demands as the Civil War veterans, but congressional correspondence shows an increasing insistence that they shall not be forgotten. The allowance given them will not greatly increase the sum total, but if given it will mean an increase in governmental expenditures.

During the last two years civil employees of the Government have drawn a bonus, on account of the high cost of living, ranging from $120 to $240 per annum. Now they are seeking an additional bonus so as to give them more than they earned before the war. They support their request with statistics on the increased cost of living.

The reclassification commission recently made public its program for the overhauling of the Government civil service, with a rerating of clerks, stenographers, typists, and other employees.

THE UNIVERSAL TRAINING PROBLEM.

Congress is still wrestling with the problem of universal training. No one knows just what universal training will cost, if it is ordered. Mr. MONDELL, the Republican leader of the House, is opposed to it on the ground that the country can't afford an almost certain outlay of upwards of $500,000,000 annually. Senator Wadsworth, one of its advocates, places the cost at less than $150,000,000. The Democrats of the House in caucus recently voted against it.

The great majority of farmers unquestionably are opposed to universal training, though there may be exceptions here and there in favor of the program.

Universal training is the one issue on which labor and the farmers appear to have a common meeting ground at the present time. Labor has spoken out against it almost as emphatically as the farmers.

In effecting various savings in each of the appropriation bills Congress is piling up additional trouble for itself. The strength of bureau chiefs in the past has rested largely on their ability to have particular groups stand back of them in their demands for money.

REDUCTIONS STRONGLY OPPOSED.

The Army Engineers, for instance, in recommending a rivers and harbors program of upward of $40,000,000 this year, have had the support of all rivers and harbors enthusiasts throughout the country. Congress in reducing those estimates to $12,000,000 has stirred up tremendous opposition in certain sections—particularly along the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers—notwithstanding the fact that there is still unexpended in the Treasury upward of $50,000,000 previously appropriated for rivers and harbors work.

The House chopped the Agricultural appropriation bill right and left. Some of the bureaus were reduced below their prewar level, although they sought no more money than they had then. Others were sent back to their prewar level. The affected groups have already begun to make themselves heard.

At the present time, while the economizing is in process, another demand is being made, and it is daily growing more and more insistent. It is for a revision of the existing revenue law.

Merchants affected by the luxury tax want it struck out. Corporations affected by the excess-profits tax want it repealed. Individuals who realize the suffering they have been put to through these taxes, and others, want them changed. The children want the tax on ice-cream cones taken off.

GOVERNMENT NEEDS MONEY.

But the Government needs money, and Congress realizes it, and Congress can't change the present revenue law until it finds new methods of raising money to take the place of the money to be lost through the revision.

Thus it can be clearly seen that Congress is spending money with one hand and saving it with the other. It hopes to save a little more than it spends. The administration is spending it with both fists and dislikes the economizing of Congress. Meanwhile, earnest-minded citizens of both parties are looking to the day when the old processes are abandoned and the Government is put on a sound financial basis, with a real fiscal program.

Article No. 7.

The success of any program for the rehabilitation of our governmental fiscal system is dependent largely upon the disposition of the loans which we made to our allies and associates during the World War.

When Congress first authorized the loans of money to allied nations there was a general rush from all over the world on the United States Treasury. A limit of $10,000,000,000 was fixed by Congress on the total amount to be loaned, and before the loaning stopped this limit very nearly was reached. During the war the Allies offered every promise of repayment if we would help them out. We had their admissions then that without our help they could not finance the conflict further. We have had similar admissions since. But immediately after the cessation of hostilities, when it became certain that within a few months the United States' money bags no longer would be open to the world, the allied nations began a drive, first, for a delay in the payment of the interest, and then for the wiping out of their entire debt to us.

WANT LOANS CANCELED.

At the present time there is a very insidious propaganda afoot in this country for the cancellation of all of the allied loans and for the extension of new credits for reconstruction purposes. Informal spokesmen of European countries have come forward with the flat statement that the United States should assume these debts as a proper portion of its war cost. Not satisfied with this, they would have us extend Europe additional credits for commercial purposes. In other words, they come to us as a man would go to his banker and say:

"I can't pay the money I owe you. Won't you wipe it off your books? Then, after you do that, won't you loan me more money so I can start all over again?"

Of course, any sane banker would reject such a proposition instanter, but there is the possibility that a government might not have the sagacity of a banker.

According to the last annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury, credits to the amount of $9,647,419,494.84 were established for the Allies, and there was advanced in actual cash the sum of $9,416,371,888.55.

CONGRESS CHECKED LOANS.

The United States not only advanced money to its allies during the war, but after the armistice was signed it loaned them $2,329,257,138.55. We would still be loaning them money if Congress had not set a high limit and former Secretary Glass had not put his foot down on further advances.

Mr. Glass had hardly uttered his opposition to further loans before the Allies began to protest their inability to pay the interest due on the amounts already loaned them, and the Secretary was forced by their representatives to go to Congress for authority to allow them to apply to the total indebtedness the interest which will fall due in the next few years, as well as that already overdue.

Up to the present time our Government, in all of its calculations, has looked upon the allied indebtedness as a "good loan" in banking terms. In other words, it is carrying the advances on the books of the Treasury at 100 per cent face value. Included in this is the $187,000,000 loaned to Russia, which probably never will be paid back.

BRITISH OUR LARGEST DEBTORS.

The British, who are our largest debtors, are second to us in the creditor position. They carry their loans to the other allies at a 50 per cent valuation and have doubt as to their ability to collect that. They would willingly wipe their whole slate clean if we would do the same thing. In other words, if the United States, which owes no nation, would cancel all obligations due it, Great Britain, which owes us $4,500,000,000, would cancel the amounts due her from other nations.

Financially the United States would be the only loser by such a procedure, but that fact does not deter the other Governments one bit in their efforts to persuade us to proceed. According to J. M. Keynes, one of the British advocates of this plan of eliminating the interallied indebtedness, this is what would happen:

The United States would wipe out the loans of approximately $10,000,000,000 which it has made to its allies.

WOULD RETURN TO PREWAR BASIS.

Great Britain would wipe out the loans of approximately $8,700,000,000, which it has made to the Allies.

France would wipe out the loans which she made to Russia and the other allied nations, approximating $1,800,000,000.

All of the other allied countries would have their indebtedness to the United States, Great Britain, and France wiped out. They could eliminate future interest cost on this indebtedness, and fiscally they would be back about to their prewar basis.

But—and let us pause over this—while ostensibly Great Britain and France would be wiping out loans, practically they would be putting money in their pockets.

Great Britain, having loaned more than $8,000,000,000, also borrowed of the United States $4,200,000,000 in round figures. Of her loans that to Russia, in the amount of $2,840,000,000, is practically a dead letter. So as far as she is concerned she would be gaining just the amount we wiped off our slate. It would reduce her liability one-half, while we would be increasing our war cost about 40 per cent.

FRANCE AND ITALY WOULD GAIN.

France would gain about $3,500 000,000, Italy about $4,000,000,000, and the other countries according to their share of the total indebtedness.

As Mr. Keynes said in his book, which apparently was written chiefly for American and not for British consumption, "Controversies as to relative sacrifice are very barren and very foolish." Yet it is not foolish to take account of the fact that the United States raised through taxes and bond issues a greater portion of its war expenditures than any other country in the world. It is not foolish to take account of the fact that the tax rate in France to-day is but little higher than it was prior to the war, as France raised large portions of her war money through loans from her allies. It is not foolish to take account of the fact that Italy, militant before the war, militant now, would be put in a much stronger financial position in case she wished to wage war against the Jugo-Slavs or any other country.

COMPARISONS BY FITZGERALD.

It is not foolish, although Mr. Keynes might contend it is, to recall a paragraph from an address made by former Chairman Fitzgerald, of the House Appropriations Committee, in 1918.

"Including loans," said Mr. Fitzgerald, "the United States in the first year proposes to expend as much as Great Britain, more than France, more than Russia, probably as much as Germany, and one-third more than Austria-Hungary has expended during the entire three years of the war. * * * Even if the amount of the loans to our allies be excluded, the figures are still sufficiently startling."

It is not foolish to recall that when we first went into the war it was said that our financial assistance was the principal thing required; that before we even worked out a plan of assisting financially we were called upon for men, and that before the war closed we had more men on the front than any of our allies.

It is utterly ridiculous for the European Governments to come forward with their proposal to have the United States cancel their indebtedness to us. There is even grave question as to the wisdom of the administration in consenting to the funding of the interest due us without putting up a stiffer fight to get it.

BURDEN ON AMERICAN PEOPLE.

When the administration consented to let the interest go over, it virtually issued an edict to the American people to contribute in taxes $500,000,000 this year, more than $500,000,000 next year, and so on, until the European interest payments commence, in addition to the amounts they must contribute for the other expenses of our Government. If the Allies fall down on principal as well as interest, it means that the American people will have to assume an additional obligation of $10,000,000,000. In the present condition of our national finances this is impossible.

It is almost useless to discuss the desire of the older nations for additional loans from the United States. In the first place, our Government won't make them. In the second, it couldn't if it would.

Mr. Hoover, Secretary Glass, Mr. Vanderlip, Senator McCORMICK, and other men who know and understand Europe and Europe's problems, said months ago that the solution of those problems will be attained, not through further loans from the United States but through the settling down of the European mind to the cold fact that Europe must go back to work. Europe can work out of its present indebtedness if it will go to work. If we should be so foolish, however, as to cancel that indebtedness, then loan Europe more money, without any control over its expenditure, we would be prolonging by just the time taken for its expenditure the period that will ensue before Europe goes back to work, and hard at work.

Article No. 8.

How is the Government to work out of the financial maze into which it has been thrown by carelessness and inefficiency on the part of both the administration and Congress during the past years?

The method is clear, but the adoption of that method is difficult.

We must change completely our ways of doing business, both in the executive and the legislative branches of the Government. We must impart a new efficiency and a new energy to both. And we must educate the people not only to the necessity for immediate reform, but to the necessity for permanent reform and continued efforts for economy.

The first step in the procedure must come through the enactment of a law giving us a national budget system.

The next step must come through a reform of the congressional committee system.

The third step is the application of the budget system in the executive departments and its handling in Congress.

BUDGET SYSTEM EXPLAINED.

Much has been written lately on the budget by persons interested in fiscal reform, but there is still a very vague understanding of that term in the minds of the people generally. Just what is it? Briefly stated, a budget is a program prepared by the Executive, setting forth the actual condition of the Treasury, the financial needs of the Government for the ensuing year, together with a statement suggesting the methods of meeting those needs through tax levies or bond issues.

Congress is just about to enact a budget law, but there is still doubt as to whether it will be a real budget or a fictitious one, not any better than the present hodge-podge system which has been in force for years past. The movement in Congress for a national budget system was started several years ago by Representative Fitzgerald, of New York, when he was chairman of the House Appropriations Committee. Mr. Fitzgerald lived so close to his job, however, while he was in Congress that his colleagues affectionately described him as a "bug" on economy and the need for a budget.

SHERLEY TOOK UP FIGHT.

When he resigned his successor in the chairmanship, Mr. Sherley, took up the fight for a budget, but made litttle progress. A real impetus was given it when Senator MEDILL McCORMICK, fresh from his experience in the Illinois State Legislature, where he had been successful in the fight for fiscal reform, which has given Illinois the best system of any State in the country, entered the lower House of Congress in 1917. Senator McCORMICK, unabashed by the counsel of his elders, put a staff of experts to work, studying the fiscal system of the United States, the systems of the various States, and the financial methods of the other countries of first-rate importance. Then in the spring of 1918 he introduced a series of measures in the House providing for the creation of a national-budget system; for the installation of an independent auditing and accounting system, the head of which would be responsible to Congress and not to the President; for the coordination of the loose ends of departmental work; for the elimination of conflicting bureaus; for the transfer of certain bureaus from one department to another in which they more properly belonged; and for a complete reform of the congressional committee system.

WANTED DISCUSSION STARTED.

No one but a new Member of Congress could have proposed such a scheme and gotten away with it without unmerciful hazing by his elder statesmen. Senator McCORMICK frankly stated that he did not regard his program, or any of the particular measures in it, as perfect, but rather that he had submitted it in order to start a discussion which might lead to the adoption of a permanent and beneficial reform. The country was engaged in the war at the time; it was giving practically its whole thought to the prosecution of the war to victory, with little thought to the cost of the war.

Since the war has ended, however, and the tremendous cost has become known to the people, and they have been brought to a realization of the enormous burden which they must carry this year, next year, and for many years thereafter, not only the people but Congress itself has taken a very vital interest in Senator McCORMICK'S suggestions of 1918. Since those suggestions were made Mr. McCORMICK has been graduated from the House into the Senate, where in September he was made chairman of the Special Committee for Consideration of a National Budget.

EARLY REPORT EXPECTED.

This committee expects to report to the Senate at an early date a comprehensive measure for the creation of a national budget and independent audit system for the executive departments. The House, under the leadership of Representative GOOD, already has passed a bill providing for the possible creation of a budget at some time in the future and for an immediate change in the plan of submitting the estimates and auditing the expenditures of the Government, but in the opinion of real advocates of budget reform the House measure, while a great step in advance, falls short of the actual accomplishment needed.

FAITH IN PRESENT SYSTEM.

At present every bureau chief furnishes his superior officer or departmental head with estimates as to the financial needs of his bureau for the ensuing year. After the head of the department has received the estimates of all his bureaus he transmits them to the Secretary of the Treasury. And when the Secretary of the Treasury gets all of the departmental estimates in hand he prints and binds them in a volume and sends them to Congress. Frequently the bureau chiefs underestimate their needs and supplemental estimates are required. More often, however, they proceed on the theory that Congress will cut them down anyway, so they ask for more than they need in the expectation of getting about what they actually require. The weakness of the system lies in the fact that there is not within any of the departments any official whose chief business is to review the estimates of the bureaus for the purpose of eliminating unnecessary items before they are submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury and by him to Congress, and in the additional and more important fact that the Secretary of the Treasury, who has to go out and get the moneys to meet the expenditure, has nothing whatsoever to say about the manner in which those moneys are to be expended. There is no one in the departments themselves to economize and there is no official in the administration to coordinate the estimates of the various departments.

COMMITTEES WORK INDEPENDENTLY.

There is the additional weakness that Congress, when it receives the estimates of the departments, does not consider them as a whole, but splits them up among 20 or 30 appropriating committees, each one of which proceeds with its work independently of all the others.

The McCormick budget plan is very simple and very clear. In so far as the departments are concerned, it sets up in the Treasury Department a budget bureau, the business of which is to collect, revise, and coordinate the estimates of the various departments. It provides that each department shall have a budget official who shall collect the estimates from his various bureaus and trim them of waste before submitting them to the Secretary of the Treasury. And it provides further that after the Secretary of the Treasury has completed his work he shall submit it to the President, who must send it to Congress with his approval. In case of a dispute between the Secretary of the Treasury and any other departmental chief, the President shall act as arbiter.

WOULD REORGANIZE TREASURY.

To avoid unnecessary disputes, the Treasury under the McCormick bill would be divested of all its present nonfiscal functions and confined wholly to financial administration. Further than this, the McCormick program provides that when the Secretary of the Treasury submits his estimates of expenditures he shall submit with them a statement as to the anticipated revenues of the Government. If the revenues are expected to exceed the expenditures, he shall submit suggestions for a revision downward in taxes or for the purchase of outstanding bonds. If the revenues appear to be inadequate, the Secretary must submit suggestions for new tax measures or bond issues to meet the Government's needs.

Could anything be more businesslike? It hardly seems so. All the Senator proposes to do is to have the business of the Government handled as any successful private business enterprise is handled.

PEOPLE WOULD DECIDE.

In case of a vital difference between Congress and the Executive the people would decide the differences at the first election, so that the case could be fought out very quickly indeed and one side or the other supported in its contention.

One step further, and the plan for controlling and keeping down expenditures would be complete. That is the creation of an auditing system responsible to Congress instead of the Executive. What would a stockholder think of a company in which one official not only spent all the money but audited his own accounts? Such, practically, is the plan on which our Government now operates. The Executive spends the money and officials in the executive department audit the expenditures; there would always be a check on their administration and Congress could always have the benefit of his advice as to the necessity for this item or that in the light of actual results accomplished.

ESTIMATES SAVING OF A BILLION.

With such a system in effect, Senator McCORMICK estimates the Government can make a real saving of at least $1,000,000,000 a year in the immediate future and still handle all of its operations in such a way as to give the public the greatest good from the money spent. The saving might exceed a billion. It would not fall short of that amount, in his opinion.

Through the establishment of such a system the country can work out of its present predicament, where it is facing expenditures of from one to four billion in excess of its revenues, to a situation where it would always have a firm control of its finances, and could meet any emergency which might arise in the most scientific and businesslike fashion.

Those Members of Congress, those public-spirited citizens in private life who have realized the failure of the Government to function fiscally, can not accomplish the whole reform alone. They must have the enlightened assistance of the people. With it there is no question as to the result.

The Retirement Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. OSCAR E. KELLER,
OF MINNESOTA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Saturday, May 1, 1920.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, in considering the welfare of the superannuated employee, whether in the Government service or in the commercial world, there are three plans which will effectively dispose of their proper retirement when they have outlived their usefulness in the intricate meshes of the business world without transforming them into subjects of charity: First, by the payment of salaries sufficient to adequately provide for everyday wants and permit the saving of an amount sufficient to care for the employee in his or her declining years; second, by a system of Government endowment insurance; third, by a retirement system such as we are considering now. I have for a number of years advocated such a system; it is progressive legislation; it is humane legislation; it is efficient legislation. Its redeeming features are manifold, and its effectiveness has been satisfactorily substantiated in foreign countries and by the progressive private institutions of our own country that have adopted pension systems for their faithful employees.

The saving in dollars and cents alone speaks well for its immediate adoption. The cry has gone forth that we must economize. The opportunity here presents itself to economize in Government expenditures, besides increasing the efficiency of all the activities of our Government. The Government actuaries have authoritatively estimated that a net saving of $1,821,150 will result in the retirement of superannuated employees now on the Government rolls; that there are 5,202 employees at the present time who are 100 per cent inefficient, but whom the department heads can not conscientiously dismiss in view of their long and faithful service to their Government; there are varying percentages of other employees whose efficiency has deteriorated, due to their declining years, but are retained for the same reason. In the interest of humanity, in the interest of efficiency, in the interest of economy, it is the duty of this Congress to enact this legislation.

There are, no doubt, many employees who have served their Government faithfully and well during most of their lives, who have long felt that they would like to retire from active work but have not been able to amass enough of this world's wealth to properly provide for the comforts and the necessities to which they are entitled and for which they yearn in their declining years, who are eagerly awaiting the enactment of this legislation. To them it will be a godsend. There are others who have served equally as faithfully and equally as well, who have passed the age limit specified in this measure but who still consider themselves able to perform the duties devolving upon them. This measure, I believe, properly provides for their retention as long as their efficiency is maintained at a certain level. To the younger employee, who still has the greater portion of his life to live, and who is looking forward to advancement and to the betterment of his position in the Government service, there is opened an avenue for more prompt recognition of his efficient service through promotion. He can feel that he is not being held back, in many cases doing the work for which an older employee is receiving remuneration simply because the older employee can not be retired under a pension system.

It is the duty of the Government to assume the initiative in this progressive system of retiring faithful employees. True, many of our business institutions have already adopted pension systems, but no concerted action has been taken by business as a whole to provide such retirement for the great mass of the laboring people of the country. With wages at their present level and the cost of the necessities of life mounting higher and higher, it is absolutely impossible for the average man to lay aside any of his earnings for that much-dreaded period—his declining years. With the Government setting an example, it is sincerely hoped that this humane spirit will imbue the leaders of industry, commerce, and finance through the length and breadth of our prosperous land with the thought and the desire to do something similar for those masses who toil that this country might be maintained at the pinnacle of happiness, of prosperity, of contentment which so animated the framers of our Constitution and the founders of our Republic.

"Our country is in debt nearly $30,000,000,000. This bill excludes certain common laborers in the employment of the Government and gives a pension to thousands of persons who have good homes with plenty of money, and some persons who are worth more than $50,000, and have had a 'political pull' for the last 15 to 30 years."

"This bill requires an unfavored class to provide the taxes to give a pension to a favored class. I can not vote for it in this form."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN M. ROBSION,
OF KENTUCKY,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Friday, April 30, 1920.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, this bill provides for the retirement with a pension of certain classified civil-service employees of the Government. I can not vote for this bill. I desire to set forth briefly my reasons.

In the first place, this bill excludes certain "common laborers," certain workmen employed by the Government. It will grant a pension to one or more persons who are worth more than $100,000. It will grant a pension to persons who are worth more than $50,000. It will grant a pension to a great many persons worth more than $10,000. It will grant a pension to thousands of persons who are worth more than $5,000 each. It provides for the retirement and granting of a pension to all of the classified civil-service employees of the Government, "except certain common laborers," who have reached the age of 65 years and have been in the service of the Government as much as 15 years, except letter carriers, rural mail carriers, and certain post-office clerks may be retired at the age of 62 years and postal clerks at the age of 60 years. These pensions will range from $180 to $720 per year. I should like to give any relief I could to the mail carriers and the railway postal clerks, but this can not be done under this bill without providing for the retirement and granting pensions to more than 100,000 Government employees in the city of Washington and the District of Columbia and granting a pension to thousands who need no pension.

It is claimed that there are about 600,000 men and women under the so-called classified civil service who will be the beneficiaries of this act. Their salaries range and have ranged for years from about $1,200 to $4,000 per year. More than 100,000 of these are employed in Washington and the District of Columbia. Most of these got their jobs through Senators, Congressmen, and other political influences.

THIS BILL PROVIDES A PENSION FOR THE FAVORED CLASS.

Many of these employees have had these good jobs ranging from 1 year to 30 years. In fact, you must have served for at least 15 years before you can secure a pension. This legislation has been largely promoted, urged, and boosted by a very active organization of more than 100,000 Government employees in the city of Washington and the District of Columbia. There will not be many of the civil-service employees out of Washington and the District of Columbia who will hold their jobs 15 years and more, and therefore the beneficiaries of this legislation will in a great measure be the civil-service employees of the Government in the city of Washington and the District of Columbia. Many of these are now receiving from two to four thousand dollars per year, with splendid homes, stocks and bonds, and money in the bank. They have been considered the favored class. They have had the "political pull." They have been getting better pay, have had shorter hours, and better working conditions than the men and women who were left back home to work in the mines, in the shops, on the section, the railroads, on the farm, in the mills, and in the stores. For the last 15 to 30 years the folks who were left back home were fortunate if they had positions paying as much as $50 per month. These Government employees were the first to be granted the eight-hour day. Their workday is now seven hours or less. These Government employees can be sick for at least 30 days and have another 30 days' leave of absence and get off Saturday at noon and still draw full pay. It has been shown that they do not average five hours per day for each workday in the year. This bill also reaches out and takes in a great many persons who have left the Government service and who have been out of the Government service since the 1st of last September and grants to them a pension of $720 per year. Many of the persons who remained at home and did not have the "political pull" have worn themselves out with long hours of service and with poor pay and are now old and without means of support. The question arises, if the Congress is going to grant civil pensions, should we grant it to this favored class and require those who are less favored and did not have the political pull to pay the taxes and provide the money for these pensions?

SHOULD THE LESS-FAVORED CLASS PROVIDE PENSIONS FOR THE FAVORED CLASS?

Our Government now owes $26,000,000,000, and under our present high taxes we will face a deficit of $3,000,000,000 and more at the end of this fiscal year. We have found out that everybody who buys food and clothing must help pay his part of these heavy taxes. This bill excludes certain "common laborers" and all of the fourth-class postmasters. These fourth-class postmasters are under civil service and do five times as much work for the money they receive as the persons do who are the beneficiaries under this bill. The national Government and States should always see to it that the old, infirm, and needy are provided for. The miners, railroad workers, shop, mill, and farm laborers wear themselves out as producers for the Nation, but there is no provision of law to pension them when they get old and are without means of support. It has been argued on the floor of this House in defense of this bill that a bill granting pensions to such would be unconstitutional. The sons and daughters of these laborers and producers must take care of their parents when they get old and are poor. Is it fair and right to tax these sons and daughters who toil and labor in order to provide a pension for many thousand rich Government employees who have had good-paying jobs here in Washington and the District of Columbia for the last 15 to 30 years? If we are going to grant civil pensions, let us begin with those who have worn themselves out as producers for the Nation and are in need and who did not have a "political pull" for the last 15 to 30 years. A civil pension should never be granted to those who do not need it. We must always stand ready to take care of the destitute, the aged, and needy.

GOOD WAGES, PROPER WORKING HOURS AND CONDITIONS.

I used to work at manual labor by the day, the job, and the month. I have no lack of sympathy for the men and women who do work for the Government. I have secured a great many positions for many splendid young men and women from my district and have many applications from others who want jobs here. These young men and women feel they are greatly favored in getting these positions with the Government. None of them, so far as I know, are in favor of me voting a tax on their less-favored neighbors back home in order to pay them a pension. In fact, many of them are opposed to this bill.

There is a fine bunch of men and women in the employment of the Government here and throughout the Nation. I believe in good wages, reasonable hours of service, and good working conditions. The wages should not only be sufficient to provide a good living for a man and his family, but enough so that he can by reasonable economy provide for that "rainy day," and many of the employees of the Government have saved their money, invested it wisely, and are now worth much more than I am, and are living in much better homes than I have. I wish to commend them for their thrift and economy and congratulate them on their good fortune, but I do not feel that it is right for me to vote a tax upon the poor workingman at home to provide a pension for this class that has been favored by "Uncle Sam" for the last 15 to 30 years. I certainly have the kindest feeling for the splendid army of men and women who are working for the Government, but until we grant a pension to the aged and needy throughout the Nation I do not feel justified in voting for a bill that cuts out any "common laborer," the fourth-class postmasters, and many others and gives to many well-to-do people a pension of $720 per year, and which will be paid by the Government to them for more than 20 years in some cases. I shall always stand for a square deal for all and special privileges for none, and if we must favor any class let it be those who have worn themselves out at small wages and short hours producing for the country and who are aged and poor and did not have the "political pull."

Suggests World-War Medal.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. BENJAMIN K. FOCHT,
OF PENNSYLVANIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 7, 1920.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I insert the following letter:

LEWISBURG, PA., November 30, 1918.

B. K. FOCHT, Congressman.

DEAR SIR: You might see merit in this idea: As a medal was struck in the Philadelphia United States Mint to commemorate the freeing of the slave and the Lincoln administration, and as the big screw press and material are at the United States Mint, Philadelphia, and the engraver employed on Government dies for making coin money, the engraver can be used to make a stamp to strike up a memorial medal to commemorate the aid of the United States to France during the late war. I have come across the most beautiful female face and profile right here in Lewisburg. She is in the high school and is a farmer's daughter. I saw her at Fry's mill, Brown Street, and as quick as I saw her profile, slightly Roman nose and oval face and firm chin, I immediately saw a model for a medal. Her profile was just fine. I was going to ask the opinion of the manager of the United States Philadelphia Mint, but as congressional action would be necessary, I consult you. A photograph can be got at any time of this humble young woman, as she brings milk over to the condensary. Now, what do you think of the idea of a medal to be struck to commemorate this great national event? There is not a word said so far about it. Now, can't you see merit in the idea? Can't you consult some Member of culture who can see the merit of this idea and so get expression on it? I most surely think that you can see the great importance of this medal as a national binder of these two nations. France aided us in the revolution for independence, and we aided France with treasure and men in 1918.

Kindly read this over more than once.

Yours, kindly,

CHARLES SMITH,

Liberty Bonds.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. BENJAMIN K. FOCHT,
OF PENNSYLVANIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 7, 1920.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, it can by no means be amiss to have suggestions from intelligent and experienced sources at this time relative to the depreciation in Liberty bonds and means of restoring their market value to that which originally prevailed. Mr. William H. Gelbach, a well-known banker, resident of Waynesboro, Pa., has submitted a plan which has attracted the attention of bankers, financial writers, and owners of Liberty bonds throughout the country. The method proposed by Mr. Gelbach was recently published somewhat in detail in the business and financial section of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, and is as follows:

William H. Gelbach, cashier of the Citizens' National Bank, of Waynesboro, Pa., suggests that if the privilege were granted by Congress to national banks to use Liberty bonds as a basis for currency it not only would be of great profit to the Government but would immediately bring the bonds to par and at the same time relieve the credit or money stringency, which has done much to check sorely needed improvements, such as the rehabilitation of the railroads.

The idea is not altogether new. Some persons think the effect would be to promote inflation; others believe to the contrary. Mr. Gelbach has put the whole case in plain form, and certainly in a way that is appealing to the vast number of holders of Liberty bonds. Here is what he says:

"That a $100 United States bond should sell at $86, a depreciation of $14 in less than two years, is an indication that our Government is alarmingly in the control of the worst kind of financiering.

"Two years ago bankers were urged to induce their patrons to buy bonds, 'the best security in the world,' and to 'buy until it hurts'; and to-day it does hurt those who are forced to sell at sacrifice prices or pay high rates of interest to carry them.

"Bankers believed that they were safe to say that after the war United States bonds would sell at par plus premium.

"Many bankers were pleased to relate their experience in the purchase of 3 per cent United States bonds during the Spanish-American War, which soon went to par, and within a year sold at a high premium.

"A conscientious banker is tortured with the thought that he has recommended a bond that proves a loss to his patrons, and he will leave no ground unturned until he gets to the root of the evil that causes the unwarranted loss.

"That a Nation having $250,000,000,000 of assets, against which there is indebtedness of $18,000,000,000 to $20,000,000,000, should have floating a depreciated security is a very sad reflection, and a remedy must be applied.

"We believe if Congress to-day should grant the privilege to national banks to use their Liberty bonds as a basis for circulation that next week Liberty bonds could be sold at par plus premium.

"Why are the present outstanding United States 2 per cent bonds selling for 101 while the same bond during the panic of 1907 sold for 109?

"Before the war Congress enacted a law allowing the banks to issue currency to the extent of their capital stock, based upon the holding of Government bonds to secure the currency.

"When the issue of our present Liberty loan bonds was authorized Congress debarred the new issue from the circulation privilege.

"To explain the circulation basis to such as are not informed, we will use for illustration the present law as working under the limited outstanding circulation.

"A bank with a capital of $100,000 goes into the market and buys $100,000 face value of United States 2 per cent bonds, and the law allows the bank to deposit its $100,000 of bonds with the Treasurer of the United States. For such collateral deposit $100,000 of bank notes of the bank are printed and used by the bank as its currency. Should the bank fail, there are the collateral United States bonds to make the currency full value, and every bank note now outstanding is as good as the Government itself.

"Therefore our opinion is that Congress should grant the circulation privilege to national banks to use Liberty bonds as a basis for currency, starting with such ratio of circulation to its bond holdings as might be necessary to relieve the money stringency for commercial and industrial needs. Under such conditions the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. would not be under the obligation to pay 7 per cent interest for a period of 10 years on $50,000,000 of its recent requirements.

"Under this system a national bank could absorb all the offerings of Liberty bonds from its patrons at par and, furthermore, pay to the Government a 2 per cent tax on its circulation, which would pay nearly one-half of the interest on the public debt.

"When a bank now increases its capital stock and desires to avail itself of its entitled circulation privilege, which is even now profitable with the 2 per cent United States bonds selling at 101, why would it not be more profitable to the bank and its patrons to buy the Liberty bonds at par, and thereby relieve money stringency and prevent the further decline of Liberty bonds?

"Every dollar of currency thus issued would not be an inflation, but based on full value.

"The national-banking system, with its circulation privileges, has sustained the 2s, 3s, and 4s Government bonds of the Civil War and kept them above par. Why should not the same good laws of the past be extended to our Liberty bonds?"

The Fuller Pension Law.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. J. M. C. SMITH,

OF MICHIGAN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 8, 1920.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, availing myself of the privilege granted to me to extend my remarks, I wish to say that I am pleased at the enactment into law of the Fuller pension bill, granting increased pensions to the veteran soldiers of the Civil War, their widows, and dependents. It is a just recognition of their valuable services to the country. It is especially fitting at the age in life when they can not perform active manual labor to suitably maintain their existence and when the necessities in life have doubled and in some instances trebled in value. It is a high recognition of their services by the country they fought to save. It is the payment of a debt of honor that will be appreciated by them in their declining years. It will lighten the heart and brighten the home of many a worthy veteran who is compelled to fight the battle of life in a time when the strong and stalwart feel the pinch of present conditions.

This bill makes no distinction of rank, age, or service. It treats all alike who served for a period of at least 90 days and received an honorable discharge. All soldiers now on the pension roll will, without making a new application, automatically receive $50 a month from the date of the approval of the bill, May 4, 1920.

Those who are entitled to an increase of pension or higher rate for disability will be required to make a written application, have a medical examination, and submit proof of his permanent or total disability. If a soldier is so disabled as to require the regular personal aid of an attendant, he is entitled to a pension of $72 a month for total disability. The Pension Department has prepared proper blanks under the law for applying for a total disability pension. Widows' pensions are increased to $30 a month.

While the pension under this bill will not equal the increase in the high cost of living, it will help to smooth the pathway of their declining years and be some reward for the sacrifices made by them when their country called.

I herewith incorporate a copy of the law embodying the Fuller bill. It supersedes all other general pension laws:

An act to revise and equalize rates of pension to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War and the War with Mexico, to certain widows, including widows of the War of 1812, former widows, dependent parents, and children of such soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to certain Army nurses, and granting pension and increase of pension in certain cases.

Be it enacted, etc., That every person who served 90 days or more in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War, and who has been honorably discharged therefrom, or who, having so served less than 90 days, was discharged for a disability incurred in the service and in the line of duty, or is now upon the pension rolls as a Civil War veteran, and every person who served 60 days or more in the War with Mexico, or on the coasts or frontier thereof, or en route thereto, during the war with that nation, and was honorably discharged therefrom, and who is now in receipt of, or entitled to receive under existing law, a pension of less than $50 per month, shall, from and after the passage of this act, be entitled to and shall be paid a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

SEC. 2. That every person who served 90 days or more in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War, and who has been honorably discharged therefrom, or who, having so served less than 90 days, was discharged for a disability incurred in the service and in the line of duty, or is now upon the pension rolls as a Civil War veteran, and every person who served 60 days or more in the War with Mexico, or on the coasts or frontier thereof, or en route thereto, during the war with that nation, and was honorably discharged therefrom, and who is now, or hereafter may become, by reason of age and physical or mental disabilities, helpless or blind, or so nearly helpless or blind as to require the regular personal aid and attendance of another person, shall be entitled to and shall be paid a pension at the rate of $72 per month.

SEC. 3. That from and after the approval of this act all persons whose names are on the pension roll, and who, while in the service of the United States in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps during the Civil War, and in the line of duty, shall have lost one hand or one foot or been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $60 per month; that all persons who, in such service and in like manner, shall have lost an arm at or above the elbow, or a leg at or above the knee, or been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $65 per month; that all persons who, in such service and in like manner, shall have lost an arm at the shoulder joint or a leg at the hip joint, or so near the shoulder or hip joint, or where the same is in such condition as to prevent the use of an artificial limb, shall receive a pension at the rate of $72 per month; and that all persons who, in such service and in like manner, shall have lost one hand and one foot, or been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $90 per month.

SEC. 4. That the widow of any person who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War for 90 days or more, and was honorably discharged from such service, or regardless of the length of service was discharged for or died in service of a disability incurred in the service and in the line of duty, such widow having been married to such soldier, sailor, or marine prior to the 27th day of June, A. D. 1905, shall be entitled to and shall be paid a pension at the rate of $30 per month. And this section shall apply to a former widow of any person who served for 90 days or more in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War and was honorably discharged from such service, or who, having so served for less than 90 days was discharged for or died in service of a disability incurred in the service and in the line of duty, such widow having remarried, either once or more than once after the death of the soldier, sailor, or marine, if it be shown that such subsequent or successive marriage has, or have been dissolved, either by the death of the husband or husbands, or by divorce without fault on the part of the wife; and any such former widow shall be entitled to and be paid a pension at the rate of $30 per month; and any widow as mentioned in this section shall also be paid $6 per month for each child of such officer or enlisted man under the age of 16 years, and in case of the death or remarriage of the widow leaving a child or children of such officer or enlisted man under the age of 16 years, such pension shall be paid such child or children until the age of 16 years: Provided, That in case a minor child is insane, idiotic, or otherwise mentally or physically helpless, the pension shall continue during the life of such child, or during the period of such disability, and this proviso shall apply to all pensions heretofore granted or hereafter to be granted under this or any former statute: And provided further, That in case of any widow whose name has been dropped from the pension roll because of her remarriage, if the pension has been granted to an insane, idiotic, or otherwise helpless child, or to a child or children under the age of 16 years, she shall not be entitled to renewal of pension under this act until that pension to such child or children terminates, unless such child or children be a member or members of her family and cared for by her, and upon the renewal of pension to such widow, payment of pension to such child or children shall cease: And provided further, That the rate of pension for the widow of any person who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the War of 1812, or for 60 days or more in the War with Mexico, on the coasts or frontier thereof, or en route thereto during the war with that nation, and was honorably discharged therefrom, shall be $30 per month.

SEC. 5. That all Army nurses of the Civil War and all dependent parents of any officer or enlisted man who served in the Civil War whose names are now on the pension roll, or who are now entitled to pension under any existing law, shall be entitled to and shall be paid a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

SEC. 6. That the pension or increase of pension herein provided for, as to all persons whose names are now on the pension roll, or who are now in receipt of a pension under existing law, shall commence at the rates herein provided, from the date of the approval of this act, or under section 2 hereof, when the requisite condition is shown to exist after the approval of this act; and as to persons whose names are not now on the pension roll, or who are not now in receipt of a pension under existing law, but who may be entitled to pension under the provisions of this act, such pensions shall commence from the date of filing application therefor in the Bureau of Pensions in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That as to any former widow as mentioned in section 4 hereof, who since the death of her soldier, sailor, or marine husband has remarried either once or more than once, and such subsequent or successive marriage has been dissolved, either by the death of the husband or husbands, or by divorce without fault on the part of the wife, and who filed her application for pension under the act of September 8, 1916, her pension shall commence from the date when her original application was filed under that act in the Bureau of Pensions and shall be at the rate in that act provided, with increase at the rate or rates subsequently provided for the widows of Civil War soldiers, sailors, and marines, and by this act from the date or dates when any such subsequent act or acts took effect or may hereafter take effect, it being the intent and purpose to give to any such widow the same status as other widows of Civil War soldiers, sailors, and marines who have not remarried, and from the date of said act of September 8, 1916.

SEC. 7. That nothing in this act contained shall be held to affect or diminish the additional pension to those on the roll designated as "The Army and Navy Medal of Honor Roll," as provided in the act of April 27, 1916, but any increase herein provided for shall be in addition thereto; and no pension heretofore granted under any act, public or private, shall be reduced by anything contained in this act.

SEC. 8. That no claim agent or attorney or other person shall be recognized in the adjustment of claims under this act, except in claims for original pension, and in such cases no more than the sum of $10 shall be allowed for services in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting any such claim, which sum shall be payable only on the order of the Commissioner of Pensions; and any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section, or shall wrongfully withhold from the pensioner or claimant the whole or any part of a pension allowed or due to such pensioner or claimant under this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall, for each and every offense, be fined not exceeding $500 or be imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Approved, May 1, 1920.

Personal Rural Credit.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ADDISON T. SMITH,

OF IDAHO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 29, 1920.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I regard the personal rural credit bill (H. R. 12678), introduced by my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN], as one of the most important measures presented in this Congress. In most of the European countries two systems of farm credit are in vogue; one based on land security and the other on personal security. The first enables a farmer to buy a home and the other enables him to make that home a profitable investment. Through the personal rural-credit system in Europe, honesty, energy, and frugality of the tenant farmer have been capitalized, and the actual tiller of the soil, regardless of whether he owns land or not, has a chance to develop. Unless we open the door of opportunity to our honest, energetic, and frugal, though poor, young men, we can not hope to induce them to go upon the farm, and in consequence our agriculture is bound to languish, the very thing which happened in Europe before the personal rural-credit systems were established there.

The McFadden bill is sound beyond question. Its basic principle is self-help. It trusts the farmer along sane lines to do a business necessary to the production of agriculture. It will dignify agriculture as it should be dignified by making it independent financially. The following is a summary of the bill, briefly stating its salient features:

SUMMARY OF THE MCFADDEN RURAL CREDIT BILL (H. R. 12678).

This bill creates a rural-credit society and general insurance league by two separate charters.

Three commissioners are provided for, whose duties are:

To arrange with a well-established life insurance company, having $400,000,000 assets, to accept the insurance charter created by the bill.

To establish the rural-credit society by organizing at least 20 local associations or communes in at least 6 States.

To choose three censors for the insurance league, who must be public certified accountants for five years.

To choose 10 temporary censors' electors for insurance league, who must be policyholders of insurance company in amounts not less than $10,000.

To designate the number of directors of league for first 10 years, which number shall be from 9 to 25.

To select first board of directors for insurance league.

To execute articles of agreement with officials of insurance company accepting such charter and file same with Secretary of Commerce.

I. RURAL-CREDIT SOCIETY.

To act as financial and fiscal agent of the Government, under regulations prescribed by Secretary of Agriculture and approved by the society's board of directors.

To conduct a general banking and credit business through its executive (national), branch (State), and commune (local) offices, but the communes shall not receive deposits nor the system issue currency.

CAPITAL.

Capital of central bank to be $25,000,000, to be furnished by Government without interest; but provision is made for raising sinking fund to discharge this loan.

Capital of each branch $50,000, to be furnished by insurance league in return for similar amount of 6 per cent stock of branch.

Capital of communes consists of $5 shares held by members, each of whom must own at least one share, and may own any number of shares. Rates of dividends on commune stock, determined by advisory council of State branch, not to exceed lowest rate at which loans were made in the State during the past year. Stock transferable only after its owner ceases to be a member.

Society makes such reports to Secretary of Agriculture as he may require.

Money obtained for loans to commune members by sale of bills of exchange called "grangers"; no one else allowed to use this term in a similar sense. (This is the principle of the British system of bills of exchange, which has enabled Great Britain, with a nominal capital, to become the bankers of the world.)

Penalty for embezzlement by any officer or agent of society, its branches, or communes, imprisonment for 1 to 10 years.

DIRECTORS (NATIONAL).

Board of directors of the society: One chosen from each State, term four years, by vote of chairmen of communes casting as many votes as his commune has members. Directors must be members of communes of first or second class. Directors have one vote each on board of directors. Terms of one-fourth of the directors expire each year. Salary of a director, $1,000 a year, provided he attends the annual meeting. Absence from two annual meetings during his term of office leads to removal of a director. Traveling expenses allowed for attendance at annual meetings. Directors may not, during their tenure of office, become a candidate for or hold any office under any government or with any political party. Directors may be recalled at any "confidence" election by a vote of the members of the communes of his district (State). Confidence elections are called by censors and auditor as occasion may require.

Officers of the national board of directors: President, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, one to three censors, executive committee, and such inspectors as may be required; chosen by the board of directors.

Duties other than those usual to such officers: President appoints managers of the State branches, selects depositaries for the funds of the society, and the fiscal and other agents of the society.

Censors: Entitled to attend all meetings of the board and the executive committee; audit the accounts and inspect the books of the society, its branches, and communes; have one of the keys to the securities vault; approve schedule of salaries of auditors and deputy auditors; jointly with the auditors call and supervise confidence elections; make annual report to the Secretary of Agriculture; must be certified public accountants of five years' standing; ineligible for reelection; salary $12,000, with expenses while traveling on duty.

Executive committee: Seven members, chosen by the board of directors; have such powers as board of directors delegate to them.

Auditors and deputy auditors: One auditor and as many deputy auditors as may be required (one for each branch); appointed for term of one year by president of the insurance league; salaries fixed by president of league, subject to approval of censors, and paid by the rural credit society; duties similar to those of the censors; they are a check on the censors.

BRANCHES (STATE).

One in each State (director's district); under direction and management of a manager, appointed by president of the society; deputy auditor, appointed by president of the league; advisory council, elected by supervisors of communes (see below); such other forces as the by-laws require.

Manager: Executive officer of the branch.

Deputy auditor: Under direction of national auditor.

Advisory council: Consists of five members; members must be members of first or second class communes; enact by-laws, rules, etc., governing State branch and local communes; elected for term of four years by supervisors of communes voting as a unit, casting as many votes as their respective communes have members; compensation, $5 a day and traveling expenses while attending meetings of council, the total compensation and expenses per year not to exceed $100 per individual; elects its own chairman, who calls and presides at meetings of the council.

COMMUNES (LOCAL).

Local voluntary organizations of farmers.

Officers, elected by vote of members, for term of one year: Visor (chairman), scribe (secretary), three or more supervisors (executive committee), and such inspection committees as may be required; each member must own stock in his commune; to become a voting member requires unanimous vote of the voting members; member may be expelled by majority vote; member may resign at any time, but his liability as a member does not cease till end of year in which he resigns.

Three classes of communes:

First class: Those in States permitting waiver of homestead and execution exemptions, and whose members make such waivers and agree to become jointly liable for loans made to members of their commune. Members may borrow up to twenty times their holdings of commune stock.

Second class. Those in States not permitting waivers of kinds above mentioned, but whose members agree to become jointly liable for loans made to members of their commune. Members may borrow up to ten times their holdings of commune stock.

Third class. Those whose members become liable only for what they borrow individually except to the extent of their unpaid subscriptions to commune stock. Their members may borrow up to five times their stock holdings.

Borrowers must state the purpose or purposes for which money borrowed through the commune is to be used.

Expenses of communes are to be paid by the members. These expenses are nominal.

Order of liability for loans made by communes:

1. The borrower himself.
2. Those who go security for the borrower, if any.
3. The borrower's commune stock.
4. Members of borrower's commune, if commune is of first or second class.
5. Surplus of State branch.
6. Stock of all the communes in the State.
7. Stock of the State branch.
8. The guaranty fund of the society.

Rates on loans are left to the communes. (It is presumed that they will not overcharge their members, for each of them may want to borrow himself. In general, these rates will be as low as the money can be obtained for through commercial channels, with the sound credit behind the rural credit society and its various subdivisions.)

Term of loans and manner of repayment determined by commune.

Funds for loans are raised by sale of bills of exchange:

To life insurance companies to meet their banking obligations.

To fire insurance companies to meet their conflagration losses.

To wage earners in industrial centers and other private investors.

Society given franking privilege to investigate credit status of members and of farmers wishing to become members.

II. GENERAL INSURANCE LEAGUE.

To act as the fiscal and financial agent of the Government under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce and approved by the league's board of directors.

To do and transact a general insurance business and sell indemnity against any and every contingency; but required to maintain a separate department for each class of business; but assets, capital, surplus, and funds of one department not liable for the debts, obligations, or defaults of another department, except its guaranty fund shall be a common fund of all departments, and 25 per cent of its general old-age pension fund may be used to protect the guaranty fund. (This general insurance charter conforms to the charters of the British insurance companies.)

Each department must have a fully paid capital of $100,000 and be represented by stock which shall earn a 7 per cent dividend.

SINKING FUND.

Each department shall maintain a sinking fund, which shall consist of the proceeds from the sale of the capital stock and 1 per cent of the premium receipts thereof until the capital is retired.

Object of sinking fund is to retire capital stock, raise guaranty fund of $1,000,000, and better protect stock and policy holders and cure any impairment in the safety fund of each department.

Stock of each department to be retired on basis voted by majority of stockholders, but no stock can be retired which would leave sinking fund with less than $1,000,000 of approved assets.

Guaranty fund: Remainder of sinking fund of each department not used to retire capital stock to become part of guaranty fund and be under the management of the life department.

Preliminary control: To be exercised by the three commissioners, whose duties are already enumerated.

Temporary control: To be exercised by the board of directors.

Permanent control: Ten years after the execution of articles of agreement by commissioners the league's directors must meet for the purpose of mutualizing the league by electing its first board of trustees. One trustee shall be elected from each of the 48 States and the District of Columbia having an eligible person residing therein to hold such office, and their successors shall be elected for a term of five years each by the positive electors of their respective States.

Positive elector is defined to be a citizen of the United States who has been insured with the league (or company reinsured by the league) for 10 years with a reserve value of not less than $5,000. Any State having 20 positive electors resident thereof shall be entitled to elect a trustee of the league by the ballots of its positive electors.

Negative elector is a citizen who has been insured 10 years under a policy with a reserve value of $500 to $5,000, and each county (and city having no county government) is denominated a confidence election district, and the negative electors of each confidence election district have the right to call confidence elections therein to disqualify any positive elector residing in the same, and any positive elector who fails to receive a vote of confidence at such election shall be rendered ineligible from holding the office of trustee or voting at an election for trustee. Twenty-five per cent of the negative electors, the president of the league, a majority of the censors or temporary censors, as the case may be, or 20 per cent of the trustees may call a confidence election.

Board of trustees shall meet annually to elect a president, secretary, seven members of the advisory council, and such other officers as the by-laws may prescribe, who shall hold office for one year each. Members of advisory council shall be positive electors, who shall exercise such power and authority as shall be delegated to them by the board of trustees.

Censors: The charter authorizes the league to negotiate with either the United Commercial Travelers or the Travelers' Protective Association for the purpose of inducing one of them to make the league its official life insurance organization and elect its permanent censors. This conforms with the practice of one of the old British companies which induced the United Commercial Travelers of the United Kingdom of Great Britain to make it their official life insurance company. Before that it had done no business to amount to anything, as its assets were less than $1,000,000, but 30 years later its assets exceeded $80,000,000, and, with one exception, it was doing twice as much ordinary business as any other British company.

The censors possess the same qualifications and are to be paid the same salaries as the temporary censors, and they each possess the same powers and authority, viz: To supervise all elections, audit the accounts, verify the statements, and inspect the books, papers, transactions, and properties of the league, become the custodians of one of the keys to the securities' vault, and approve each by-law, contract, and agreement in which a director, trustee, or officer making the same is to acquire a direct personal interest. (This system of inspection conforms to those of some of the greatest public-service corporations in Europe, which are free from such scandals as so frequently occur among our Government-inspected corporations.)

Members of board of trustees and advisory council shall not hold an elective office under any government or with any political party.

The agreement of league with such commercial travelers' order must be approved by the Secretary of Commerce. The league is authorized to raise a special old-age pension fund for such order, making the league its official life insurance company, but no person holding an office or other position with the league shall become a beneficiary of such fund.

General old-age pension fund is provided for, the objects being to encourage our youth to capitalize their future income and protect themselves against want in old age and to better protect the policyholders of all the departments. Authority is given for the voluntary endowment of such fund, and anyone endowing it in the sum of $1,000,000 shall have the right to select the name of a benefactor, which name shall be printed on all checks remitting the available portion of such fund to the beneficiaries thereof.

Penalty for embezzlement by any director, trustee, officer, or agent of league imprisonment for 2 to 10 years, and same penalty to be imposed on any director, trustee, or officer who knowingly, without first obtaining the written approval of the censors, makes a contract or enacts a by-law for the league through which he is to acquire a direct personal interest.

The league accepts the trust toward the rural credit society imposed under the two charters, viz:

To invest $50,000 in the stock of each of the 48 branches of rural credit society, on which the league is to be paid a dividend of 6 per cent per annum, which stock is nonassignable.

To invest $100,000 in the credit paper of rural credit society.

To select one auditor and as many deputy auditors for the rural credit society as president of the league deems necessary, and prepare a schedule of compensation for them and submit same to censors of rural credit society for their approval.

To act as trustee for the acceptance and investment of the guaranty fund of rural credit society, for the risk and expense of which trust the league is to be paid one-half of 1 per cent per annum.

Personal Rural Credit Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LOUIS T. McFADDEN,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 30, 1920.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am in receipt of a letter from Dr. W. J. Spillman indorsing my bill (H. R. 12678) to establish a personal rural credit system, which I ask to be incorporated in my remarks. Dr. Spillman was for 16 years head of the Bureau of Farm Organizations of the Department of Agriculture, and is now the Washington correspondent and associate editor of the Farm Journal, of Philadelphia, the biggest farm journal in the world. He is also a member of the committee appointed by the Agricultural Editors' Association, which met in Chicago recently, to study my rural credit bill and report to the association. This letter was written after he had given that bill his very careful study.

Some evil-minded persons are circulating the false report that I am opposed to the Capper-Hersman bill legalizing collective marketing. Nothing could be further from the truth than such report. The principle embodied in that bill is economically sound, because every dollar wasted in marketing any commodity is an added burden imposed on the consumer. Instead of opposing this measure, I have most diligently worked for its enactment into law. On yesterday I received a letter from Mr. Charles A. Layman, secretary National Board of Farm Organizations, of this city, which fully states my position. He wrote:

DEAR MR. MCFADDEN: I have your letter of April 26 addressed to the three farm organizations who wrote you a few days ago with reference to the Capper-Hersman bill legalizing collective bargaining.

I am indeed glad to know that you are heartily in favor of this measure.

Yours, truly, CHAS. A. LAYMAN.

I have frequently discussed the merits of this bill with Mr. John D. Miller, attorney of the Dairymen's League, and in company with him visited the Hon. A. J. VOLSTEAD, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, which has it under consideration, where we presented the merits of the bill. I have cooperated with grange and other leaders of farmers organizations for the enactment of this bill into law. In this connection I wish to quote a letter I recently received from Mr. VOLSTEAD. He wrote:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 22, 1920.

Hon. L. T. MCFADDEN,
House of Representatives, United States.

DEAR MR. MCFADDEN: I have your note asking the status of the Capper-Hersman bill. Since you called in regard to this legislation I have been trying to get the views of different persons in regard to the tentative draft I made of the new bill. I am especially anxious to get the opinion of Mr. J. D. Miller. I wrote him some time ago, but he has probably been too busy or he is perhaps taking time to consult with others interested in this legislation. Possibly you might reach him. However, I expect to hear from him in a day or two. If I remember correctly, you told me when you and he called in regard to this matter that he is a constituent of yours.

I hope to be able to get this legislation in shape in the near future so that we can get it reported to the House in a form satisfactory to those interested in it. I wish that friends of this measure would take as much real interest in it as you have. If they would, we should have but little trouble.

Very truly, yours, A. J. VOLSTEAD.

I have always worked for legislation which would benefit the farming interests. I voted for the Federal farm-loan bill, and have worked to have it amended so as to prevent inflation, just as the author of the bill has done, the Hon. CARTER GLASS.

The letter of Dr. Spillman is as follows:

[The Farm Journal, Washington Square, Philadelphia.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 28, 1920.

Hon. LOUIS T. MCFADDEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MCFADDEN: The need for a comprehensive scheme of personal short-time credit for farmers is just as urgent as was formerly the need for long-time credit. Agricultural production lags for want of sufficient fluid capital for financing short-time operations on the farm. City business men are supplied with credit of this kind suited to their needs. But the ordinary commercial banks do not meet the needs of farmers. We therefore need comprehensive legislation that will make money for short-time loans of personal security available generally to farmers.

During the past month I have made a careful study of the bill introduced by you, H. R. 12678, providing a means whereby farmers can secure such credit. The more I study your bill the more firmly I am convinced that it is constructed on right principles, and that it will accomplish the purpose in view. This bill is in no way inimical to any business interest, and will greatly stimulate agricultural production by providing an abundance of capital for farm needs at the lowest commercial rates on absolutely sound security. I do not see how any security, even Government bonds, can form a sounder basis for credit than would the bills of exchange provided in your bill. This should make every idle dollar in this country available for farm loans at low rates of interest.

One of the most important features of this bill is the autonomy it gives the local organizations of farmers in determining the rate of interest on loans, as well as the length of time loans shall run and the manner of repayment, whether monthly, annually, etc. The entire rural-credit system provided in the bill is actually under the control of its members, all of whom must be farmers. The bill provides checks and controls that make misconduct on the part of the officers of the organization practically impossible. At the same time it gives the officers the services of the best financial experts in the country.

The insurance feature of the bill is a distinct advantage. Credit on the basis of destructible property requires insurance. Mortgage loans made by the Federal farm land banks require it on farm improvements. The entire plan of insurance in your bill is carefully thought out, and would tend to make the system work smoothly and efficiently.

I am so impressed with the value of this particular bill that I am urging my friends amongst the editors of agricultural papers to come to its support. I sincerely hope that the bill may be enacted into law.

Yours, very truly, W. J. SPILLMAN,
Associate Editor.

Multiplying Millionaires—Shall We Limit Incomes?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN M. EVANS,

OF MONTANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, May 11, 1920.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, in the few minutes allotted me I want to talk about taxation and the method adopted and to be adopted to raise the necessary revenue to meet the obligations of the Government. For some weeks the great Ways and Means Committee of this House has been considering what is commonly called the "soldiers' bonus bill," and a few days ago tentatively agreed to report to this House such a measure. This proposed bill carried a provision for the purpose of financing the measure, commonly called a "sales tax." This sales tax is designed to raise about a billion and a half dollars by placing a tax on all sales of commodities that enter into our everyday affairs. This provision met with such instant and emphatic protest from the Members of this House and the people of the country generally that the whole bill was withdrawn and now awaits further consideration of the committee.

Mr. Speaker, the great mass of the American people can not stand any additional burden of taxation, and they can not and will not approve any form of taxation that compels the consumer under the guise of taxation to pay into the hands of the profiteer a sum oftentimes much larger than the tax itself. This so-called sales tax will be used as a pretext for enhancing the price of every article that enters into our daily needs many times more than the amount of the tax. This has been clearly demonstrated by such taxes in the past materially increasing the cost of articles.

It is a return to the methods of the feudal ages, it is unjust and iniquitous. It should not be, and will not be, quietly submitted to by the people. The people have almost reached the limit of endurance. The high cost of living is the specter that sits at every table in every home in the land. With wages higher than ever before in our history, the clerk, the bookkeeper, the teacher, the mechanic, the farmer, and the laborer all alike feel the presence of an unseen but all-pervading oppression. In their bitterness they blame one another. The farmer blames the middleman. The mechanic blames the butcher, the baker, and the grocer, and these shift the blame back to the farmer, the stock raiser, and the dairyman. When the pinch first came we were in the midst of war, and conditions which were believed to be the result of war were borne with patriotic spirit—with patience and submission.

The war is over now and still the burdens increase and their taxes multiply. While the war lasted the people, patriotic to the core, expected and were willing to bear the sacrifice; but, with the war over, they find conditions aggravated without apparent reason; the wage earners are disappointed and discontented. And while the condition of the masses is in this intolerable plight they see vast fortunes accumulated and still accumulating in almost every branch of industry. They note that over 4,000 millionaires were created by the war. They note that the big corporations were declaring dividends of 100 per cent out of those very things in which the prices have mounted highest and which make the largest draft upon their earnings.

With the amassing of the big fortunes goes an era of waste, extravagance, and self-indulgence on the part of the owners that is breaking down the moral fiber of our people and tending to obliterate all sense of integrity and fair play. As naturally as the night follows the day a sense of resentment grows in the hearts of the great masses. It is time for discerning men everywhere to try to interpret the signs of the times.

TAXATION NECESSARY.

Taxation is necessary, of course, Mr. Speaker—additional taxation is probably necessary—but to lay a heavier burden upon the backs and stomachs of that class of our people who now struggle for a bare existence is monstrous. There is wealth enough in this country to bear all necessary taxes, and it must not and shall not be laid on bare backs and empty bellies.

BILL 13786.

A few days ago I introduced bill No. 13786, designed to increase the excess profits and income tax and to limit the size of any man's or corporation's annual income to $250,000. I realize, Mr. Speaker, that men will hold up their hands in holy horror at such a proposition. They will characterize me as a destructionist and an anarchist, but I am neither.

I am no more an anarchist than the man who advocates the repeal of the excess-profits tax. Already there is a propaganda being carried on to abolish this tax. Every mail brings to our desk heartrending appeals showing how iniquitous the excess-profits tax is; how it is added directly to the cost of their production and is paid, in the long run, by the consumer. Influential papers, big bankers, and chambers of commerce, controlled by the financial and industrial leaders in their respective communities, all join in the chorus. They all sing the same song. Their interest in the common people is marvelously strong as well as pathetic. And, then, to appeal to the Government side of the question, they tell us how intricate and irritable these taxes are, how difficult they are to compute, and how expensive they are to the Government to collect. From what sources do they expect the taxes to come? They are men of affairs, who ought to be interested in the welfare of their country; they know the taxes must be raised; they know these taxes at least are only a part of the profits they make in excess of what they would or even did make in normal times or under normal conditions of the country and the world. The attitude of the propagandist may well be illustrated by the following quotation from a recent issue of the bulletin published by the New York Chamber of Commerce:

> The detrimental and deadening effect of the heavy taxes on incomes and the profit taxes is now generally recognized. Such exactions from the larger incomes, both individual and corporate, result in the absorption by Government of that portion of the income of the country's industry which would naturally be annually added to capital.

Solicitous, indeed, are these gentlemen about capital, but they say nothing about the needs of their Government; they give no thought or heed to the ever-mounting price of necessities of life that must be purchased by the poor. We know, of course, what the corporations will do with the margin of excess profits left to them after the repeal of the excess-profits tax. We know they will add this margin to their capital, because that is what they have been doing right along. For instance, the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana has just increased its capital from $1,000,000 to $30,000,000. Many of the branches of the Standard Oil Co. throughout the United States have surpluses far in excess of their permitted capital waiting for the opportunity—the propitious moment—to increase their capitalization. The Atlantic Refining Co. has increased its capital from $5,000,000 to $50,000,000. The Continental Oil Co. has raised its capital from $3,000,000 to $18,000,000.

Of course, all these increases in capital simply mean turning the surplus and excess profits into the capitalization, followed by a general distribution of the increased stock among the stockholders.

For instance, the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey has a capital of $98,338,382 and a surplus of about $500,000,000.

If, as many men now believe, the amassing of these great fortunes is a menace to the country, obviously there is but one thing to do, and that is to fix a point beyond which men and corporations can not go.

In the last published report of the Internal Revenue Bureau of the Treasury Department, that of 1917—the figures for 1918 and 1919 are not yet tabulated—we find this startling situation:

MULTIPLYING MILLIONAIRES.

In 1914 there were 2,348 millionaires in the United States. In 1917, the last date for which the figures are collected and summarized, there were 6,664, or an increase of 4,316 in three years. Dividing them into classes, according to occupation, there were of manufacturers 920 new millionaires made during the war. There were of farmers and stock raisers, 120; of corporation officials, 716. There were lawyers and judges to the number of 206. There were 27 doctors. There were 452 women in the list. There was one man whose net income, after paying his income tax, was $34,936,604. There was another whose net income was $5,794,559. There were 8 whose net incomes were $4,000,000 and their aggregate net income was $7,000,000; there were 5 whose net incomes were over $3,000,000 and their aggregate net income was over $16,000,000; there were 24 whose net income was over $2,000,000 and whose aggregate net income was $58,000,000; there were 33 whose net incomes were between $1,500,000 and $2,000,000; and there were 67 people in the United States whose aggregate net income was $80,413,549, who had net incomes between $1,000,000 and $1,500,000 each. Those having net incomes between $500,000 and $1,000,000 were 315 and their aggregate net income was $214,000,000. In other words, there were 460 persons, less than a battalion of fighting men, in the United States whose aggregate net income was $520,835,914.

I hope I may not be misunderstood. I am not attacking capital or capitalists. I am attacking the conditions and the laws that permit a few men to accumulate these immense fortunes. I am not asking that a dollar of invested capital be taken from anyone. I am asking that the laws be so changed that it will be impossible in the future for any individual to so corner the wealth of the country as to become a menace.

Only yesterday the dispatches in the daily press carried the news item that a large department house in New York announced that beginning with that day $20,000,000 worth of goods would be sold at a reduction of 20 per cent in the sale price. This institution should not be condemned—perhaps it should be applauded—but to the average mind it seems apparent that if this institution can at one stroke of a pen cut its selling price of $20,000,000 worth of goods 20 per cent that it must have been making an abnormal profit before the cut.

My aim is to lessen the tyranny of money. We can not hope to destroy the insatiable appetite for accumulation, but we can fix a point beyond which men can not retain when they have accumulated, and then the incentive and desire to amass menacing fortunes will disappear.

THE REMEDY.

What is our remedy? Simply discourage profiteering enterprises by increasing the rate of taxation on annual net incomes in excess of $100,000 by graduated steps, making the tax 100 per cent on all incomes in excess of $250,000. This is the plan I propose in H. R. 13786, for which I respectfully ask your careful study and consideration.

On net incomes between $100,000 and $125,000 I would increase the rate of taxation to 55 per cent; between $125,000 and $150,000 I would make the tax 60 per cent; between $150,000 and $175,000, 70 per cent; between $175,000 and $200,000, 80 per cent; between $200,000 and $225,000, 90 per cent; and on all net annual incomes above $250,000 I would place the tax at 100 per cent.

I do not believe that the Government should collect any taxes on incomes of individuals of over $250,000. There should be no such incomes.

AS TO CORPORATIONS.

This bill likewise limits the income of corporations to a similar amount. It allows its normal exemption, its running expenses, depreciation, and so forth, and allows it 8 per cent on invested capital for the year, and then make a profit of $250,000.

In my judgment that is enough money for any individual or company to make in any one year, and when the incentive for profiteering is removed profiteering will cease and it will all redound to the good of the Nation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN J. BABKA,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, May 6, 1920.

Mr. BABKA. Mr. Speaker, on April 22 I introduced the following bill in the House:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of title 2 of the national prohibition act is hereby amended by adding at the end of said section the following: "Provided, however, That the above construction of the word 'liquor' or the phrase 'intoxicating liquor,' so far as it relates to beer, ale, porter, and wine, shall not apply in those States which through a referendum vote shall adopt a different construction for the word 'liquor' or the phrase 'intoxicating liquor,' and any State may through a referendum vote of the people place such construction upon the word 'liquor' or the phrase 'intoxicating liquor' as shall not include within the operation of this act beer, ale, and porter up to 4 per cent alcoholic content by volume and wine up to 10 per cent alcoholic content by volume, and the Federal Government hereby concurs in such construction under the concurrent provision of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, said referendum to be placed upon the ballot at any special election for that purpose called by the governor of any State, or at any State or national election, whenever the governor of such State, in his discretion, may so direct or whenever 15 per cent of the voters of such State shall so petition the secretary of state of such State at least 30 days before the said election."

I wish to thank the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNES] for kindly yielding me this time so that I might discuss this measure. Mr. Speaker, the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States provides that the several States and the Federal Government shall have concurrent jurisdiction in its enforcement.

This bill would so amend the Volstead Act as to enable the States to take advantage of this provision. Why should they not have it? Why should they be deprived of the sovereignty which is guaranteed every State by the Constitution? Can there be any valid objection to allowing the people of each State to settle the question as to what is and what is not to be considered criminal within its own borders? No one has ever questioned the right of a State to declare what shall be a crime within its border. No one has ever before been heard to say that the Federal Government could write a criminal code for a State or define as a crime an act committed wholly within its boundary. Everyone knows that the fixing of the alcoholic contents in beverages at one-half of 1 per cent is purely arbitrary and not based on any scientific proof. Experts disagree as to the exact percentage of alcoholic contents at which a beverage becomes intoxicating, but most of them admit that it is higher than that fixed by the Volstead Act. After all is said and done, it depends upon the amount of the beverage consumed. I can imagine that there are those who will consume even enough of the one-half of 1 per cent stuff to saturate their system with alcohol; but that ought not to make it impossible for a man desiring to partake of a beverage fit for a human being to have it if he wants it. Let some of these advocates of the Volstead Act go into the mills and factories, do a real man's work, and then try to invigorate themselves by a drink of this one-half of 1 per cent. If they did I am sure they would soon change their tune. Mr. Speaker, my bill will permit the citizens of each State to decide for themselves what shall or what shall not be considered intoxicating within its jurisdiction. If the people of Georgia or some other State wish to drink Coca-Cola or rain water, that is their privilege. But why should they have the right to prescribe what my good people of the great State of Ohio shall drink? I insist that the people of Ohio shall decide for themselves their mode of living. My bill does not interfere with the desires of the people of any other State. It will permit the people of each State to decide for themselves.

Mr. Speaker, not only has the Volstead Act done away with an income of $444,000,000, but it has added an expenditure to the cost of the administration of $50,000,000, according to the best estimates. In addition, the Anti-Saloon League is asking the American people for contributions of $27,920,300 to enable it to assist the Government in enforcing this law. In all the cost of enforcement of this law is to be something like $88,000,000, as against an income prior to its enactment of $444,000,000. Therefore the total cost of this pernicious legislation is about $532,000,000. What an awful price to pay for this hobby of a minority.

We have just come out of the World War. Four millions and a half of our young men who were taken from their employment and placed in training camps and in the trenches and on the battle line have returned. They find that their enforced absence was taken advantage of by the enemies of personal liberty; that their victory, which they believed made the world safe for democracy, has made their own country intolerant; that their lives are to be hemmed in by this repressive law. Is it any wonder that they are dissatisfied and that grumbling sounds are heard everywhere? Mr. Speaker, Congress is now considering a measure intended to partly compensate those brave boys for their suffering. Appreciating that they were compelled to endure the tortures of hell in bringing the laurel wreath of victory to our arms, while those of us who stayed at home were enabled, by reason of the conditions which brought only suffering to them, to earn double and sometimes treble the wages that we earned before, we are about to enact the so-called soldiers' bonus law.

This meritorious law has been delayed because of the difficulty of raising money by reason of our depleted Treasury. This question has taxed the brains of our experienced legislators. It will cost about $2,500,000,000 if the plan advocated by the American Legion is adopted. The only way this can be done now is to impose additional taxes of one kind or another on the already overburdened and overtaxed American people. Mr. Speaker, I believe that if the Volstead Act be amended by the enactment of this measure a very large majority of the States will avail themselves of the opportunity to liberalize the enforcement of the prohibition amendment. This will reestablish the income of about $444,000,000 which is now lost to the Treasury, and wipe out the expenditure necessary in the enforcement of prohibition of $88,000,000. In this way about $532,000,000 can be raised yearly without the necessity of raising the taxes. Every penny asked for by the brave boys who sacrificed so much for their country in its hour of need could be raised within the short period of four years without imposing any additional burdens upon the people.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GORDON LEE,

OF GEORGIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, May 13, 1920.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to discuss the tariff question, but to mention it as leading up to conditions that have caused great changes in the distribution of the population of the country. The artificially high prices of manufactured products enabled the manufacturers to pay their labor good wages. They could do it, and they did it to an extent that made wages in the manufacturing industries higher than wages on the farms. Life in the cities became more remunerative than life in the country, and as a result the farms suffered. The movement from the country to the cities has been in progress for many years, and it is attributable in part to the fact that the class of work that was done in the cities was more profitable than the work that was done in the country. Young men were tempted from the farms by the more lucrative work they could obtain in the cities. In 1880 the urban population of the country was only 14,772,438, but it had grown to 42,623,383 by 1910, practically a threefold increase, while the population of the rural districts was 35,383,345 in 1880 and had grown to 49,343,883 by 1910, a gain of little more than 50 per cent in 30 years. If the rural districts had made no gains from immigration, but had relied only on the increase from births, their population would have been fully 60,000,000 by 1910. Fully 11,000,000 men had gone from the country to the cities in 30 years to help make up their gain of 28,000,000 made during that period.

Two and a half times as many people lived in the rural as in the urban parts of the country in 1880, while in 1910 there were fewer than one-sixth more in the country than in the cities. The census of 1920 will be published in a few months, and while no one knows definitely what it will show, it is certain to show that the urban population of the country now exceeds the rural population, for the last four years has been a period of depletion of the farms and the upbuilding of the cities such as has never been known before.

Our economic system drew the population from the farms because it made farming comparatively unprofitable, and with the flow of population from the country to the cities farm production declined. It did not decline actually and absolutely, but it declined relatively. The number of consumers increased so much more than the number of producers of farm products that the surplus for export declined and in some cases disappeared. The law of supply and demand increased the price paid for farm products when the demand for them in this country had increased so much more than the supply of them. The result has been a return of prosperity to the farms. When war shook the world with its convulsions and the plowshare was turned into the sword and the pruning hook into the spear the hope of Western Europe was centered on the farmers of the United States. Whole nations had changed from the work of production to the work of destruction. Fields lay idle, and streams turned machinery for little except making material for war. But food had to be supplied, and the farmers of the United States were called on to supply it. If they had slighted their tasks the western world would have starved. They were working at a disadvantage, but they toiled on early and late. A great part of their help had gone to the cities to engage in the more remunerative war work, for the combatants needed arms and ammunition as badly as they needed food. With their labor depleted and disorganized by the war, the farmers bent to the task, and they accomplished it to a degree that was little short of miraculous. They did not strike; they did not loiter on their jobs; they prospered, but contented themselves with less than others demanded and received. They changed from nonessential to essential crops; they did the full duty of men, and their labors saved the situation. But increased production with fewer workers would not have been possible if the Government had not waked up to the necessity of doing something for the men who lived on the farms. Other classes had been the recipients of Government favors, while the farmers had been left to take care of themselves. But men began to see from the drift that if something were not done and done quickly this country would in a few more years have to rely on others for its food.

The war was not necessary to bring out this fact, but it was necessary to emphasize it. Before the outbreak of the war in Europe Congress began to show by its acts that it appreciated the need of encouraging agriculture, which up to that time had been permitted to take care of itself and had also been burdened by the measures provided for taking care of other lines of production. It did not tax other industries to assist the farmers. It did not care for them by levying high import duties to prevent the competition of agricultural workers in other countries. It could not have helped them in this way if it would, for agricultural production in most lines was still in excess of the needs of the country, and home competition would have made it impossible for a tariff to increase the price of agricultural products. The encouragement given the farmers had to be given in other ways.

While during the last six or seven years Congress has done a great deal for the development of agriculture, it can not properly be said that it has enacted class legislation. Everything that has been done for the farmers has also benefited those who use farm products, and that means all the people of the United States. The consumer gets the benefit in lower prices of increased production or distribution. The prices of agricultural products are high, but not as high as would have been the case if agricultural development had not been encouraged by law.

The object was to increase production and secure economies in production and in distribution, and while the farmer has gained by the efforts made in this line he has not gained more than the consumer. It can not be said that Congress has given the farmer anything—it has simply gotten things out of his way.

One of the greatest hindrances of agricultural production has been found in the fact that the farmer has not been able to borrow money easily or at reasonable rates. He has been compelled to pay higher interest than others paid in order to get credit to carry on his business. To remedy this the Federal reserve act authorizes national banks to lend money on farm mortgages.

The farm loan act creates a banking system for the use of the agricultural classes and it is so operated as to meet the farmers' needs. It is attracting capital to the farms and is reducing the interest the farmers are required to pay. The farmer can now get money as easily as the merchant or the manufacturer. These acts have not placed him at an advantage, but have placed him on terms of equality with business men of other classes. Cheaper money easier to borrow brings about an economy in production.

Congress has also given its attention to economies in distribution. Bad roads have been a source of great waste to the farmers and to those who have bought their products. Those who have given the road question the greatest attention say that the cost of getting products to and from the railroad stations has been greater than that of getting them from the stations to the great markets. Bad roads have cost the people more than freight rates, and that is billions of dollars a year.

The Federal aid road act made available $285,000,000 for cooperation between the Federal and State Governments in the construction of roads. The sum named, large as it is, is only a starter, for the States have to contribute equally with the Federal Government, and this spreads the good-roads fever to the counties. It is safe to say that the sum appropriated by the Federal Government is quadrupled in the building of roads by the influence it exerts on States and counties. This saving by enabling the farmers to haul heavier loads, and haul them quicker, is incalculable, and its benefits are shared by the producer and consumer.

Another advantage of good roads is found in the fact that they give easy access to the towns and the diversions that may be found in them. It makes life on the farms more pleasant and tends to check the movement from the country to the cities. With good roads the country and the city are brought so close together that the people of each may enjoy the pleasures of the other.

The extension of the parcel post has put the farmers and their city customers in touch, enabling the former to get more for their products, and the latter to get more for their money. To the extent that this is used, the middleman is eliminated, the farmer dealing directly with his customer.

In times past the farmer marketed his crops when gathered. The demand for his products extended throughout the year, but he needed to sell at once. As a result, at the time when the farmers were selling the supply of products was vastly greater than the demand for them and at that period of the year the price was lower than at any other time. The warehouse act enables the Department of Agriculture to license bonded warehouses, and this makes possible the issuance of reliable and easily negotiable warehouse receipts, enabling the farmer to store his products until he can get a legitimate price for them—a price not fixed by temporary oversupply but one that is fixed by the average supply and demand for the entire year. The farmer is thus enabled to get a higher price for his products while the consumer does not pay a higher price. The arrangement merely tends to eliminate the speculator and divide the profits he made between the producer and the consumer.

Within the last few years Congress has provided standards for cotton and for grain, and the tendency of these is to enable the farmer to get a better price for his products. It is impossible in the time at my disposal to even enumerate the thousand and one things that have been done to help the farmers help the consumers. Every appropriation made to the Department of Agriculture would come in this list.

This department is without a rival on earth. No other country has any agency for the encouragement of agricultural work that compares with it at all. It is in a class by itself.

In the Department of Agriculture we have the largest and most efficient collection of specialists that can be found under the sun. Each man is a scientist and an enthusiast and each feels that his work is the most pleasant, the most useful, the most important that man can do.

The department is combating diseases of animals and of plants. It is fighting every pest that interferes with production. Its activities are limited only by the amount of money that can be spared for its use.

The inauguration of a Bureau of Markets was an important step toward the elimination of waste, and waste is a dead loss. The information this bureau is circulating is already of inestimable value, and it is of growing value. To say nothing of the probability of a more extended support of this bureau by Federal legislation, it is growing because the men it serves are learning more and more of the advantages its information offers and more and more they will be guided by it to their profit and to the profit of the people at large. The question of distribution is a most important one, and this bureau will exert a very great influence on its proper solution in the future.

We have been trying to get obstacles out of the farmers' way, and we have provided for more than the mere removal of hindrances. The Smith-Lever Act provides a nation-wide system of instruction for farmers in their home counties. Agricultural and home demonstration agents in the several counties carry instruction in agriculture into the homes of the people. They are ready with advice that is both scientific and practical and their advice is at the service of any who call for it. Their assistance is worth much even to the experienced farmers, who are not always up on the latest and best methods, and it is absolutely of priceless benefit to men who are starting in agriculture or are beginning work of this kind under environments with which they are not familiar. Through the organization of boys' and girls' clubs, these men are extending their instruction and their encouragement to the youth of the land, and many of the youngsters working on a small scale are making phenomenal yields. The emulation that is incited calls forth the best efforts of the boys and girls who enter the contests of production, and the foundation is being laid for a scientific agriculture that will before many years entirely supplant the haphazard methods that have been too much in evidence in the past.

Other things may be more striking now than this agricultural educational work; but it is building for the future, and we believe that it will mean in another generation that agriculture will be conducted in this country on a wiser plane than any other business in which Americans are engaged. The next generation of farmers will apply to their work the best information that is both scientific and practical, and the result will be better returns from the cultivation of the soil than any nation has ever known.

No nation can attain the maximum of development that does not possess the power of sustaining itself so far as the larger division of activities is concerned. I do not mean to say that each nation should grow or manufacture products that it could buy from others to greater advantage. What I mean is that its agricultural, its manufacturing, its transportation, its mining production should be sufficient to supply its people with necessities if they were cut off from the balance of the world, and it should not depend on other nations for ships to handle its commerce.

Of course, the first industry to develop is agriculture, and our country was not the first to leave this industry to take care of itself and build on it foundations for the establishment of other industries. But other industries have been established and have grown in volume of investments and in value of products beyond the development of this industry on which every man, woman, and child in the world must lean for support. Agriculturally our country is the greatest among the nations of the earth, but it is also the greatest manufacturing country, and its lead in manufacturing is greater than its lead in agriculture.

It behooves us as guides in the progress of this great Nation to turn our attention in greater measure than ever before to upbuilding of the rural districts. It is our road of least resistance and therefore our road to the greatest accomplishments. We are enjoying a manufacturing prosperity such as no nation has ever enjoyed before, and are producing a larger volume of manufactured commodities than has ever been produced by any nation in the world's history; but this development will not continue its gains and it is not best for us that it should continue. The country is now paying for its manufacturing development in the high cost of living. It is taxing men in the cities and towns and calling forth complaints from all parts of the land.

In manufacturing we will do well to hold our own. We have gained our unquestioned supremacy through artificial conditions. Our competitors have been compelled to drop out of the contest. They have been destroying instead of building. Before the outbreak of the war the United States was the greatest of all manufacturing countries, but it was not so far in the lead as it is now and would not have been so far in the lead if the industries of other countries had not been compelled to cease to compete. Soon they will resume, and we will face the rivalry of a Europe nerved to greater energies by the war and accustomed by it to greater economies. We should hold our own; we must hold our own; we will hold our own.

But we need to bring agriculture to the front rank again. By doing this we will bless all classes and lay more solidly and more enduringly the foundation on which all industries stand.

When we build up the country we build up the cities. The wonderful growth of the last century has been directly or indirectly due to our vast area. Men came to till our land or they came to do in the cities the work that would not have been profitable if there had not been a large rural population to support the cities.

But we have taken a long look ahead. The movement now is from the country to the cities and the evil results to the country as a whole are already felt. We need to turn the tide back by increasing the attractiveness of farm life, by the campaign of education that is now being waged throughout the Nation—a campaign that resulting in better methods will secure increased production from the men who are now on the farms—and by removing all hindrances to successful farming that can be removed by legislation. We have done a great deal but it is only a start, and when we continue and enlarge our efforts we will understand, and the people will understand, that what we are doing for the farmers we are doing for the people of the United States.

The farmers are now prosperous in all parts of the country though they are not combined to extort higher wages or higher prices. They do not demand a six or seven or eight hour day. They work while they can see, and they produce all they can.

They plant hoping that the seasons may be propitious but knowing they may lose the fruit of their labors by flood or drought or pest. If they lose they take it as their share and try again, and in the long run nature evens up things and rewards them for their toil.

Agriculture is not sectional. It distributes its rewards throughout all parts of the country. On the slopes whose waters flow into the Atlantic, among the mountains that divide the streams flowing into the Gulf from those seeking the oceans, in the valleys and on the plains of the great Mississippi Basin, and on the lands that look across the Pacific, the farmers are at work, the earth yields its harvest of food and fruit and of material for clothing, and plenty reigns.

Mr. Speaker, our agricultural legislation has been filled with progressive proposals in the interest of the American farmer, and I think it can be said without a doubt that more has been done for agriculture within the last 6 years through Federal laws and appropriations than during any period of 50 years combined in the history of this country, and I am proud to have had my humble part in this great work.

SPEECH

OF

HON. RUFUS HARDY,

OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, April 14, 1920.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13587) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, when the so-called peace resolution that was adopted last Friday was before the House I could get no opportunity to discuss it. I am going to use this 10 minutes to discuss that resolution, and in the meantime I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I shall read some of the observations which were made in a speech upon the subject of the peace treaty and the relation of our country to our allies before the treaty was concluded and while it was being discussed and presented at the peace table. This speech was by a great leader, in fact, I might say the great leader, of the Republican Party in its fight upon the League of Nations and the treaty generally which was negotiated by the President at Versailles. It was delivered on December 21, 1918, and at that time nobody knew what form the treaty would take. In my humble judgment, this leader at that time laid down a program for the President at the peace council which he did not believe Mr. Wilson could put through. I think he thought that at the peace table there would be a great deal of discord, and that our President's ideals, which were the ideals of this great leader himself, if we may judge by his previous speeches, could never win the support of our associates in the war. It was known that Lloyd-George and Clemenceau then favored the old systems of international alliances for the maintenance of a balance of power as against a League of Nations to enforce the peace of the world. It was believed that the President's ideals of a just peace, without any indemnities beyond actual reparations for injuries sustained, a peace securing the rights and safety of small nations and the right of self-determination for such small nations, would not be accepted by our associates. I think that I can show that nearly everything urged by this leader as proper and desirable was actually secured by the President and incorporated into the treaty, but it utterly failed to satisfy this leader, and he has fought its ratification with an unparalleled bitterness. He and his party associates have fought this treaty, and in so doing brought discord and bitterness between us and our associates in the war.

This great leader then said:

If peace with Germany is to be durable, terms must be exacted which will make it, so far as human foresight goes, impossible for Germany to break out again upon the world with a war of conquest. At this juncture of affairs Germany would sign anything, and her pledge would be as worthless as the guaranties she gave to Belgium. The deep-rooted ambitions, the evil principles carefully instilled for half a century, the barbarous methods and doctrines all remain unaltered. Physical guaranties can alone assure a durable peace with Germany. They include the restoration of Belgium, the return of Alsace-Lorraine to France, of Italy irredenta to Italy, the establishment of a Jugo-Slav State, and of an independent State formed by the Czecho-Slovaks. They include also the security of Greece, the settlement of Albania and Montenegro, the restoration of Roumania, as well as the neutralization of the straits, the putting of Constantinople under international protection, with Greece perhaps as the mandatory of the powers to administer the affairs of the city; the independence of Armenia; protection of Syria and Palestine from the Turks, etc. These physical guaranties which I have thus far suggested all have one object, and that is to so hem Germany in that she can not attempt conquest in Russia or the East, and that the Slavic populations, which she had mercilessly used in her wars, can never be so used by her again.

He then goes on to advocate very heavy indemnities against Germany and the nonreturn of her colonies to her as a means of preventing her extending her commerce and building up military outposts in all parts of the world. He declares:

It is the duty of the Allies and the United States to meet and determine what terms they will impose on Germany, and then, and not until then, call in the representatives of Germany and impose the terms upon her. When this is done the first great step will be taken toward the establishment of world peace. If we eliminate Germany from the opportunity to make war, the only source from which a great war is likely to come would be closed for generations.

I have read this much to show that when this great leader talked then he was not hunting for German votes. He was harder on the Germans than ever the President was. He wanted to utterly crush Germany, and that was only to be the first step toward world peace. The whole speech made it clear that he then thought united action of America and her associates was essential to maintain peace and that such a treaty as he suggested would preserve peace. We got the kind of treaty he urged, and now the Republicans are declaring it will produce instant and continuous war, and offering a separate peace to Germany.

Let me add that nearly everything advised by him as to the establishment and protection of small nations, even to provisions for mandatories for those nations unprepared to run their own Governments and defend themselves against enemies, was done in the treaty. The treaty made at Versailles, including the covenant of the League of Nations, squares with every ideal and policy then outlined by this great leader, save that it is not so severe on Germany. He continued:

The peace must not only be made and agreed to but it must be effective, and to render it effective there is much more to be done than can be done by ink and paper. Nothing can be accomplished unless we work in complete harmony with those who are associated with us in the war against the Central Powers.

No treaty of alliance could have caused greater unity of action than was established between us and the nations with whom we joined in the war against Germany. Our Navy worked in close alliance with those of Great Britain, France, and Italy. Our troops served under the command of a French marshal; all these things were vitally necessary, and these relations must continue if "we are not to lose at the peace table what we won in the field."

I pause in my reading to wonder if it might not have been in the mind of this great Republican leader that Mr. Wilson, who was going over to the council, might fail to get along harmoniously with the statesmen of England and France and Italy, and his critics would have the pleasure of attacking him for such failure. Fortunately, there was no failure of harmony between the President and the statesmen assembled at the peace table; but the great leader aforesaid is out of harmony with all of them and assailing from every angle the work of their hands.

The great leader proceeds:

To attempt in any way to separate us from our Allies now or to prevent perfect unity of action is as harmful as such efforts were when we were fighting in northern France and on the plains of Flanders.

There is much more of the same tenor. He warns us that the German propaganda, seeking to separate us from our allies, "is as active and poisonous to-day as it ever has been"; that the people here and in the allied countries who were favorable to Germany are again "busy in the effort to part the Allies and the United States from each other." He warns us that "unity between us and the Allies is the first essential condition for a successful peace." Certainly, the President maintained and strengthened and cemented that unity; but how about this great leader and the Republican Party?

We went to war to save civilization. For this mighty purpose we have sacrificed thousands of American lives and spent millions of American treasure. We can not therefore leave the work half done. We are as much bound, not merely by interest and every consideration for a safe future but by honor and self-respect to see that the terms of peace are carried out as we were to fulfill our great determination that the armies of Germany should be defeated in the field. We can not escape doing our part in aiding the people to whom we have helped to give freedom and independence, in establishing themselves with ordered governments. We can not leave the Jugo-Slavs, the Czecho-Slovaks, and the Poles, the Lithuanians, and the other States which we hope to see formed and marching upon the path of progress and development, unaided and alone.

To all of this when it was uttered the President would have said "Amen." By his work at Versailles he did say "Amen." But now the Republicans are shouting, "Leave Europe alone; come out! Quit!" The great leader made a great speech and covered a wide range; but his great fear about the peace treaty, the only great fear that seemed to haunt him was the fear of discord between us and the Allies, particularly between us and England.

I read these parts of a great speech in order to recall it to the minds of many who for these many months have listened to carping and bitter criticisms of the peace treaty, of the President, and of our associates in the Great War; and I want to say that on the peace resolution that was passed on Friday I never heard one single advocate of it say a word against Germany, but I have heard, time and again, a great many of its advocates speak against France or against England, and somehow the evil that was feared by the great leader on December 21, 1918, the evil of discord between us and the Allies, is here. We find less criticism to-day, by Republican leaders and Democratic enemies of the President, of Germany than we do of England, France, and Italy.

I want to say a few words with respect to the effect of this discord between us and our associates in the war; this long, protracted criticism of everything done at the peace table, and of nearly everything done by our President since the armistice. Had the Allies and the United States just after the signing of the treaty of peace ratified it, to-day we would have been far advanced to the restoration of normal conditions. Every utterance that has been made in Congress opposing the peace treaty has been an utterance of discord. It has been an utterance that has delayed the return of the normal. And now we have crowned our course of discord and enmity to our allies by adopting a separate peace resolution or treaty making a separate peace with Germany, call it what you will.

What has the majority party done for now nearly a year but talk discord, pour out the vials of wrath upon our President and our allies, in this end and the other end of the Capitol? One Member of this House wrote an article of over a column denouncing France. Other Members have denounced England, and we have not an ally that we have not said more unkind words about in the last months than we have about Germany. What does it mean? That resolution adopted Friday means simply this: That we sever ourselves from England, France, and Italy and take our stand by the side of Germany, and with Germany in the future we will treat. Oh, our conduct of the war, the magnificent fight of our soldiers, the miraculous achievements of our administration in supplying the soldiers with the means of warfare and in carrying them and our ammunition and supplies over yonder! What tongue can praise it enough? On the battle field our boys covered America with honor and glory; their fighting, the whole war, was a crown of glory to America; but our action here Friday adopting that resolution was a crown of shame. I wonder what will become of that so-called peace resolution when it reaches the Senate, and the great leader who preached unity of action between us and the Allies so eloquently in 1918 gets hold of it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes; if I have the time.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Just a short question. What does the gentleman think of the note written by the President of the United States stating that Great Britain and France had both yielded to the militaristic control in those countries?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Oh, the gentleman can not hear any kind of argument unless he tries to stick a pin into the President of the United States. Your party held up the peace treaty, and somebody, it may have been the President, asked France why she was increasing her army, making it a bigger army than it was before the war, and her reply was a just one—that America had abandoned her by refusing to agree to or ratify either the separate treaty between England, France, and America, or the general treaty of all the Allies for the preservation of peace, and seeing herself abandoned by America, seeing America under the inspiration of Republican leadership going over to Germany, it became necessary for France to be militaristic, or at least to prepare to defend herself in the future; and let me say to you this: Your crown of shame will perhaps win you the German vote for which you are playing in the coming elections, but if it does, you will take the vote and swallow with it such a dose of shame and ignominy as ought to make you hang your heads forever. Yes, you are going out for the German vote. You passed that resolution for the German vote. You know that in America there are more German votes than there are British or French, and you tried also to catch Italy. In one breath you pat her on the back by talking about Fiume, and in another you pat the Germans on the back by talking about a separate peace. When Italy grew boisterous about the disposition made of Fiume by the treaty, you burned the wires to East Side New York, denouncing that part of the treaty, to catch the Italian vote there. You cared nothing for the rights of the Czecho-Slavs. You wanted those Italian votes, and so you denounced the President for that part of the treaty—and yet the Italians and Slavs have now agreed and settled their controversy on the basis suggested by the President.

It seems to me that the German people as a nation when they were still at war and the German sympathizers in the United States during and since the war have been blind to every conception of their highest self-interest. Had Germany as a nation dealt squarely with the United States and honestly and honorably abstained from sinking our merchant ships in a murderous way upon the high seas, as she promised Mr. Wilson, America would never have entered the war. What the war's ending would have been no man knows. Had the German-American voters in 1918 cast their votes solidly for the party of Mr. Wilson, an overwhelmingly Democratic majority would now sit in both the Senate and the House, and the peace treaty would have long ago been ratified, and the just and conservative counsel of Mr. Wilson would be guiding the conduct of the nations who were victors in the war in paths of justice and moderation in peace. Here to-day we have the strange spectacle of the very statesmen and political partisans who were in December, 1918, urging and insisting on far harsher terms for Germany than were imposed upon her now appealing, and seemingly successfully, to the German voters of America to help them in their fight on Mr. Wilson. If by abandoning the Allies and making a separate peace with Germany the Republicans win all the German votes in the United States, it is good politics for them, but in keeping the United States out of the League of Nations and out of the councils that will reestablish Europe there is and can be only evil to Germany and the rest of the world. Mr. Wilson is just and has not sought to use Germany or the Germans simply as a political asset. He appeals to no nationality here by any unjust favor or false pretense. He has not pretended to be the savior of Ireland. He knows that no party in power here would or could ever lead the United States as a nation to intervene between Ireland and England, and he will not lie about it. Other persons are not so punctilious.

The whole treatment by the Republican Party of all the issues and questions which called for solution at the peace table has been governed by politics of the basest character. They seek now only to condemn and discredit Mr. Wilson. Before we got into the war they were loudest in their denunciations of Germany, and whenever the exigencies of politics demand it they will denounce her again.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield me one more minute?

Mr. DENT. I yield one more minute to the gentleman.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. It may be, gentlemen, that you will win. You have played the pander for every separate kind and class of nationality of votes in the United States. You have played for the Irish, you have played for the Italians, you have played for the Germans, and you know that they hold the balance of power in a great many districts, but I would rather dig my political grave than so prostitute the position I hold as an American Member of Congress. [Applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, under the leave granted me to extend my remarks, I print my own analysis of and views upon the covenant of the League of Nations, which ought to have been ratified by the Senate of the United States, instead of this misbegotten, so-called peace resolution in the House.

ANALYSIS AND DEFENSE OF THE PROPOSED COVENANT OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS, BEING PART I OF THE TREATY OF VERSAILLES.

Before attempting to analyze I make these general observations:

First. Every criticism and objection now made against the covenant of the league was urged with more justice and reason against the Constitution of the United States when it was framed by the fathers and submitted to the sovereign States for ratification in 1787.

Second. Each State that ratified the Constitution was at the time absolutely sovereign and independent, and surrendered every sovereign power which was delegated to the Union or denied to the States by the Constitution.

Third. The purpose in the one case was to form a more perfect Union, to establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity; in the other it is to promote international cooperation and achieve international peace and security. Both purposes involve the highest and best interests of the States or Nations concerned.

Fourth. Under the Constitution there was granted to the Federal Government powers not granted to the league, as follows:

1. Legislative powers to affect all the States and the rights, privileges, and interests of every citizen of any State.

2. Executive or administrative powers for the direct enforcement of all laws passed by its Congress, and of all the provisions of the Constitution itself.

3. Judicial powers, extending to all cases in law or equity arising under the Constitution, or laws or treaties of the United States; to controversies between two or more of the States; between citizens of different States, and so forth.

4. The power to require oaths of allegiance of legislative representatives and of all executive and judicial officers of the Federal Government and to impeach or punish or compensate them.

5. The power to levy and collect taxes, to make and to pay debts.

6. To regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations.

7. To make uniform naturalization laws and bankruptcy laws for all the States.

8. To coin money and fix standards of weights and measures.

9. To establish post offices and post roads.

10. To raise and support armies, provide and sustain a Navy, suppress insurrection, and to govern directly the district where its seat of government should be located and all its possessions and Territories.

11. To tax, regulate, restrict, or prohibit immigration into the States.

12. There were also restrictions put upon the States. They were forbidden to make any treaty, to coin money, or make anything but coin a legal tender, to pass bills of attainder or ex post facto law or laws impairing the obligation of contracts, to levy export or import duties, to have any army or navy, or to engage in war unless invaded. I have not enumerated all the powers granted to the Federal Government or all the restrictions imposed on the States by the Constitution which are not granted to the league or imposed on its members by the covenant. But I have named enough to show that the grants and restrictions of the Constitution might well have raised, as they did raise, the jealous fears of many honest and unselfish patriots.

The ends to be gained, however, were so great and glorious and wise and beneficial that our fathers sank their fears and ratified the Constitution, which has till now been perhaps the greatest gift of government to man in all the annals of time.

Mankind was fortunate in 1787 in that the greatest man of the century, the man who had commanded our armies and won our freedom, George Washington, presided over the convention that framed the Constitution and urged its adoption, and in that such men as Hamilton, Adams, Jefferson, Madison, Franklin, and a host of others fought for its adoption with all their strength; fortunate in that the Constitution did not have to pass before the moss-grown vanity and megalomania of a Senate long fed on thoughts of its own dignity and wisdom, or the petty parsings and pleadings, and criticisms of endless debate; and supremely fortunate in that no political exigency then demanded that George Washington and all his colaborers in making the Constitution should be discredited.

There was then no strong united political party whose interest could be served by the defeat of the Constitution as a work of their political opponents.

What, by comparison, are we and all other members of the league asked to do? What part of our sovereignty are we all alike asked to surrender? What menace to our sovereignty and independence is there in the league?

Broadly and comprehensively speaking, every nation ratifying the covenant agrees, first, to surrender its own sovereign power to make war upon any other member of the league without first submitting its cause to arbitration or to the council; and, second, to join all the other members of the league in protecting any member against a war made in violation of the first agreement.

Not another substantial right or power is surrendered, not another substantial obligation is assumed.

The league we establish has no power of taxation, no source of revenue, no power of legislation, no army, no navy, and no means of direct action affecting the rights or liberties of any citizen of any member nation. The pretended fear of the loss of our national sovereignty or independence is pure hypocrisy.

There are 26 articles in the covenant, but they all center around and in the two agreements I have expressed. Is the peace of the world, is our own safety as a Nation, worth the sacrifice or burden involved in those two agreements?

The covenant is not complex. Its simplicity is its strength. But long and earnest study is required to master and hold its details. If I can so present it as to place it clearly in the minds of my readers, I will have performed a great service, because a vast majority of our people do not know just what the covenant is. I do not disparage the intelligence of our people in saying this, for, if called on, not many of them could give the details of our Constitution, though we live under it and witness its workings every day of our lives.

I shall not deal in generalities. I shall present the very covenant itself, only condensing where the accurate meaning may be expressed in fewer words and without technical terms.

THE COVENANT OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

The high contracting parties, in order to promote international cooperation and to achieve international peace and security by the acceptance of obligations not to resort to war, by the prescription of open, just, and honorable relations between nations, by the firm establishment of the understandings of international law as the actual rule of conduct among Governments, and by the maintenance of justice and a scrupulous respect for all treaty obligations in the dealings of organized peoples with one another, agree to this covenant of the League of Nations.

The States adopted our Constitution for the blessings enumerated in its preamble. This preamble to the covenant presents the whole purpose of the league and the blessings it would give.

Article 1. Gives the nations and self-governing dominions that are or may become members of the league and provides that "any member of the league may, after two years' notice of its intention so to do, withdraw from the league, provided that all its international obligations under this covenant shall have been fulfilled at the time of its withdrawal."

Much has been said against this provision because it does not expressly stipulate that any State withdrawing shall itself be the sole judge of what its obligations are, and when they have been met. This objection is met by the claim that necessarily each State is and must be its own judge in these matters, since no body or tribunal under the covenant is given that power. Every lawyer knows that this is true, still the President does not object, nobody objects, to a reservation clause that would affirm this right, to the State withdrawing, in the plainest words that can be found. That reservation will not defeat the covenant or harm it.

Articles 2 to 7, inclusive, simply give in detail the organism of the league and the means and manner of its action.

Briefly, there are just three bodies: First, the assembly, having a representative or representatives of every member of the league. Second, the council, having a representative from the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan permanently, and from four other nations selected by the assembly from time to time. At present Belgium, Brazil, Spain, and Greece are the four selected nations. Third, the secretariat, having a secretary general and such secretaries and staff as needed, to perform the clerical work, keep the offices, and do routine work for the council and the assembly. This is the whole organization.

These articles 2 to 7 provide for the time and place of meetings of the council and assembly. They provide that each nation represented in council or assembly shall have but one vote, and that, except where otherwise expressly provided, decisions in either body require unanimous vote. There has been great criticism because little nations have the same vote in the assembly that the United States has. The same situation exists in the United States Senate. Little States have the same number of votes in that body that large States have. They were given this equality in one branch of the Government for their self-protection. Practically it has never worked badly. Small States have never united against large States or vice versa, notwithstanding the varied interests of big and little States affected by the multiplied activities of our Federal Government. Far less likely is any combination of small States in the league to work injury to any of the big States, since the whole purpose of the league is to prevent aggression, usually by the strong, yet one great Senator had a nightmare because Hedjaz and some other little States, perhaps of Africa or Asia or the islands of the sea, had a vote in the assembly. These little States have no vote at all in the council, the really important body of the league, but the gentleman had to have his fit just the same.

As we go along with this analysis it will appear that there are more ways of effecting a veto against affirmative action by the league as a whole than were ever incorporated in any other like document. If there is any strong criticism of the league fairly justified, it is that it will be too difficult to secure any such action by the league as a body. But that fault was not an accident.

The purpose of the framers of the covenant was to so hedge about the use of force that it would be the last resort; and that any use of force at all by the league would be so difficult that every other means and device for preserving peace would be first exhausted; and yet it was necessary that force should lie in the background to hold in check the lawless ambitions of such nations as Germany was. I earnestly hope that Germany herself will abandon her dreams of conquest if she has not already done so, and when she has become a peace-loving republic, join England, France, and the United States and all the other members of the league for the peace and security of the world.

Articles 8 and 9 of the league have been loudly denounced by critics who have not told the people very clearly what they are. I give them in full:

ARTICLE 8.

The members of the league recognize that the maintenance of peace requires the reduction of national armaments to the lowest point consistent with national safety and the enforcement by common motion of international obligations.

The council, taking into account the geographical situation and circumstances of each State, shall formulate plans for such reduction for consideration and action of the several Governments.

Such plans shall be subject to reconsideration and revision at least every 10 years.

After these plans shall have been adopted by the several Governments the limits of armaments fixed therein shall not be exceeded without the concurrence of the council.

Members agree that the manufacture by private enterprise of munitions of war is open to grave objections. The council shall advise how the evil effects can be prevented.

Members undertake to interchange full and frank information as to the scale of their armament, their programs, and of their industries adaptable to warlike purposes.

ARTICLE 9.

A permanent commission shall be constituted to advise the council on the execution of the provisions of articles 1 and 8, relating to military and naval questions.

No public man can afford to attack the purpose of these articles, to lessen the burden of maintaining a whole world in arms. Constructive criticism honestly offered with a view to improvement is always welcome, but the only suggestion, other than flat rejection of them, has been the resolution of Senator LODGE, signed by thirty-odd Republican Senators which in one word means only, "Wait." He says that after peace has been made a new convention of nations can be called and a reduction of national armaments be agreed on, after debating and maturing plans and methods. In answer I say that excluding the United States, over 30 nations have agreed to the plan and method proposed in these articles, and even Mr. LODGE after a weary year and more of study can not suggest a better one.

What evil may come by waiting? What good by not waiting?

If armament is a burden to the world and if it menaces the peace of the world, every good is accomplished by disarming now. By waiting we may smooth the ruffled pride of Senators and let them talk another session or two of Congress away before they consent to authorize the appointment of delegates to a disarmament convention. Their profound wisdom which can not, after days and weeks and months of debate and denunciation, suggest a plan, might discover one by which every big nation could have its own way and constitute in itself a majority of the league, and sacrifice no element of independent action and yet all disarm. I do not believe it.

One Senator earnestly objects because around the council table which shall formulate plans for reduction of armaments we will have only one representative out of the total of nine. He forgets that every other big nation is in the same fix. He fears, so he says, that the eight other representatives may combine to give us the worst of it. Why should we, more than any other nation, have such a fear? Who fears aggression from us? What nation has more fear of us than of any other nation? If England expressed such a fear, I would understand it, because she has many interests that may conflict with those of other nations sitting at the council, and has always claimed that she ought to have the biggest navy in the world. She is an island and might starve if cut off from the world for one month; yet England agrees to having only one vote at the council table.

For the sake of peace and relief from war burdens, all the other great nations accept articles 8 and 9, but we; we alone refuse, and we refuse on the hypocritical pretext that we are afraid.

But, gentlemen, what evils come from waiting? First we, and following us England, France, and the other nations, must prepare to meet the future. In fact, France and we, at least, are already doing it, with bigger armies and navies than ever before. Postpone disarmament to some future congress of nations which may meet in 1 year, or 10 years, or never, and we must all go back to competitive preparedness for war; and the private builders of navies, battleships, submarines, destroyers, and fortifications and manufacturers of munitions and war machinery will reap a harvest of profits incomparably greater than they ever have before. Before the late war over 72 per cent of the total expenditures of our Federal Government, raised from taxation, grew out of wars and preparations for war. We maintained our Army and Navy and fortifications in peace and in war. The rest was in pensions and bounties and interest on war debts. Yet we, bearing this great war burden, were comparatively blessed among nations. Our war burdens were lighter than those of any other great nation. Now, we have piled up an additional war debt of twenty-five billions, and coming bounties and pension will next year approximate half a billion, while a bonus to soldiers, already proposed, will reach $2,000,000,000, and all this, swelling the national debt, gives us a burden hard to bear, even with our incomparable resources.

With all these burdens on us, the Army and Navy bills of this session are deliberately proposing plans that will call for more than a billion of dollars per annum by quadrupling the Army and Navy and war preparedness generally. By a universal reduction of armaments we can cut this item of our expenses three-quarters of a billion annually. Yet men say, "Wait; not yet. Let us build our great Navy and organize our great Army and provide universal military training first." When we have done this, and great military organizations have become necessary perhaps to hold in check the turbulent toilers of the world, who must bear the burden, who can say that the armies and navies and private interests dependent and fattening on them will ever let the world disarm?

The short-sighted smug, owl-wise statesmen of to-day have seen the close of the Great War and refuse to see that the continuance of the same policies in the future as in the past will produce the same results—that competitive war preparations and war training will produce war. When I was a boy the great War between the States ended. My people were war weary; our whole country seemed absolutely free from any foreign danger. In my innocence I thought to see no more war. But, alas, after alarming symptoms of war at one time with France, and at another with Great Britain, ere 40 years had passed we were fighting Spain—in a short war, thank God; and at the end of 50 years we were in a death struggle in the greatest of all wars. I have spoken of the money cost of that war; let me give you its blood cost.

LONDON, May 6.

The total cost of the World War in lives has reached the appalling figure of 35,380,000, according to final estimates made by the Copenhagen Society for the study of the consequences of the war and made public to-day.

These figures were reached after an exhaustive study of the decrease in the birth rates of the countries involved, as well as increase in deaths from causes directly attributed to the war.

Actual military deaths in killed totaled 9,829,000, according to the report. Each European nation involved lost the equivalent of 8.8 per cent of its population from all causes. Each nation's actual killed equaled 2.5 per cent of its population.

Serbia was the heaviest sufferer of all the belligerents. She lost 35 per cent of her total population, while her actual killed equaled 14.8 per cent.

What man who fears God or loves his fellow man would fail to try to end all wars? By the covenant of the League of Nations England, France, Italy, Japan, and many other nations are trying. Would to God that we might join with them. We can but try, and if we fail we can but fail. I am ready to sacrifice something if need be for a great cause, but I believe with all my mind the covenant of the league, even from an economic and self-interest viewpoint, is the best business venture civilization ever entered upon.

I take no stock in the argument that there is nothing binding about articles 8 and 9. If all the great nations obligate themselves to reduce their armaments to the lowest point consistent with national safety and the joint enforcement of international obligations, they will find a way, but every nation will have to make concessions for the welfare of all. It is simply a question whether as a Nation we are willing to yield somewhat of our pride, our separate sovereignty, if you will, for our own ultimate welfare. It is the old question that individuals answered when they first formed civil government, that States have answered whenever they have formed a federation or treaty. It is the same question earnestly asked by our fathers when they formed the Union.

Articles 10 and 11 are the first definite articles looking to the restraint by force of any nation infringing upon the peace or security of any member of the league, and they draw the full fire of that class of statesmen who would not abate one jot or tittle of our separate, independent, isolated sovereignty fraught with wars, tax burdens, and desolation for a thousand years of ordered harmony and united safety of our own and other nations. Here are these articles:

ARTICLE 10.

The members of the league undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league. In case of any such aggression or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression, the council shall advise upon the means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled.

ARTICLE 11.

Any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any of the members of the league or not, is hereby declared a matter of concern to the whole league, and the league shall take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations. In case any such emergency should arise, the secretary general shall, on the request of any member of the league, forthwith summon a meeting of the council.

It is also declared to be the friendly right of each member of the league to bring to the attention of the assembly or of the council any circumstance whatever affecting international relations which threatens to disturb international peace or the good understanding between nations upon which peace depends.

They are what Mr. Taft, Mr. Roosevelt, Chancellor Lowell, and nearly every other leading Republican in the United States thought America wanted until Mr. Wilson incorporated them in the peace treaty of Versailles and brought them to the Senate for ratification. They are what Mr. Wilson publicly proclaimed he would seek to secure when he went to the peace council, and there was then no protest from any citizen of prominence in America.

They were approved by the sentiment of 80 per cent of the reading and thinking men and women of America until the exigencies of politics made it seem to great leaders of the Republican Party that it was necessary to repudiate them in order to discredit Mr. Wilson and defeat the Democratic Party.

Mr. Colby, in New York, on May 1, made this statement, every word of which is true:

It is hardly an exaggeration to say that there is not an aspect of the post-war situation that is not approached, discussed, and treated primarily in its bearing upon somebody's candidacy.

Of one thing evidence abounds on every side, and that is the utter failure of the envenomed and impassioned attack upon the President. For months this attack has been pushed with every device known to malice and with all the resources of scurrility and hatred. Long, sad, and dreary months they have been to the great and lonely man in the White House, who has been struggling back to health and the service of his people from beneath the weight of a grievous affliction.

No word of protest has come from him—no sign that he winced or that he suffered. His envious detractors, like ravening wolves, have hounded him incessantly by day and by night, but they have done nothing else. They have not affected the American people and they have not cowed or bent the valiant spirit of the American President.

Mr. Colby said this country believes in a League of Nations, and that it has so declared in unmistakable terms over and over again. "It insists," he said, "that there shall be some effort made, even if it be only an experiment, to inaugurate a system in the world which shall preclude a recurrence of the devastating war from which we have just emerged.

"The United States is vitally concerned in controversies that may arise between other nations," said Mr. Colby, "and it is fatuity to pretend that we are not interested in such controversies so long as they may issue in a conflagration that can swiftly envelop this country."

I do not know what the great body of our people now think, but I do know that a score or more of audiences of average men and women of America to whom I have presented the covenant of the league in full seemed almost without dissent to earnestly favor it. They want relief from wars and war burdens. Articles 10 and 11 are, in fact, the heart of the covenant. Without them there is nothing to restrain the conscienceless and lawless nation from ambitious schemes and plottings. All the other articles express the obligations which each nation voluntarily assumes by entering the league. These two articles express the joint obligation of all the nations to enforce, whenever necessary, the compliance by each nation with its individual obligations.

We can adopt only one of three policies: First, isolation, by which we stand aloof and reserve our right to wage offensive or defensive war alone, while other nations make alliances; by which we would hope to have no enemies and would assuredly have no friends; and by which we would hope, vainly I am sure, to escape all wars beginning in Europe, Asia, or Africa. We have tried this policy. It brought us to the verge of war with France and actual war with England in the early part of the nineteenth century, to war with Spain in 1898, and with Germany and her allies in 1917. By it we were not at all involved in lesser wars of short duration or between minor nations of Europe and Asia, and by it we may reasonably hope to escape such wars in future, or at least such of them as may be fought out in the interior of Europe or Asia, but the nations over there are seeking safety and will form alliances. War in the future will be industrial and financial as well as military; its weapons starvation, exhaustion, frightfulness, as well as armies and navies. Food supplies, transportation, and munitions and destructive inventions may decide them. We may prefer to stay out of all agreements and reserve our rights as neutrals, to supply these to all belligerents and grow fat if we can out of their calamities rather than bear some part of a burden to prevent them. If so, we are false to all the high ideals we loudly proclaimed when we entered the Great War. Not only so, but in a letter written by the President to G. E. Hamaker, chairman of a Democratic committee at Portland, Oreg., dated the 9th of this month, he states a well-known fact briefly as follows:

> As a basis for the armistice I was authorized by all the great fighting nations to say to the enemy that it was our object in proposing peace to establish a general association of nations under specific covenants for the purpose of affording mutual guarantees of political independence and territorial integrity to great and small States alike, and the covenant of the League of Nations is the deliberate embodiment of that purpose in the treaty of peace.

I might add that articles 10 and 11 are the soul of that embodied purpose. These are the chief articles which the Lodge reservations reject. By their rejection we would not only be faithless to our allies, but false to Germany herself, who laid down her arms on this statement of the President.

We were not drawn into the Russo-Japanese War, nor were other nations drawn into our Spanish War, because, fortunately, they were one-sided and brief.

Besides this, neither of them would, in my judgment, have occurred had the nations that went to war been at that time members of a League of Nations just like the one I am discussing.

No war in the future can be so one-sided, perhaps, because of the airplane and submarine. No great war of the future fought largely on the sea can long leave us untouched. The march of science lessens distances and isolations and joins and entangles the interests of all nations and intensifies and spreads the horrors of wars. The one war we have just been drawn into, in spite of our isolation, while we got in late and it was not relatively costly to us in lives, has cost us in expenditures thirty billions of dollars and put a burden of debt on us which our great-grandchildren will pay interest on.

Our second possible policy is to make treaties with one or more great nations for our mutual defense, if and when we see other great nations combining.

This is the balance-of-power idea, the system tried so long by Europe with such fatal effect.

Our third possible policy is that of a league of all the great nations of the earth mutually bound solely to protect each other against external aggression and so preserve the peace of the world. In this league each member must bear its small share of the whole burden.

Such a league, hedged about with all possible provisions against injustice, living in the very atmosphere of its lofty purpose, must constitute the hope of the world.

The provisions so hedging the league are contained in articles 12, 13, 14, and 15. They provide, as briefly as I can state it:

Article 12: Members agree that they will submit any dispute likely to lead to rupture (a) to arbitration, or (b) to inquiry by the council, and will in no case resort to war until three months after the award by arbitrators or report by the council. Award of arbitrators shall be made in reasonable time. Report of the council shall be made in six months after submission.

Article 13: Defines the class of cases deemed proper for arbitration, and all members agree to submit such cases to arbitration, and to carry out all awards in good faith, and not to go to war against a member who does so. It provides that when any member fails to carry out an award the council shall propose what steps should be taken to give it effect.

This article is surely guarded and cautious and seeks, first at least, to engage the honor of all the members in the faithful observance of their agreement.

Article 14: "The council shall formulate and submit to members of the league for adoption plans for a permanent court of international justice."

This, of course, is merely a suggestion which may or may not hereafter be acted on for further promotion of international harmony. It is an extension of the policy of arbitration.

Article 15: Members agree to submit all causes which can not be arbitrated or settled by diplomacy to the council. It provides for a full hearing by the council and a report, unanimous or otherwise. If it is unanimous by all members of the council except parties to the dispute, then all members agree not to go to war with any party complying with the findings of the council. If the report is not so unanimous, then all members are left free to act as they see proper. This article provides for full publication of the statements and evidence of the parties and of all reports by the council or any member thereof, so that the questions and facts involved have complete publicity. The world, the whole world, will know all of the controversy. Had this agreement been in force, is it not sure that delay would have prevented the great World War?

Any question may be referred by the council to the assembly and shall be so referred if requested by either party to the dispute in 14 days after submission to the council. In case of such reference any decision to be binding must be unanimous in the council and be concurred in by a majority of the assembly.

Again, every precaution is taken against the possibility of a binding, unjust decision. This is the only case in which the action of the assembly might be vitally important and its power is in the nature of a veto on the unanimous report of the council.

Before any member of the league, a party to a dispute, can be wronged by the league all the disinterested members of the council and a majority of the assembly must unite in the unjust decision, and certainly the United States can never be required to aid in enforcing such decision unless our own representative in the council shall have helped by his vote in making the unjust decision. All these improbabilities may occur. No human contrivance can be free from possible failure.

Courts, juries, all tribunals sometimes err; but shall we, therefore, abandon all civil government? Shall we revert to uncontrolled individual action to preserve human justice?

I have completed the articles that try to preserve peace without resort to force by the league.

These articles are denounced by great Senators as a surrender of our national sovereignty, as taking away from Congress the sovereign right to declare war, justly or unjustly, and without waiting on or submitting our cause to any tribunal on earth. They are not a surrender of such right, because Congress might or could proceed to declare war anyhow; but I am frank to say that it is a solemn pledge, which will bind us as long as we have honor not to exercise that right. All the other members of the league make the same solemn pledge, and I for one thank God for it. I would thank God for such a surrender of sovereignty if it were possible, so that the tongues of all the rulers of all the nations of earth might be palsied whenever they undertook to declare war without first presenting their cause to some tribunal before which it might be heard.

In the absence of some court, tribunal, or power to enforce justice the right to declare and make war is the only means of self-preservation for a man or a nation, and therefore when we renounce that right we must create a power able and ready to afford protection and justice. This is the body and substance of what the League of Nations proposes to do for and between all its members, great and small.

This completes my discussion of the articles intended to secure justice and peace without resort to force, and brings us to the provisions to enforce peace and justice.

Article 16: Should any member resort to war in disregard of its covenants under articles 12, 13, and 15, it shall ipso facto be deemed to have committed an act of war against all other members of the league, which hereby undertake to subject it to the severance of all trade or financial relations, the prohibition of all intercourse between their nationals and the nationals of the covenant-breaking State.

It shall be the duty of the council in such case to recommend to the several Governments concerned what effective military, naval, or air force the members shall severally contribute to the armed forces to be used to protect the covenants of the League of Nations.

Members of the league agree further mutually to support one another in financial and economic measures in order to minimize the loss and inconvenience resulting and that they will afford passage of troops through their territories.

Any member of the league which has violated any covenant may be declared no longer a member by unanimous vote of the council, excluding the vote of the member in disfavor.

Under article 16, if an unscrupulous, ambitious nation violates all its pledges in going to war with any one of the members, the other members do not at once go to war, but first and at once sever all trade relations and prohibit all intercourse with the covenant-breaking nation. Then the council recommends the forces to be contributed by each nation to aid in protecting the covenants of the league.

War is the last resort. The business boycott would deter any but the hardiest as well as most unscrupulous nation. If all the members of the league do but believe fully that all the other members of the league will rigidly apply this boycott, that belief alone will be a sure guaranty of peace; but if the United States stays out of the league and is known to be ready to trade and traffic with and furnish war materials and finances to the war-making nation, the rest of the world, though in the league, would not benefit greatly by the boycott. If the boycott fails, then the league is a treaty of mutual defense, which if lived up to will stay the hand of the hardiest and bloodiest-minded nation on earth. Nevertheless, the league leaves every individual nation, while morally bound to participate, so that it actually does participate only by its own separate, voluntary act. No airplane, no submarine, no ship, no soldier will or can be sent from the United States except by act of Congress and the President. The United States will, as every other nation, decide what it will do when the occasion comes. It was the obligation of all the States to protect each of the States against attack that made our fathers form our Union. The same selfish as well as wise purpose underlies the league. Surely if the interest and welfare of the States justified the very many and very great surrenders of sovereignty made by them in forming the Union, the future peace and welfare of the world justifies such surrender of sovereignty as is involved in the covenant of the league.

Article 17 has to do with nations not members of the league, and is not material to this discussion.

Articles 18, 19, 20, and 21 relate to treaties, which are to be filed in the archives of the league, and all secret treaties to be abrogated. No critic has ever attacked these.

Article 22 relates to the selection and acceptance of mandatories for weak nations. Much has been said about the burdens we would bear if we assumed any such position. But since our joining the league or ratifying the treaty leaves us absolutely free to decline to act as mandatory it is not necessary to discuss it. It attempts to settle wisely and humanely the colonial and territorial questions growing directly out of the war and to preserve the freedom of weak peoples surrounded by foes. No substitute for it has been proposed. For one I think we should bear our part of the burden of sustaining in freedom those little nations which we have boasted of giving freedom to, and I have thought that since ancient Armenia asks us to protect her with our name and power we ought to do it.

Article 23 pledges the members of the league to try to better the conditions of labor, to prevent unjust exploitation of natives of backward countries, and criminal traffic in women and children, and in opium and other dangerous drugs, and to a number of other just and wise and humane policies.

Article 24 places existing international bureaus under direction of the league.

Article 25 agrees to encourage Red Cross organizations.

Article 26 provides for amendments to the covenant only by unanimous action of members of the council, together with a majority of the assembly, and provides that no amendment shall bind any nation which signifies its dissent therefrom, but in that case such nation shall cease to be a member of the league.

I have now fairly presented the covenant in its whole scope and meaning.

When his critics are denouncing and seeking to crucify the President for presenting and defending this covenant, I feel like asking, not, I trust, irreverently, but earnestly, what evil is there in it? "What evil hath he done?"

As I began so will I conclude this extension of remarks with some general observations.

First. Besides attempting to secure the peace of the world, the covenant marks the first time in history when the heads of great nations, in council after a great war, gave special thought to the welfare of the toiling masses of the world. It is the beginning of a new era, in which the good of the unnumbered burden bearers of all countries shall rank high, if not highest, among questions for international discussion and treatment.

Second. His enemies try hard to shift the blame for failure to ratify the treaty to the President by claiming that he stands stubbornly for ratification without crossing a "t" or dotting an "i" of the treaty. That is not true. They know it is not true. He has never objected to any reservations intended to properly construe and clarify the treaty, or to any reservation of any kind which did not in effect nullify the covenant of the league so far as we are concerned and make it as to us a spineless, useless, and nonbinding scrap of paper not intended to function at all in the prevention of future wars. The issue is clear. If this country favors a league, it ought to favor the kind of league President Wilson wants, and not a fake league with its teeth pulled and its claws cut.

Third. They attack the league because we might possibly under it be called on to furnish troops or ships to protect some foreign land against invasion. These same critics ratified the treaty with Panama which binds us to protect that country, and they shout loudly for the Monroe doctrine, which promises and professes to be ready to furnish troops and ships to protect any parts of South or Central America against invasion.

Why should we protect Chile or Peru or Argentina more than France or England or Spain? The real difference between the covenant and our Monroe doctrine is that the former is mutual—we do not bear its burdens alone—while the latter and its burden is ours alone. We alone have proclaimed that we will protect any or all of the Republics south of us, without any promise on their part to aid us if we are attacked. It may seem strange, but it is true, that every Latin Republic of the Western Hemisphere prefers the covenant of the league to our boasted Monroe doctrine, and our Monroe doctrine has never won us the friendship of one of them, because they resent the assumption of superiority and supremacy contained in our many assertions and interpretations of that doctrine, and there is no such offensive assumption in the league covenant.

Lastly, Messrs. LODGE, REED, BORAH, and others say they are for nationalism against internationalism; that they have no interest in Europe or its problems, or in the little nations of the Balkans or Asia Minor; that charity begins at home; and that if we join the league we may be called on to act as mandatory for some one of the weak nations we have helped to set up, and that would cost us treasure if not men.

Well, the world moves. Only a little while ago, in December, 1918, even Senator LODGE thought we ought to accept such a place. Other nations are doing it.

It is well known that ancient Armenia would ask us to act as mandatory for her, and give her the protection of our name against her surrounding enemies who have for ages and centuries oppressed and tortured and murdered and outraged her men and women. If the league will save us by the reduction of armaments one battleship a year, it will save us many times the cost of our acting as mandatory for Armenia, but I scorn to argue the economic phase of the question.

Are we dead to the cry of humanity? Armenia in the days of the apostles received the Gospel. Her people have kept the fires of Christianity burning for nearly 2,000 years and helped to hand its blessings down to our fathers, whose ancestors were heathen when Armenia was Christian. For nearly a thousand years she has been tortured for Christ's sake, but she has kept the faith. Christian nations more happily situated have not helped her. Now, there is a chance to help her. On bended knees, with outstretched arms, she pleads with America to help her. She is like the man the Savior speaks of who fell among thieves. I will read the story:

> And Jesus answering said, a certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, which stripped him of his raiment, and wounded him and departed, leaving him half dead.
> And by chance there came down a certain priest that way, and when he saw him he passed by on the other side; and likewise a Levite, when he was at the place, came and looked on him, and passed by on the other side.
> But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was, and when he saw him, he had compassion on him, and went to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and set him on his own beast, and brought him to an inn, and took care of him, and on the morrow when he departed, he took out two pence, and gave them to the host, and said unto him, "Take care of him; and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again I will repay thee."
> Which now of these three, thinkest thou, was neighbor unto him that fell among thieves?
> And he said, he that showed mercy on him. Then said Jesus unto him, Go and do thou likewise.

We may play the part of the priest and Levite and be numbered with the nations that forget God, or we may be the good Samaritan. I would like to see my country play the better part. I would like to know that in all the years of the centuries to come the children of this old Christian world in a new Armenia, happy, free, and still Christian, will always when they pray bless the name of the United States.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROYAL C. JOHNSON,

OF SOUTH DAKOTA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, May 18, 1920.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, just exactly what enlisted men think of their officers in the present war is a mooted question, depending on the particular association the individual man had with his own officers. Wherever you find a marine, however, you may be certain that he is proud of and glad to discuss the Second Division and the Fifth and Sixth Marines, and he usually is fair enough to give an equal share of the credit to the Ninth and Twenty-third Infantry, which were a part of the Second Division. Ask him what he thinks of his commanding officer and he will say, "Old Gen. John A. Lejeune? Why, he was a good sport; he was one of us," and if you can get a higher compliment than that from a doughboy, you have achieved something. Gen. Lejeune took command of the Second Division during the Soissons offensive and conducted the operations in every great battle in which from that time on it was engaged.

Again, when you discover a soldier or marine who happened to be in Brest in the fall of 1918, when the grand clean-up was effected and the place made habitable for human beings, it is probable that you will find a booster of Gen. Smedley D. Butler, who was responsible for the work done. When it was impossible to secure a boardwalk or duckboard in the camp at Brest, Gen. Butler led his men to the place where a duckboard could be secured, picked up a section himself, and followed by some few thousand men carried it to the camp at Pontanezon. Of all the processions in the American Army, Butler's duckboard parade is perhaps the most unique.

All these complimentary remarks concerning said generals would not be apropos if it were not for the fact that they have done something since the war to justify the estimation in which they are held. It will be a surprise to the average doughboy to know that those two gentlemen, imbued with the spirit of the new Army, have violated the regular, hard-boiled traditions of discipline and opened up a school at Quantico, Va., where any young American citizen can secure military training and an education without expense. Before the Army of the present war was demobilized, it was pitiful to go to any of the camps and see the natural unrest, lack of discipline, and morale. Every man wanted to get out of the Army and get out at once. Never again did they ever desire to hear of it. Often, if not usually, placed in charge of officers who had not seen service abroad, did not realize the long gruelling months after the armistice, when for a time men had been unnecessarily required to drill and subjected to a discipline that in some cases was Prussian, the men were sullen and resentful. In the great Army lottery these two veteran generals drew Quantico, and conditions there were far from ideal—no recreation, little effective discipline, and general debility. Everyone was cursing the Army. Instead of loafing on the job or indulging in social activity, the officers at that camp held a council of war and decided to form a happy, contented Army for the future. There are two ways to get action in the Army—one is to appoint a board or commission and conduct numberless investigations; the other is to cut the red tape and move. In passing, it should be said, however, that the latter method is advocated only for those of high rank. In the Army itself a board was appointed to investigate morale, and, so far as anyone knows, it is still investigating and determining the kind of curriculum that should be installed. Gens. Lejeune and Butler, of the marines, however, called in their personnel and selected emissaries to one of the leading correspondence schools in the country, one that specializes in affording an opportunity for workingmen to learn of things that they should and desire to study. The condition of the marines and the Army was presented to the officers in charge of that school and like good American citizens they determined to assist. They came to Quantico, looked over the situation, and, in conjunction with the authorities there, outlined a course of study that anyone in the United States could well afford to take. As planned and conducted, it is nothing more nor less than an immense military university. The whole idea of the old Army was to see that men learned to fight. The ideal that these men developed was that men could learn to fight and could still learn that which, after they have served their time in the Army, is necessary for them as American citizens.

They divided the day into three parts. Gen. Lejeune well knew that a few hours a day in military exercises is, in a period of six months, sufficient to make any man a good Infantry soldier, and it was decided that the day should be divided into three parts and each period made of service.

They decided that the forenoon should be devoted to military exercises, the afternoon to vocational training, and in the evening every recreational facility should be given to the men. Strange to relate, the plan is not only on paper but is in actual operation.

The correspondence school has given the Marine Corps every advantage it has gained through years of experience, not only in conducting the course of study but in securing positions for men who complete it, and any man can secure any course that he desires. As an illustration, it is only necessary to call attention to the daily report at Quantico, dated April 16, 1920. It speaks for itself:

Total	685

In addition to the regular courses, there have also been conducted a few classes in chemistry, motor-boat construction and operation, mine surveying, practical telephony, surveying, and mapping. Each man selects the course that he desires and secures the regular instruction books of one of the greatest schools in the world. Every afternoon he can elect whether he desires to go on kitchen, police, or fatigue duty, or study. He is not forced to attend school, but he must do something that will be useful to himself or to the post. The men are divided into classes with competent instructors. In the classrooms, which are the Regular Army barracks, with which every soldier is familiar, will be found every type of men in the world or the Army. One who would step into the A B C class would find 20 grown men, many of them with wound and service strips showing active service at the front, studying primary work and studying because they desire to better themselves. In that class can be found an Italian boy who on the day that war was declared enlisted in the Marine Corps and returned home that evening to find that his father had taken out naturalization papers—a case of family patriotism. From his experience in the Army he learned that an education was necessary and enlisted under Gen. Lejeune to secure it. His great ambition was to be able to write an intelligible letter to his mother in English, so that she could take it to the priest and have it interpreted. He did write the letter and his progress would astound one who did not know of the enthusiastic, helpful assistance that has been given by so-called "hard-boiled" Regular Army officers. One man in the primary class has a wonderful war record, decorated for gallantry in action, was discharged from the Army, but on reentering civil life found that he was handicapped by his lack of education and reenlisted to secure it. In three years he will have not only a diploma but an education. Each week every man must take the stipulated examination taken by hundreds of thousands of men in the United States who have entered the correspondence school. His paper is written in the presence of his officers; it is corrected by a competent force at headquarters or the general headquarters of the school. If he secures an average of 90, the papers are forwarded to the office of the correspondence school and rated there. Any man who completes the course must have learned that which they have tried to teach and receives the same diploma through Army channels that he would receive had he taken the regular course with the correspondence school.

The average price of these courses, as charged to the civilian, is $110, and $100 of this as it comes to the Army is donated by the correspondence school in the interest of Americanization. One of the instructors in the school is a graduate of the Boston Institute of Technology, a practical engineer with the Westinghouse people, and is as competent an instructor as one could desire. He conducts the electrical school, where electric wiring, motor installation, and eight courses in mathematics are taught. He has two competent assistants, and as each student becomes proficient he ex officio becomes an instructor. Over in the automobile department, which is the popular one, more than a hundred men are becoming competent and efficient. The lieutenant in charge of that department would be an asset to any educational institution in the country teaching his branches. A certain part of each day is given to the technical study of automobile construction, and as each lesson is finished the men are taken to an automobile shop, where, thanks to the profligacy of the Government during the war, can be found all of the machinery, trucks, and automobiles for practical work. A man who has studied timing is given an opportunity to time a car and his work is checked. A man who has studied the engine is given an opportunity to take one apart and put it together. He not only has every opportunity given by the finest of correspondence schools but has the practical supervision of a competent and enthusiastic instructor. Several of the men have, through the courtesy of the correspondence school and certain large corporations, been already promised good positions as soon as they receive their diplomas. Two who served in Nicaragua and learned a smattering of Spanish are in the Spanish class, which consists of about 10 men, and on completing their course will be discharged from the Marine Corps, furloughed to the reserve, and take up their work in Nicaragua. Two who learned some French in France and are in the French class have contracted with one of the great harvesting machinery firms of the world to take lucrative positions in France when the course is completed. Every man who completes a course has his name go on the list with the graduate students of the correspondence school and it is submitted to the leading firms of the United States who are seeking competent men.

If higher authority permits, and with the present Secretary of the Navy it may be certain that higher authority will permit, men who graduate from their courses and have learned that which is necessary to become good soldiers will be assured of a discharge and a future in civil life.

The recreational features given remind one of war time. Once a week there is a dancing class for enlisted men and every two weeks a dance to which they can bring their wives, sweethearts, or friends. The officers in charge of this camp know them, and know them because they fought with them, lived with them, and are men themselves. Perhaps at no other Army post in the United States have officers and enlisted men gone to the same dance at the same time with class distinction abolished. It is done in the Marine Corps, however, and will be done in the Army if we are to have an Army.

No man in the United States has any right from now on to say that he does not have an opportunity to advance in the world. He can enlist in the Marine Corps and secure, first, his Army pay; second, the clothes that many of us find so difficult to purchase in civil life. He will secure living quarters that can not be excelled; medical and dental attention of unknown value; the books, course of study, and instruction that sell on the open market for an average of $110 for the course. He will secure military training that will not only make him of value to his country but will fit him for military life if we are ever again engaged in war. Until the declaration of peace—and from present indications it may be long before we secure that much-coveted declaration—he has every advantage of war-risk insurance and allotment that were given to every man during the war.

Everyone realizes that it is difficult for a workingman to pursue a correspondence course because he has no one with whom to compete, and if he is really working is too tired to study at night. A man who takes one of these courses is placed in competition with other men and has the time and opportunity to study. He has a study hall throughout the day and one that is heated and lighted, with good ventilation, in which he can study, if he has the ambition to do so, until 10 o'clock at night. If the weather conditions are such that it is difficult to perform military duty he has the entire day in which to better himself mentally. He has every opportunity for recreation that can be given—moving pictures, dancing, competitive baseball with other institutions and organizations, and an opportunity to become an expert with the rifle on the range. Rifle shooting is a part of his military duty and the marines are noted for their proficiency with it. This summer the Olympic trials will be held at Quantico and the great rifle shots of the Marine Corps will be gathered there to determine who shall represent the Marine Corps in the greatest sports contest of the world.

What more could a man desire? The spirit of the new Army pervades the Marine Corps from the top to the bottom, and its pure, unadulterated Americanism should appeal to every man.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EVERETTE B. HOWARD,
OF OKLAHOMA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 5, 1920,

On the bill H. R. 13890, being a bill to regulate the dealing in and distributing, importing, or manufacturing of sugar.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, on May 1 I introduced into Congress H. R. 13890, which in my opinion and the opinion of others who have given study to the matter would give relief to the people of this country in the matter of the distribution of and the price of sugar.

In connection with this effort, I herewith call attention to the following extracts from an article published in the Christian Science Monitor of May 3, 1920, which may be of interest to those giving consideration to the measure referred to. This article is as follows:

Of course the price which people of the United States are now being asked to pay for sugar is an economic absurdity. It never ought to be. It would not be if the people of the country rightly understood what the business practices now accepted as permissible are really doing to the consumer classes. Any intelligent person has but to read the newspapers of the large cities from day to day to discover the essentially artificial factor in the sugar situation that is operating to push the price higher and higher, even in the very presence of Government investigators questioning the sugar handlers in the effort to find means of stopping the extortion.

More sugar is coming into the country in the current fiscal year than has ever been brought here before in the same length of time. The experts figure that the year's total, culminating in June, will be 9,000,000,000 of pounds, as against 7,750,000,000 in 1919, the record year heretofore. This year's sugar is costing about $700,000,000, however, as against only $433,000,000 for the sugar of 1919. And this high cost, in the face of constantly increasing amounts, is due very largely to the fact that sugar that could be bought in sugar-producing countries in the year before the war at 2 cents per pound is now costing practically five times as much in those countries.

All the business groups that have always dealt in sugar, and a myriad new groups and individuals who have had their business interest newly stimulated in that commodity, have been bidding against one another for the mere possession of what there is of it. The sugar market is little better than a vast auction, in which an increasing number of bidders are not those who seek sugar for their own use, but are merely those who find it possible under the accepted business practices of the times to interpose themselves between the sugar produced and the actual sugar consumer in such a manner as to take a heavy toll for themselves as the sugar passes through their hands. On a large scale the phenomena are similar to those of the fish market, where a group of receivers controlling practically the entire receipts of fresh fish from the fishermen bid against one another to determine which dealers shall actually dole out the separate lots, thus forcing up prices artificially. There is no limit on this sort of price-fixing except the ultimate willingness of the consumers to get along without fish. And the tendency of this artificial bidding up of prices by the middlemen is always to compel increasing numbers of consumers to go without the commodity affected. It is so now with sugar. The costs are out of all proportion to the legitimate expense of raising, transporting, and delivering a supply sufficient to meet the world's needs. These costs are abnormal because of the drones in the sugar hive. There are too many middle factors; too many handlers inserting themselves needlessly into the business of providing sugar for those who really need to use it; too many people passing sugar from one warehouse to another, not because such rehandling is a part of the necessary work of supply, but because that particular handling of it constitutes an excuse to make an added charge.

The Bonus Question.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES H. SINCLAIR,
OF NORTH DAKOTA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 7, 1920.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, in the consideration of the bonus question there are two points to be decided: First, does the Nation feel that it owes a bonus to the soldiers? Second, if it does, how shall the funds for it be raised? Laying aside any feeling of sentiment or gratitude to the boys for a service which neither words nor money will repay, and regarding it from the standpoint of business and economic justice, I believe that the people of this country do owe a debt to the soldiers, and that it should be paid. Rather than a "bonus," however, it might more rightly be called "additional" or "adjusted" compensation for a work well done.

The young men who made up our Army were taken from every vocation in life. No one will deny that there were few, if any, who before the war were earning less than the $30 per month and board paid by the Government. The $1.25 per day for time in the service, which is now proposed, will, to most of them, be but a portion of the amount they would have earned in their regular lines of work. In other words, the Government took some four millions of our young men and arbitrarily put them to work at a wage at least half of what they could have earned in civil life. And while I have no criticism to make upon those who were unable to pass the examination for active service or who were necessarily engaged in industry at home, it is true that the ex-service men and women suffered financial loss, and it is inevitable that comparisons should be made by them. It has been said that, for the most part, these young people are able-bodied and capable of taking care of themselves, but that is beside the point. No reputable business firm would ask or expect its employees to work for half of what they could get elsewhere, and the Government should be as fair in its dealings. It is, therefore, the duty of the Government and of this Congress to equalize the wage paid during the war.

HOW IS THE MONEY TO BE RAISED?

Having established the obligation of the Government, we come to the question of how the funds for this additional compensation are to be found. The acknowledgment of the debt will amount to nothing if the means with which to pay it are not provided. Several plans have been suggested, and one of them, which has been receiving a good deal of consideration, is that of placing a tax on all sales. It does not require any second sight to see that under this plan the cost will be borne, for the most part, by the great mass of the people, whose pockets are now nearly empty from the purchase of Liberty bonds, contributions to the Red Cross, and other organizations, drives of one kind or another, and the ever-increasing cost in living. Every article of necessity, comfort, or luxury would be hit by this tax, and many of them several times over. Indeed, the ex-service men and women would help to pay their own bonus. I do not believe that there is one of them who would want additional compensation if he could get it only by adding to the already too heavy burden of expense on the shoulders of his neighbors. I do not believe that he cares to place himself in the position where, upon meeting those neighbors, he knows they are thinking, "That is one of the fellows we have to raise $4,000,000,000 for." It will make him less popular with the everyday folk of the country if they have to pay this in the added price of food, clothing, and so forth, and he should not, in order to collect the debt due him, be compelled to lose in the friendship and esteem of his fellows.

A second suggestion has been that of levying a direct tax to meet the situation, but this, while less cumbersome in operation, would be no easier to bear.

Discarding, then, both these propositions, there remains that of placing a tax upon those who reaped a harvest from the war and the industries necessary to its prosecution. That is where it belongs. Everyone knows that these huge profits are out of all proportion to the returns of legitimate business. It is not necessary to go into detail as to the enormous sums that have been made by individuals, firms, and corporations in the last few years. The number of the very wealthy has increased by leaps and bounds.

One has only to turn to the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to substantiate this. If, as we see there, the number of millionaires increased from 2,348 in 1914 to 6,664 in 1917, in which year this country had barely gotten under way with its war industries and the profiteer was not yet in full swing, it is safe to assume that in the two years and more since the number has grown to at least 15,000. No Government compilation is yet available for these years, but I am sure this figure is not exaggerated. Of course, big business is already protesting against the adoption of any measure that will require it to yield up any appreciable part of its huge gains. Its representatives state that it is unlikely that the profits made during the war have been "hoarded," and that it would not be possible to raise the amount necessary for the bonus payment without borrowing it, if, indeed, it could be borrowed. While I have no personal knowledge of the use these firms and individuals have made of their profits, I think no one will dispute me in saying that these astute gentlemen have not been in business merely for fun or for purely philanthropic motives. I do not doubt but that if this Congress has the courage to pass legislation calling for a tax of from 35 per cent to 80 per cent upon war-time profits, these profiteers will find a way to dig up the funds and not have to go out of business either.

STATE LEGISLATION FOR EX-SERVICE MEN AND WOMEN.

I would go even further and say that after they have unwillingly parted with this amount they will still show a greater profit than that of the farmers of the Northwest during the same period. I speak of the Northwest because I come from North Dakota and am familiar with conditions there. I want to take just a moment to speak of the record of that State during and since the war. As you all know, it is an agricultural section, and the twenty-five thousand and odd men furnished came largely from our farms, making more difficult the production of those foodstuffs so essential not only to ourselves but to our allies. Not only did the farmers struggle on short-handed, but doing their best to produce the largest possible crops, but they and the people of our towns responded nobly to the calls for funds. The Red Cross informs me that the war collections for the State of North Dakota for the two years ending June 30, 1919, were:

First Red Cross war drive	$139,287.28
Second Red Cross war drive	631,775.47
Chapter receipts other than war drives and membership	1,370,974.35
Membership dues	336,396.00
Total collections	2,478,433.10

The purchase of Liberty and Victory loan bonds was as follows:

	Subscription.
First Liberty loan	$3,534,000
Second Liberty loan	10,230,550
Third Liberty loan	12,100,400
Fourth Liberty loan	21,657,450
Fifth Victory loan	18,890,700
Total	66,413,100

The people of North Dakota, both in the towns and on the farms, gave in money, production, and men, and while all other States did likewise, few, if any, labored under the handicap of climatic conditions, the like of which had not been experienced in 30 years until the last three. Successive droughts during the seasons immediately past have brought many of the farmers to their last resource; but, despite the most disheartening conditions and hardships which those at a distance can little realize, they bent every energy to the assistance of their country. In this connection I do not deem it amiss for me to state that in their extremity, calling upon the Federal Government for aid in the shape of a loan with which to purchase seed for this spring's planting, the country has repaid their sacrifices by turning a deaf ear to their plea. This may seem a digression from the question at issue, but it is pertinent, as I will show you, for hard pressed as many of these citizens are, they were the first in the Nation to come to the aid of the returned soldiers by the passage of a bill in the State legislature providing for the payment of $25 per month for each month of service, this money to be used to assist them in obtaining an education, farming, business, and so forth. This legislation was approved March 6, 1919, and not only was it the first recognition accorded by any of the States but it was the most generous.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT SLOW TO ACT.

With this example of what one State can do, why should the Government delay? A tardy recognition, reluctantly given, offends the recipient and does no credit to the giver. The time for prompt action has gone by, but it is not too late to pay the bill, even though past due. If we are going to act at all, let it be now; otherwise, let us stop talking about it. The old saying, "Words not backed by deeds are idle," is just as good now as it ever was, and it is high time that the Government backed its encomiums of praise for the service men and women with something more substantial than words.

All of you are acquainted with the fivefold plan indorsed by the American Legion, which was recently reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, which permits the veterans to make a choice as to the form of compensation desired. It is safe to say that no plan can be devised which will meet the approval of all, but no matter what proposition is adopted it is going to cost money, and a lot of it. The place to get it is not from the pockets of the poor or the moderately well to do, as would be the case in a sales tax, but from those who have amassed great fortunes by reason of the war. I for one am in favor of the payment of the wages due and the raising of the funds therefor by levying an excess-profits and income tax.

EFFORT TO DELAY ACTION.

Within the last few days there has been a remarkable change of front on this bonus proposition on the part of certain Members of the House, a change which is causing a good deal of comment throughout the country. These Members who have been telling us that the soldiers want the bonus and that they should have it have, almost in a night, taken an entirely different view of the matter. They now state that the soldiers themselves have decided that the bonus is not for their own best interests at this time; that payment would result in a "wild orgy of spending," which would tie up labor; that they would not know what to do with the money if they should get it; that this legislation should not be hastily put through—we have already had over a year in which to consider it—and that at the proper time suitable action will be taken. It is easy enough to see the handwriting on the wall. As long as the sales tax was the approved method of raising the funds, well and good, but when the excess-profits and income plan was developed—and more especially when it began to make headway—presto!—it was time to back pedal. As far as the question is concerned of the boys not knowing how to handle their money, in the event that the majority of them should prefer cash—which may or may not be the case—I give these young men credit for wanting to get ahead in the world, and believe that the greater number of them will use their funds as wisely as they can for their own betterment. But whether they do or not, it is certainly not within the province of the employer to dictate as to how the employee shall spend his wage, nor has America yet reached the point where it is the privilege of only the very wealthy to decide how and when they may dispose of their own money. This sudden solicitude for the boys, along this line, would be amusing were not the real intention behind it of such serious moment. This intention, I am convinced, is to shield still further the profiteer, and as a matter of political expediency postpone action until after election.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLIFTON N. McARTHUR,

OF OREGON,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 22, 1920.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent granted me this day I wish to print in the RECORD the report of Hon. Lester W. Humphreys, United States attorney for the district of Oregon, in the matter of the investigation of the charges against Max H. Houser, of Portland, Oreg., who was accused by the Federal grand jury of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Washington (northern division), at the September term, 1919, of misusing his official position as second vice president of the United States Grain Corporation. The full text of the report, which is a complete vindication of Mr. Houser, is as follows:

MAX H. HOUSER, SECOND VICE PRESIDENT UNITED STATES GRAIN CORPORATION, AND HIS GRAIN AND MILLING CONNECTIONS, PORTLAND FLOURING MILLS SYSTEM AND PACIFIC GRAIN CO., ACCUSED BY FEDERAL GRAND JURY OF MISUSING HIS OFFICIAL POSITION, THEREBY MAKING IMMENSE PROFITS FOR HIMSELF AND ASSOCIATES.

On February 18, 1920, the following telegram was received:

WASHINGTON, D. C.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY,
Portland, Oreg.:

Have received following wire from M. H. Houser:

"According to press reports a Federal grand jury at Spokane, Wash., who have been investigating the subject of the high cost of living, have included in their report statements reflecting upon the fairness and integrity of the operations of the United States Grain Corporation in this zone and charging me with having profited in grain dealings here because of my official connection with it. I can not permit the statements to go unchallenged, and I respectfully request that you instruct the United States attorney here to make a full and thorough investigation of the charges made against me, with authority to give equal publicity to his findings as were given to the insinuation in the report of the Spokane body. I would also appreciate it if you would give publicity now to my request and your compliance therewith.

"Thanking you very much."

Have replied as follows:

"Pursuant to your request, I am directing the United States attorney at Portland to make a full and thorough investigation of the charges made against you by the grand jury at Spokane and to give publicity to his findings."

Please govern yourself accordingly and investigate by grand jury or otherwise whether there is involved any violation of the food-control act or other act of Congress. Am wiring Garresht to send you copy of report of grand jury.

PALMER.

The report of the grand jury at Spokane was as follows:

[United States of America, eastern district of Washington, northern division, United States district court, September term, 1919.]

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION OF THE GRAND JURY.

When the Government appropriated $1,000,000,000 to buy the 1919 wheat crop, wheat receipts became as good as Government bonds. Banks were glad to loan money in any quantity to purchase wheat, for the money paid the farmers was immediately redeposited in the banks.

The minimum price of wheat was fixed in the Northwest at $2.20 for soft wheat and $2.22 for hard wheat, coast points, and the prices paid the farmers were these sums less freight to coast points, averaging about 13 cents per bushel, and certain other charges, which amounted to from 4 to 6 cents per bushel. In some cases a small premium was paid for hard wheat.

The majority of the mills in the Northwest are owned by a half dozen concerns, and each in turn has a grain company, which is officered and operated by the men who own the milling concerns.

From a great mass of testimony presented before the grand jury, we believe that 85 per cent of the 1919 wheat crop of this State, estimated at 42,000,000 bushels, went into the hands of these half dozen grain companies and was purchased prior to October 15, before any material advance in price.

The banks of this State are honeycombed with warehouse receipts. Spokans banks at one time were carrying $9,000,000 worth of warehouse receipts, and it is not unusual to find that a small country bank has loaned $1,000,000 on wheat receipts.

Having bought practically all of the wheat in the States of Oregon and Washington, these grain companies have been able to advance the price by sales to each other, and through manipulations of the grain market centered at Minneapolis and by other methods. Although the greater part of the wheat was purchased around $2.07, the grain companies are selling the wheat to their own milling concerns at the prevailing market price, which at present is from $3 to $3.20 per bushel for hard wheat. Their own mills are asserting the right to manufacture flour on the basis of the price paid for the wheat—a price which is the result of their own acts of manipulation.

The by-products of flour, bran, and shorts are a necessary food for dairy cattle, and the prices now demanded for these by-products mean destruction of the dairy industry. Under regulations existing in 1918, millers were prohibited from making more than 50 cents a ton on mill feeds, and a "fair" price on carload lots was fixed by the United States Food Administrator at $28.75 per ton, while to-day mill feeds are selling in Spokane at $43 per ton, carload lots, and $50 at coast points.

The Pacific Grain Co., the successor of the M. H. Houser Grain Co., the Pacific Coast Elevator Co., and the Puget Sound Warehouse & Elevator Co. are owned and operated in connection with the Portland Flour Mills concern, with headquarters at Portland, Oreg. These corporations were owned by M. H. Houser, vice president of the United States Grain Corporation for the northwestern district. At the time he became vice president he made some kind of a transfer of his interests in these concerns, and does not at this time appear as the owner. The offices of the United States Grain Corporation for the northwestern district and the offices of the above-named companies are all located in a building owned by M. H. Houser in Portland, Oreg., and it is the belief of the grand jurors that he, Houser, is the real party in interest in the milling and grain concerns above named, and that by reason of his connection with the United States Grain Corporation he has been able to manipulate and operate them to an immense profit to himslf and associates. The Pacific Grain Co. admits having bought 11,000,000 bushels of the 1919 wheat crop.

It is impossible for this district to obtain relief, for the grain companies threaten, in case action is taken, to force them to sell the grain to the mills at the price paid by them, plus a reasonable carrying charge, to close the mills and ship the grain to eastern points. To frustrate any concerted plan of evasion, we would urge that the Department of Justice take simultaneous action in all wheat and flour centers of the United States.

Lately the press reported that Julius Barnes, president of the United States Grain Corporation, had joined with Mr. Herbert Hoover in the purchase of one of the large newspapers of Washington, D. C. We now note daily newspaper articles which seem to indicate a propaganda is being carried on through the newspapers by Mr. Hoover urging the financing on a huge scale of flour and wheat to foreign countries. According to press reports, former Secretary of the Treasury GLASS recommended the appropriation of $150,000,000 to purchase flour and wheat. It is our belief that this wheat is now owned largely by speculators and, in some cases, by interests directly and indirectly connected with some of the officers of the United States Grain Corporation. Sales to Europe will benefit only the purse of individuals and the consumer will pay the bill.

We believe the credit of this Government, through the national and Federal reserve banks, has been used by wheat speculators to carry the great bulk of the 1919 wheat crop, and that it is within the power of the Government to reduce the price of flour and related necessities whenever it chooses to act.

Under section 5 of the act approved March 4, 1919, commonly known as the wheat-guaranty act, the President of the United States is given the power by proclamation to find what is a fair, just, or reasonable practice, device, rate, commission, charge, profit, or price. And we would recommend that a proclamation be issued under said act fixing a selling price of all wheat now held in the United States at the price paid the farmers, plus a reasonable carrying charge, said fixed price not to apply to the producer, and that a similar price be fixed on flour and mill feeds.

We further recommend that no appropriation be made by Congress to finance the sales of wheat, flour, or mill products to foreign countries until such time as the American people are relieved from paying the extortionate prices now required of them by reason of the grain manipulation as herein stated.

Dated this 7th day of February, 1920.

L. ROY SLATER, Foreman.

GEORGE W. PULLER, Secretary.

A copy of the grand jury's report was sent me by mail by Mr. Garrecht. I then telegraphed for authority to go to Spokane and to employ a stenographer to take the statements of witnesses and to have his notes transcribed, and for the assistance of a special accountant. These requests were granted, and I employed Mr. A. W. Person, a court reporter, who reported the inquiries and made a transcript of the testimony which accompanies this report. Mr. George R. Mayo, special bank accountant, was sent by the department and has given valuable assistance and thorough cooperation.

I went to Spokane, arriving there February 23, 1920, where I interviewed United States Attorney Garrecht, Assistant United States Attorney Charles H. Leavey, Mr. L. Roy Slater, foreman of the grand jury, and Mr. Newberry, who was a member of the grand jury. I was told by these gentlemen that they had no evidence sufficient to warrant an indictment. An explanation of Mr. Houser's milling and grain interests is made here as an aid to understanding what follows:

Until the United States Grain Corporation was formed Mr. Houser was a grain dealer, operating in his own name. On being chosen as second vice president of the Grain Corporation he organized the Pacific Grain Co. for the purpose of carrying on his grain business. Public announcement of this fact was made through the press, and Mr. Houser pledged the earnings of the Pacific Grain Co. to war charities. No effort was made to conceal Mr. Houser's ownership of the Pacific Grain Co. In the summer of 1918 Mr. Houser purchased the controlling interest in the Portland Flouring Mill Co., which included the Pacific Coast Elevator Co., the Puget Sound Milling Co., and some smaller affiliated companies. This purchase also was given wide publicity. No evidence has been found of any effort to conceal Mr. Houser's ownership of these interests, and the fact that he does own them has been generally known in grain and milling circles.

On my visit to Spokane above mentioned, at the interviews with United States Attorney Garrecht and his assistant and Mr. Slater and Mr. Newberry, certain facts were then stated as being the basis of the statements made in the grand jury's report concerning Mr. Houser, the substance of which is as follows:

I. That on August 9, 1919, there appeared in the Spokane newspapers, as a dispatch from Portland, Oreg., an article purporting to be a quotation from Mr. Houser to the effect that growers of wheat who held their wheat and did not sell it were liable to prosecution as profiteers; that this article has been inspired by Mr. Houser for the purpose of influencing growers to sell.

II. That the competitors of the Pacific Grain Co. in the grain business were afraid to buy grain until they knew what the Pacific Grain Co. was doing, and that they had instructed their grain buyers to do whatever the Pacific Grain Co.'s men were found doing.

III. That the premium above Government basic price which developed on wheat was the result of manipulation between the grain companies and that there were no shipments of wheat from the Northwest to points east thereof in excess of two hundred (200) carloads.

IV. That three million dollars ($3,000,000) of money of the United States Grain Corporation was withdrawn from Spokane banks because of the grand jury's report.

V. That Mr. Houser, through the Grain Corporation, had information in advance of the grain trade generally as to the condition of the wheat crop and that the activities of the Pacific Grain Co. indicated that the company was receiving the benefit from Mr. Houser of information which the Grain Corporation had.

As to the first of these assertions, viz, the newspaper article, it was found that this matter had been telegraphed to Spokane to the Spokesman-Review by its Portland correspondent, a reporter employed by the Morning Oregonian, named George Prichard. The article in question is as follows:

"Grain growers are warned against holding for rise; wheat growers to get no premiums. Sellings must result. Grain Corporation says that basic price is all that producers can secure unless terminals are congested with offerings of grain. Wheat growers of the Pacific Northwest are warned not to hold their grain for higher prices, for not only will the Government not pay any premium whatever over the established price until supplies become too great and terminals are congested, but holders are likely to run afoul of the Federal authorities for profiteering."

Prichard was examined and stated that he clipped his article from the market page of the Oregon Daily Journal. In the course of his statement he said:

"Yes; it is verbatim. I remember I clipped it out and sent it. I naturally assumed that it was correct. It was on their market page; of course, I suppose I should have called up Mr. Houser on the proposition, but afterwards I found out.

"Q. Did you make any attempt to verify from Mr. Houser?—A. No; I did not.

"Q. The accuracy of this statement?—A. No; I didn't. I assumed it was all right.

"Q. Did you have any information about this situation from any source other than this clipping in the Journal?—A. No. I had no information outside of that until later when Mr. Houser called on me.

"Q. Did you ever, Mr. Prichard, as a newspaper man, discussing this thing with other newspaper men, have any reason to believe or suspect that this particular article written by Mr. Cohen had been inspired by Mr. Houser?—A. No; I never heard anything like that at all. In fact, I did not think it was, from the way Mr. Houser felt about it; he was very indignant, I might say.

"Q. Did you have any reason to question the sincerity of Mr. Houser's indignation?—A. I did not."

Hyman Cohen, market editor of the Oregon Daily Journal, who was interviewed, stated that he had written the article in question; that it was based on bulletin No. 7, issued by Mr. Houser as vice president of the Grain Corporation; and that the objectionable article was his interpretation of the bulletin sent him. In the course of his statement Cohen stated as follows:

"Q. Did Mr. Houser ever suggest to you that it was the duty of the growers to release their wheat at the basic price?—A. No.

"Q. Did Mr. Houser in any way inspire or influence or cause the writing of the paragraph—your first paragraph of the interpretation?—A. No; he did not.

Mr. Don Sterling, managing editor of the Oregon Daily Journal, was interviewed concerning the article in question and the possibility of Mr. Houser's having been responsible for its publication in the Journal. He said:

"I have unbounded faith in Cohen, and I can give him a clean bill of health as to this story. I do not believe that Cohen ever allowed the newspaper to be used in any such way as is suggested, and, in fact, sometimes there has been friction because Cohen is inclined to lean backward when he suspects that anyone is trying to use the paper for an ulterior purpose."

Bulletin No. 7 is found at page 86 of the transcript, and is as follows:

UNITED STATES GRAIN CORPORATION,
510 Board of Trade Building,
Portland, Oreg., August 7, 1919.

General bulletin No. 7.

The United States Grain Corporation announces that there will be no storage premiums added to the basic prices in its buying scale, for the present, nor until there accumulates in the Grain Corporation's hands a sufficient reserve of wheat to assure a measure of protection for future home requirements.

In accordance with this policy the wheat director is refusing proffered contracts which foreign buyers are desirous of making at the Grain Corporation price level, these buyers being apparently anxious to cover their requirements for some months in advance. Apparently their inability to secure supplies in other sources of wheat makes them especially urgent in proposing contracts with the United States, but these contracts can not be entered into until a sufficient accomulation of wheat in the hands of the Grain Corporation furnishes assurance of reasonable prices to our own people.

UNITED STATES GRAIN CORPORATION,
By M. H. HOUSER, Second Vice President.

The foregoing bulletin was based on a telegram from New York, dated August 6, 1919, which is set out at page 100 of the transcript and is as follows:

GRAIN CORPN
MOORE

I am convinced from the investigation that I made that Mr. Houser had nothing to do with the publication of this article. Collateral circumstances were investigated, and inquiry was made to determine whether at or near the date of the article Cohen had deposited any money, or otherwise given indications of having received any sum out of the ordinary. Inquiry was made as to the owners of stock in the Journal and possible friendly relations with Mr. Houser and as to possible friendly relations between Houser and C. S. Jackson, who is the principal owner of the Journal; between Mr. Houser and Mr. George Trowbridge, who is now deceased (Mr. Trowbridge was managing editor of the Journal), and also as to friendly relations between Mr. Houser and Don Sterling, who succeeded Mr. Trowbridge as managing editor of the Journal. No evidence was found anywhere indicating that Mr. Houser was in any way, either directly or indirectly, responsible.

II. As to the assertion that competitors of the Pacific Grain Co. were afraid to buy grain except by following the lead of the Pacific Grain Co., no evidence was found anywhere substantiating this statement. Particular inquiry was made of all the principal competitors and many of the smaller competitors.

When this assertion was made by the gentlemen in Spokane, I asked them to name any competitors of the Pacific Grain Co. who would substantiate the statement. The only name I was given was that of L. C. Lens, and I was told that he had instructed his grain buyers to follow the lead of the buyers of the Pacific Grain Co. Mr. Lens's statement is in the transcript of evidence. Among other things, he was asked this question:

"Did you give any instructions to your wheat buyers to the effect that they must first inquire what the Pacific Grain men were doing before they took action with reference to buying wheat?—No; I did not."

The following extract from Mr. Lens's statement is interesting:

"Q. Mr. Lens, can you, yourself, make any suggestion as to where I should go to inquire in this connection?—A. No; I don't know.

"Q. If you, as a competitor, had been unfairly or unjustly treated, then you ought to assist me in whatever way you can by making suggestions as to where I can get facts which will be the basis of giving you relief from that unjust treatment.—A. Well, I would gladly give them to you, but I don't know where I could send you to. All that we would like to know is that the Portland Flouring Mills raise their local prices on flour so that we can make a small profit on our investment.

"Q. Do you feel that you have been unjustly treated as a competitor?—A. That is a pretty hard question. I believe that the Portland Flouring Mills ought to have put their local flour up a little higher than what they have.

"Q. Aside from the price of flour being kept down, have you any cause for complaint?—A. No; I have no cause for complaint."

III. The assertion that premiums on wheat were the result of manipulation between the grain companies is largely a matter of opinion. I could find no evidence of manipulation between the grain companies, and particularly as to the mill and grain companies owned by Mr. Houser I can state positively that there was none. I did not devote so much attention to the other grain companies because the grand jury did not see fit to name them in its report.

What caused the premium on wheat is certainly a debatable question. There is no doubt that there was a shortage of the hard wheat crop in Montana, the Dakotas, and other territory tributary to Minneapolis. Minneapolis grain buyers did buy in the Pacific Northwest. There is reason to believe that when the Northwest millers, who need the hard wheat grown in the Northwest for their own purposes, found the Minneapolis people bidding for their wheat some fear developed in their minds that the supply for local milling would be short and this resulted in some degree in Northwest grain dealers and millers bidding against Minneapolis.

It was asserted at Spokane that not more than 200 carloads of wheat were shipped out of the Pacific Northwest, and some reliance was placed on a newspaper statement, purporting to come from a Mr. Pillsbury at Minneapolis, saying that Minneapolis had received no Pacific Northwest wheat. In order to determine what the facts were concerning the influence of Minneapolis on the market I asked the auditors of the Spokane, Portland & Seattle Railway, the Oregon-Washington Railroad & Navigation Co., the Great Northern Railway Co., Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, and Northern Pacific Railway to give me information as to the number of carloads of wheat actually shipped from zone 10 to eastern distinations. These reports show that 873 carloads of wheat of the 1919 crop were shipped from zone 10. Of this number 418 carloads were shipped to Minneapolis.

I would not attempt to say that if grain dealers, as a class, could be eliminated from the marketing of wheat, the ultimate price of flour would not be based more nearly on the price received by the grower of wheat. This, however, presents questions which I consider to be outside the scope of this investigation.

IV. The statement that $3,000,000 of money of the United States Grain Corporation was withdrawn from Spokane banks because of the grand jury's report is wholly without foundation. The facts are—keeping in mind that the grand jury's report was made February 7, 1920—as follows:

In the early part of October, 1919, at the urgent request of Spokane bankers, an arrangement was made whereby the Grain Corporation should increase its deposits in Portland banks to the extent of $3,000,000, and that the Portland depositaries should redeposit these $3,000,000 in Spokane banks. This was done. About November 12, 1919, the Grain Corporation, through Mr. Houser, notified the Portland banks of the intention of the Grain Corporation to begin on January 1, 1920, to reduce its deposits at the rate of 10 per cent a week. Portland banks, about the 14th of November, 1919, transmitted copies of this letter of advice to Spokane banks. In accordance with this announcement reduction in deposits was made throughout January. The deposits in Portland and in Spokane were reduced at the same time and in the same proportion.

It was later asserted at Spokane that this arrangement for putting Grain Corporation money into Spokane was part of an agreement by which the Spokane banks were to extend credit to the Pacific Grain Co. The facts were found to be that Mr. Houser, personally, did not arrange for the lines of credit at Spokane used by the Pacific Grain Co.; that these lines of credit were arranged in July; that all the advances arranged for were made prior to the deposit of any Grain Corporation money in Spokane. Subsequent to the deposit of Grain Corporation money in Spokane the lines of credit to the Pacific Grain Co. were not enlarged and that Mr. Houser's individual credit was not used for anything like its limit; that Mr. Houser's individual credit is so extensive that it was absolutely unnecessary for him to use any such method to finance his grain operations.

V. There is no foundation for the statement that Mr. Houser, through the Grain Corporation, had information in advance of the grain trade generally as to the condition of the wheat crop. The Grain Corporation received no crop reports. The reports which were made to the Grain Corporation were from grain dealers and millers and indicated, from week to week, the amount of grain received, milled, and shipped, and other details.

It is my opinion that the reports which were in the possession of the Grain Corporation would have been useful to a man directing a grain or milling business; in other words, I believe that an opportunity existed for Mr. Houser to be dishonest or to use these reports to the advantage of his grain and milling interests. I am also convinced that Mr. Houser did not take any advantage of any information in the possession of the Grain Corporation. The reports in question did not go to Mr. Houser personally. They were received and tabulated by a clerk and the copies were transmitted to the head office of the Grain Corporation without receiving any personal attention from Mr. Houser. The clerk in charge of these reports told me that Mr. Houser never had asked him anything about the reports and never had seen them until the day when I went to the Grain Corporation's office and examined the reports, on which occasion Mr. Houser accompanied me to the clerk and directed him to give me whatever information I wished.

The second part of No. "V"—that the activities of the Pacific Grain Co. indicated that the company was receiving information from Mr. Houser—is not borne out by the facts. Prior to the time when he became vice president of the Grain Corporation Mr. Houser, as a grain dealer, had bought more than twice as much grain as the Pacific Grain Co. has handled since that time. During the season of 1916–17 Mr. Houser personally handled 31,000,000 bushels of wheat. During the season 1917–18 the Pacific Grain Co. handled 12,000,000 bushels of wheat. During the season 1918–19 the Pacific Grain Co. handled 9,000,000 bushels of wheat. During the season 1919–20 the Pacific Grain Co. handled 12,000,000 bushels of wheat. The Portland Flouring Mill Co.'s annual milling requirements are approximately 10,000,000 bushels of wheat. In July, 1919, a letter was written by the Portland Flouring Mill Co. to the Pacific Grain Co. stating that it would need about 10,000,000 bushels of wheat. The influence of the Portland Flouring Mill Co. on the flour market in the Pacific Northwest was unquestionably to keep the price down. Different millers testified that they had complained to Mr. Houser personally and to the heads of the Portland Flouring Mill Co. that the price of flour was too low, but that Mr. Houser refused to consent to an advance in price and insisted that the price of flour should be fixed on the basis of what the millers had actually paid for the wheat and not on the basis of what it would cost to replace the wheat in the open market.

Throughout the course of this investigation there was confirmation of the statement hereinafter quoted, made by Hyman Cohen, who has been for 18 years market editor of the Oregon Daily Journal, and who makes a special study of the grain situation in the Pacific Northwest. I refer to the statement at page 176, et seq., of the transcript, and particularly to the following:

"I frankly tell you that from what I know of Mr. Houser and his dealings that he has sacrificed not only his time but his money and his health in doing this work. I know that Mr. Houser could have made hundreds of thousands of dollars by putting up the price of flour, which he refused to do simply because he says that his duty is to the Grain Corporation."

CONCLUSION.

The result of my investigation is that I have found absolutely nothing to indicate that Mr. Houser should be censured. I do not pass on the question whether he may have made errors of judgment. He is regarded as a man of great ability, particularly in the grain trade. That a grain man of high ability should have been chosen for the United States Grain Corporation's work in this zone seems to me proper. My opinion, after a careful inquiry covering two months' time, is that Mr. Houser gave the Grain Corporation work the very best he had; that his only motive has been the proper performance of that work, and that he has not shaped his conduct therein to any selfish, sordid, or improper end.

For the details of this investigation, reference is made to the transcript of testimony, to the report of Special Bank Accountant George R. Mayo and supporting schedules.

Army Reorganization.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES J. THOMPSON,
OF OHIO,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 19, 1920.

On the conference report on the bill (H. R. 12775) proposing to instruct the House conferees to agree to a compromise proposed by the Senate involving the reorganization of the National Guard, whereby law should be enacted leaving it optional with the legislatures of the several States whether or not the National Guard should be organized under the military clause of the Constitution or under the continental army system in each State as the legislature might direct.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, in 1914 Congress passed what was known as the Hay volunteer bill, later known as the Army reorganization bill. This took from the governors of the States the power to issue commissions, either recruiting or in the volunteer service of the United States, as had been the law and had been in force since the beginning of the Government. This entirely eliminated the governors of the States in raising a volunteer army. In 1916 an attempt was made to pass the continental army bill, which was intended to displace the National Guard of the States and further eliminate the State as a factor in raising a volunteer force. This measure was defeated, however, which resulted in the passage of what is now known as the national-defense act. The Senate bill, as passed recently, and the proposed compromise, would place the National Guard of the States under the Army clause of the Constitution instead of the militia clause, thus entirely destroying the National Guard as a State institution, and might make it impossible to organize or maintain an organization anywhere. The Wadsworth bill is simply the continental army bill in new clothes and a new name. The Wadsworth bill contains a provision authorizing the governor of a State to use the National Guard of the United States quartered or located within the State for local purposes, under such regulations as the President may prescribe. This is exactly the German Army system, which provided that the princes of the States might use the troops quartered in their Provinces, under such regulations as the Kaiser might provide. Now, the whole aim and purpose of this legislation, beginning with the Hay bill in 1914, the National Army proposition in 1916, and the provisions of this conference report in the present Congress, never were intended to work. Anyone who knows anything about maintaining a National Guard or volunteer organization must certainly know that it will not work. The object sought is quite apparent. It is to destroy all volunteer organizations for the purpose of compelling universal military service.

There has been since 1916, and perhaps longer, a warfare within the Army. It has been a war of the Regular Establishment against the National Guard organizations. Men who are educated at West Point at the expense of the Government and retired on three-quarters pay for life, if incapacitated, have become "chesty" against the volunteer service known as the National Guard system of the several States. At the outbreak of this war I knew of splendid National Guard officers in my own State who had each spent 20 years or more—the best years of their lives—building up a strong and efficient volunteer service under the National Guard system. These officers, when their troops were called into the war, were separated from the service for trivial reasons. They had no prospect of retirement on three-quarters pay for life; they had been faithful, loyal, patriotic, efficient; yet when the time came for service and high honors they were not permitted to serve their country because of the whims or prejudice of that mysterious General Staff here at Washington—some 85 in number—which seems to dominate the War Department and, indirectly, congressional military legislation.

This proposed instruction to the conferees, brought before the House of Representatives under the guise of a so-called compromise, does not fool me. I can only speak for myself. I hope it fools none of my colleagues. For many reasons which I have not the time now to point out I am opposed to leaving the question open to the legislatures of the several States to enact laws as to whether or not their several State National Guard organizations shall become a part of the Regular Army and its officers be only Regular Army officers and the enlisted personnel be subject to the commands of the President of the United States or whether the National Guard shall continue the militia clause of the Federal Constitution, which means that the governors of the several States may have something to say about the movements of their troops in case of riots or lawbreaking within their own borders.

Why should I vote to complete the discomfiture of the National Guard? Why not let well enough alone, so far as the National Guard is concerned? Is there not already too much autocracy here at Washington? All along the Atlantic seaboard, especially at New York, there is a tendency, through its Representatives in Congress, to commit the country to intense militarism. The object of the Wadsworth bill as originally presented in the Senate was compulsory military training of the youth of America. So radical were the proposals that it was intended to use the drafting organizations of the late World War to induct the youth into the service throughout the land. Once so inducted, so far as I know, no provisions were made for discharge of the youths from the control of the General Staff here at Washington. It was the last word in proposed radical compulsory military training legislation. I say that is going too far, and I am against such a radical proposal. I have observed also that there is exerted by the military or War Department branch of the Federal Government—dominated by the Army—a strong influence over the congressional Military Committees of the Congress, many members of which appear to be subconsciously or unconsciously obsessed with a General Staff spirit. I for one am not in favor of being presented with bills in the capacity of a Congressman which are apparently suggested, written, or tinctured by Army officers high up in authority in the Regular Establishment. Such measures, such as this and the Wadsworth bill, come up on the floor of Congress, reaching the great mass of Representatives through the regular Military Committees of Congress with the recommendation that "the bill do pass." There are 435 Members of Congress, and it is a mental impossibility for them to keep track of all the measures presented for consideration. That is the reason why many Members in voting follow implicitly the recommendations of the committee which has investigated and reported any particular bill; and that is how Congress is sometimes fooled into passing vicious legislation. We have had too much "hard-boiled" experience within the Army during the war. The war is over and laws relating to military reorganization should be carefully scrutinized. I am not satisfied with the instructions proposed to the conferees of the House and shall vote to kill the proposal in its present form. It smacks of autocracy pure and simple, and I am against it and will smite such a proposition with a heavy hand.

The Army reorganization bill as it passed the House of Representatives was a fairly good bill, but when it reached the Senate it was amended and sent back to the House practically substituting the Wadsworth bill as it passed the Senate.

Salaries of Postal Employees.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLARENCE MacGREGOR,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, May 25, 1920.

Mr. MacGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, the subject of an increase in the pay of letter carriers and other postal employees is not a new one. It has been brought up in every Congress for the past decade. In 1919 they received an increase of 40 per cent, which, however, was only to be a temporary one.

During the period from 1913 to 1919, which was the period when the cost of living began to soar and when they received their increase of 40 per cent, the cost of living had increased at least 80 per cent, or double the increase in the wages of these employees.

During the same period the wages of workers in various industries had increased by percentages varying from 121 per cent for iron and steel workers to about 52 per cent for cigar makers.

It should also be remembered that the increase in the wages of outside industries followed the rise in prices in more or less prompt fashion, while the postal employees were obliged to meet the rise in the prices of all commodities all during the war period and received no relief until November, 1919.

In connection with the reclassification of Federal employees a definite budget as to the standard of income for a living wage has been prepared by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The summary is for an average family of five.

1. Food		$773.93
2. Clothing:
Husband	$121.18
Wife	166.46
Boy (11 years)	96.80
Girl (5 years)	82.50
Boy (2 years)	47.00
		513.72
3. Housing, fuel, and light		428.00
4. Miscellaneous		546.00
Total at market prices		2,282.47

In making this budget, the bureau stated that a family of extreme thrift and high intelligence might reduce this by $236.91, making a total budget of $2,045.56.

That this budget is extremely conservative can be readily seen when one examines the detailed statements, a few extracts from which will suffice. For instance a winter hat for the wife costing $10 is presumed to last two years for the wife and the husband's hat at $4 is also supposed to last for two years. Evidently these figures were based upon the assumption that the hats of to-day are of the same quality as they formerly were, but anyone who buys wearing apparel for himself or his family knows that any hat, coat, or pair of shoes that will last over a year is an extremely difficult piece of clothing to pick up at the prices mentioned.

If one examines the items for children the conservative estimate of the bureau is still more apparent, both as to the prices paid and the amount of wear expected from the various items.

No family can live on much less and keep up the standard of living that American citizens have set up as the American standard.

The present salary scale for letter carriers is from $1,200 to $1,650 per annum. Accepting the Bureau of Labor budget as conservative, we find that the letter carriers' salaries show a deficiency as follows:

Rate:	Deficit below a living wage.
$1,200	$1,062
$1,300	962
$1,400	862
$1,450	812
$1,550	712
$1,650	612

Mr. Speaker, if these employees are living under a deficit such as is here indicated, one of two things must happen to each man with a family. He is either going heavily into debt or he is lowering the standard of living for himself and his family to a degree very close to the danger mark of physical and mental deterioration.

This is little short of a national calamity, for the Postal Service is the nerve system of the country's industrial, economic, and social life.

A letter carrier, besides being a man who must have the best kind of a reputation to get into the service, with perfect health and examplary habits, is required to have a mental equipment that is not readily found and can not be maintained under a low standard of living.

He must be at all times mentally alert; he must have an accurate, retentive memory, and he must be able to use with dispatch at any moment the postal rules and regulations, which are contained in a book of 800 pages. He must be familiar with all kinds of mail, its rates, and the characteristics peculiar to different sorts of mail. He is expected to answer questions of all kinds from all sorts of people, and he must be withal patient and diplomatic.

To arrange his mail and route it properly he must be an efficient and practical clerk, and in order to deliver mail as quickly and accurately as the service expects him to he must memorize the names of patrons living on his route and also of those who have left the route.

He is called upon by the Government for all sorts of information as to the classes of people living on his route and is expected to be observant and alert. If he is in charge of a motor vehicle, he must be a chauffeur and mechanic. If he is a rural carrier, he must be a competent driver and be fully able to care for a horse, and, above all, he must be above all suspicion as to honesty and integrity and must keep himself physically strong and mentally efficient at all times and under the heaviest strain.

We can all recall how much of extra work he accomplished during the war. He was the general collector for all sorts of war funds and charities; he sold thrift stamps and Liberty bonds; he was the adviser of many who knew no other officer of the Federal Government; and he was expected to keep his place at the low salary as a patriotic duty while friends and neighbors were reveling in the high wages and easy work that came with war-time activities.

What has been said as to a living wage for the letter carrier also applies to the Railway Mail Service men, the postal clerks, and other employees connected with the mail service.

There is no question but that the postal system is breaking down. Men are leaving the service for employment in which a living wage can be had. New men are not coming in in any numbers. I note that in New York City in 1916 there were 1,200 applicants; in 1917, 900; and in 1918, only 100.

It is necessary, if we are to have any postal system, that there be a new scale, and it is but fair to those who have spent their lives in the service and remained faithful that they be given a square deal.

These honest, faithful men who have not deserted the ship but have stuck faithfully to their posts come to Congress with the modest request that they be given a fair and adequate raise in salary, so that they may support their families, clothe them decently, feed them properly, and keep themselves keyed up mentally and physically to perform their tasks.

So far the Government's answer to this request has been the appointment of a commission to investigate the matter. While they have been investigating, the letter carrier and the postal clerk have been patiently doing their bit, doing it under the heavy handicap of a deficient salary, living at a lower standard than they should live, or staggering under a wearisome burden of debt. I think it is time that something be done for these employees of Uncle Sam. I think the commission has investigated what everybody knows long enough and should make a report at once. I think that Congress should enact a law immediately and grant to its postal employees a liberal increase, and I know that no matter what objections all over the country in praise of the Congress that took care of the postal employees.

In every walk of life, in every phase of human activity, the postman, whether carrier or clerk, is in direct contact with the people of the country. Industry depends upon him to carry its message. Business in its entirety depends upon him; the currents of trade and commerce would not flow without him.

Humanity depends upon him to keep alive the ties of friendship and the closer ties of family and kinship. He carries our thoughts of love to and from the home. He brings to us messages of joy and happiness and with ever-ready devotion is the messenger of comfort and sympathy. In our work, in our play, he is an important part, and it is little less than a disgrace that a servant of the people so vital to all of our needs, so intimately connected with the daily throbbing life of the Nation, should have been neglected so long.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. DAVID J. O'CONNELL,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, May 20, 1920.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, the acute situation now existing in the Post Office Service of the United States prompts me to ask the unanimous consent of the House to print this editorial from that great weekly, the Literary Digest, issue of May 22, 1920. I am sure it will prove of interest not alone to my colleagues, but to the country at large. There are no more faithful or loyal public servants than the men and women who are responsible for the handling of our mail, and they are entitled to consideration at this time:

ARE POST-OFFICE EMPLOYEES HUMAN BEINGS?

An American boy went to work one day in the United States Post Office. He was wide-awake and ambitious, and so he chose the biggest business and the biggest employer in the country. Step by step he rose to be supervisor, and then superintendent of an important department. He made a record of "supreme industry, faithfulness, and loyalty." Age came on, but his zeal did not diminish. Postal officials pointed to him with pride and said he upheld "the very highest traditions of the service," and was "ever ready to sacrifice his personal interests for the public good." Seventy years without a break he served his big employer, the American people, a shining example for all who would hear that crowning tribute, "Well done, good and faithful servant!" Last winter at his post of duty he was stricken with a chill. Pneumonia followed. Even then he begged that he might dress and return to his duties. And his big employer—the American people—what generous provision and tender care did it give to this oldest employee who had always "sacrificed his personal interest for the public"? The man had not yet taken his annual vacation of 15 days. His absence now from his post of duty was charged against his vacation. In 15 days all his "vacation" was gone and his salary stopped. For three days, as he lay on his deathbed, his pay was deducted. Then death came, and he went to receive the "well done" from One whose words are backed with eternal reward. But on earth, where he had toiled so long, the praise given him was empty. No allowance for sickness; no allowance for burial; nothing for his family; his meager salary docked after 70 years of faithful service. What an employer!

You can hardly believe it? You think it must have been an accident, quite unusual in the service of the United States Post Office? You say such a thing could not be tolerated by the American people? It is not unusual, except for the man's extreme age. It is tolerated by the American people—by you and by us—to our shame. Our postal laws, until we change them, treat all employees, high and low, letter carrier, porter, clerk, and superintendent, in the most niggardly way. They work night and day, often in unwholesome quarters and under severe strain. Their minds are crowded with the endless details of an exacting system. Their bodies are racked and worn by harsh conditions and cruel burdens, and they are the lowest-paid free workers in the United States. It is time for us all to know the facts and to see that quick justice is done.

Congress has been looking into these facts, but Congress is not the "big employer" against whom the prophet Malachi thunders when he threatens swift judgment for "those that oppress the hireling in his wages." The bitter protests poured out to the committee of Congress must ring in our ears and rouse us to action. Crowding the experience of thousands into a single sentence, a letter carrier from Camden, N. J., exclaimed: "If you men really knew the want, and distress, and sorrow, and trouble that reach into the life of the poor letter carrier, you would be up at night trying to find a remedy."

From every city and village of this great rich country and from every branch of the Postal Service have come these protests and appeals for fair play: "We are not able to provide our families with the necessities of life." * * * "Our wives and our children have to go to work in order to exist." * * * "If you compel men to be ill-fed and undernourished because of insufficient salary, it will have a far-reaching effect on the coming generation." * * * "We bought Liberty bonds to help the Government and had to sell them at a loss to buy food." * * *

Can we hear such things from the men who are working for us and not tingle with shame and indignation? Can we rest easily and take our own pleasure and comfort until we have first done all in our power for quick relief?

Consider the kind of man our post office demands as clerk. His work is highly specialized and complex; he must be skilled by long and intensive training and study, memorizing thousands of facts, intricate systems of classifications, and many methods used in banking, insurance, and commercial business. He must be familiar with the postal laws and regulations filling a volume of 1,700 sections. All this study and preparation must be in his own time and at his own expense. And when he stands in his hard-earned place, a full-equipped postal expert in the employ of the American people, he is paid less than the common, unskilled day laborer on the streets. One of these experts, who after 24 years of postal service had acquired special knowledge and experience invaluable to the Government, testified, "I could go out as a milk-wagon driver and get $50 a week, yet the Government pays me an average of about $4 a day." The steadfast loyalty of such a man through long years of pinching penury may be a splendid example of American patriotism, but not one of us can claim a like virtue if we fail to raise our voice against the continuance of such shameful parsimony.

But that isn't all. These meager salaries are constantly shrinking throughout the year. Any absence for sickness or other causes is penalized by forfeiture of pay. If death occurs in the family of the employee, whether wife, child, or parent, not a day nor an hour of absence with pay is allowed. Even the solemn hours of funeral rites can be taken only at the expense of the employee.

Letter carriers are converted into pack animals and loaded down with burdens often weighing 60 to 80 pounds or more. Through driving rain or blizzard, in burning heat or stinging cold, they must cover their routes on schedule time. The stoutest often succumb to the inhuman strain; yet the highest salary they can earn, after years of smaller pay, is less than $32 a week.

New York is the biggest post office in the world. It does the biggest business and turns in millions of dollars profit. It is one of the most highly specialized and responsible organizations in modern industry, the center of innumerable activities on which the progress and prosperity of the entire Nation depend. Its banking and financial transactions last year alone totaled more than $672,000,000. The management of this vast business concern, with its great central office covering two city blocks, its 50 branch offices, its 250 substations, and 14,000 employees, requires supreme managerial abilities on the part of its department chiefs. They would be receiving salaries of $25,000 to $75,000 for such official services in big commercial organizations. Yet the highest salary paid to the "big four", superintendents at the head of the four main departments of the great New York post office is only $3,360 a year, or less than $65 a week, and not one of these men attained his position in less than 27 years' service. The superintendents of the great railway terminal postal stations receive less than $46 to $56 a week after serving an average of 35 years each. And we pay more than that to longshoremen and window cleaners and drivers of milk wagons.

We are doing more than this act of cruel injustice to the 280,000 postal employees of the country. We are bringing a serious menace to our own interests. The Postal Service is being crippled by wholesale resignations. It is becoming impossible to induce competent men or women to fill the vacancies. In the New York post office alone more than 500 resignations have occurred within five months. False economy is destroying all efficiency and threatening a collapse of the service. Time and energy that ought to be given to handling the mail is diverted to instructing and managing a shifting, dissatisfied organization. The same thing is true in all parts of the country. Our indifference and neglect as the "big employer" of the post-office workers is recoiling on our own heads.

The Literary Digest has made thorough investigation of the facts and is making this brief, urgent statement to its more than 2,000,000 readers because many times they have responded nobly to appeals for worthy action as Americans, and now is a time for such action. Congress is not to blame for the existing conditions. The men now sitting in the Capitol at Washington are human beings like the rest of us. They have warm hearts and ready sympathy and as keen a sense of justice as any American citizen can have. The blame and the shame for this pitiful injustice to the Nation's postal employees are ours as a people. It is yours who read this page. It is ours who write and publish it. The change of policy from a brutal stinginess or careless indifference to a fair and liberal American policy must be wrought by us, the Americans who always love fair play.

Write to your Congressman and both of your Senators, every one of you men and women who has a heart and an active sense of human injustice. Don't put it off; the time before Congress will adjourn is short. Urge them to give their most ardent support to the bill putting into immediate effect a substantial increase of salaries throughout the entire Postal Service of the United States. Congress will gladly and quickly pass this bill when the American people rally to its support. If you don't know the names of your Congressman and Senators, ask your letter carrier, or postmaster, or banker. Let all business houses be heard from, and all civic societies and fraternal orders. Rescue these postal toilers from penury and narrow lives and set them on their feet as American citizens who need not suffer nor be ashamed in their service of us all.

Let the Record Speak.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS L. BLANTON,

OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, April 27, 1920.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rarely ever discuss politics. But such is my subject to-day.

Samuel Gompers, the American Federation of Labor, the Plumb Plan League, and many affiliated locals of Government employees' unions in concerted action have threatened with defeat all who voted to return the railroads and who have otherwise disobeyed Mr. Gompers. I head their list for slaughter. They assert that I am to be defeated regardless of cost, even if they expend $100,000. Three new publications have just been launched here to grind out each week vicious campaign attacks for reproduction in our district papers. The Olden Advance, execution proof, whose disgruntled editor years ago in a three page letter eloquently urged me to run for Congress, and the Sweetwater Reporter, likewise execution proof, whose editor is a stranger lately moved into my district and a paid subordinate of other nonresidents, both weekly reproduce these vicious misrepresentations. Some of you colleagues receive copies. An ex-sheriff, T. C. Weir, in a malicious letter just received, threatens me with annihilation. Yet I am calm and have no fears. I know my people. They are absolutely dependable. This enormous slush fund will be spent but it will not accomplish my defeat. These enemies have tried before and failed. We who saved this Government from bankruptcy by returning the railroads need not be alarmed. Voters have decernment. Possibly the following may be of at least passing interest to my colleagues similarly situated. I will explain this animus now in my district.

I had to override obstacles other than defeating Congressman Smith in coming to Washington. He lived in El Paso, I in Abilene, opposite ends of the old "Jumbo"—sixteenth—district, 556 miles across it. He had been Congressman 14 years, with active friends in every county.

I was unknown in half the counties. Numerous cases vigorously fought while I was an active practitioner for 11 years in various courthouses produced enemies. As the losing side frequently blames the trial court, the hundreds of civil and criminal cases tried during the eight years I was a district judge produced more enemies. Strictly enforcing the law, expediting business to keep the dockets clear, treating everybody alike, forcing the rich as well as the poor to serve on juries, entering fines against rich witnesses and jurors who did not appear promptly, and forcing their attendance by bench warrant produced more enemies. When in Abilene I gave said sheriff, T. C. Weir—who now threatens me—a warrant for the arrest of a prominent county judge who embezzled a fortune from county funds, and said sheriff witnessed said county judge flag the midnight train at Elmdale and board it only 6 miles east of Abilene, and then rode with him through Clyde, through Baird—a county seat with jail—through Putnam, through Dothan, through Cisco, through Eastland—another county seat with jail—through Ranger, through Strawn, through Mingus—at each of which towns said train stopped—and down to Gordon about 100 miles east of Abilene, and there took said county judge off the train, and from the Gordon Depot said county judge ran off and escaped from said sheriff in the Palo Pinto Mountains, and, unharmed, is still a fugitive from justice; and, admitting the above, said sheriff offered as excuse only that he went to Gordon to meet the westbound train for return back to Abilene. I naturally had a grand jury to investigate it. Could I have done otherwise? Yet I gathered another lifelong enemy. To retaliate, this sheriff gave Congressman Smith a signed statement that the Abilene vote would be against me in the proportion of 529 for Smith to 94 for me, and though absolutely unfounded Smith advertised this false prophecy over the Jumbo district.

And to get started, I first had to defeat in a preferential primary Judge J. M. Wagstaff, an honored citizen of Abilene, who had lived in Taylor County 35 years, and was then State representative. As a further complication R. N. Grisham, of Sweetwater, Nolan County, entered the race, Kent County having been his old home, and he having been a former district attorney. He was backed by the politicians and leading political citizens of Sweetwater, and his astute campaign manager, Judge John B. Littler, of Howard County, was a seasoned politician of west Texas. But after the election, thanks to my loyal friends and incomparable campaign managers, the aspiring Mr. Grisham was hardly able to realize what had happened to him, as his wily campaign manager of Howard County was not able even to carry Howard County for him, and of the 59 counties in the Jumbo district Mr. Grisham carried only 2, Reeves and Nolan Counties, his home and that of the Sweetwater business men who backed him, and despite their money spent, and tremendous efforts exerted in his behalf, they were able to give him only 621 votes in Nolan County to my 464 votes there. Mr. Grisham is still bewildered, and deserves mention here only because he has been specially selected to defeat me in the coming July primary. If Mr. Gompers and his radical associates of union leaders exhibit in other districts the same want of political sagacity and acumen as they have in my own, all of my threatened colleagues will be safe. On April 9, 1920, the Sweetwater Reporter devoted nearly a whole column on its front page to a fake interview with an alleged farmer to the effect that the farmers of Nolan County would be for Grisham. I immediately demanded the name and address of this farmer, and the Reporter has not yet been able to give it, as the Grisham farmers and Gompers farmers are as scarce as hens' teeth in Nolan County. Notwithstanding that the Sweetwater Reporter devoted most of two columns on its front page of March 26, 1920—gratis—to Mr. Grisham, again in its issue of April 12, 1920, it permitted him—gratis—to use part of three columns, wherein he alleged that he was being supported by the county and district and city officers, bankers, business men, laborers, and practically all of the ladies of Sweetwater, who had poll-tax receipts. My humble card in this same paper had to be marked "political advertisement." Such antics are being cut in my district during my enforced absence. I warn my colleagues that similar stunts may be pulled off in their districts. Loving a fair fight, and not wanting to take advantage of Mr. Gompers, for his information and to give him an opportunity to discover a worthier antagonist for me, I regret that I am forced to humiliate Mr. Grisham and his former 621 Nolan County supporters by now inserting the 1916 vote, as certified in the secretary of state's office, in Austin, to wit:

Official vote for Representative, sixteenth congressional district of Texas, in Democratic primary election held July 22, 1916, as certified by the chairman and secretary of the Democratic executive committee (with Smith vote omitted).

SWEETWATER, TEX., August 25, 1916.

We, the executive committee of the sixteenth congressional district of Texas, hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct tabulation of the vote for Democratic nomination for Congressman in the July primary election, as reported by the several county chairmen, to wit: That THOMAS L. BLANTON received 20,249 votes; that W. R. Smith received 18,262 votes; and that R. N. Grisham received 3,656 votes.

Respectfully submitted.

H. C. HORD, Chairman.

Attest:

R. H. MCCARTY, Secretary.

You will note that my home county of Taylor gave me 2,185 votes and gave Grisham only 118; that my old home of Shackelford County gave Grisham only 24 votes, while it gave me 451 votes; and you will further note that in Grisham's old home county of Kent he received only 40 votes to my 205 votes, and in his present home county of Eastland Mr. Grisham received only 86 votes to my 1,579 votes. The five counties in my old forty-second judicial district, where I was judge eight years, gave Grisham only 340 votes to my 5,602 votes. Yet in the hopes of defeating me with this snail pacer, Mr. Gompers and his radical labor leaders are to waste thousands of dollars in useless effort. I have urged the loyal newspapers in my district to accept these Gompers page advertisements, charge full rate for same, collect the cash, and circulate it in the district.

My 1916 platform, upon which I was elected, had the following plank:

LABOR AND CAPITAL.

Capital is thoroughly organized, and I therefore believe in legitimate labor organizations, and where lawfully conducted they will find in me a friend and protector. The safety, health, comfort, and legal rights of all laborers should be safeguarded by adequate legislation, and, likewise, legitimate business enterprises should be encouraged and fully protected by law. Every laborer should be enabled by thrift and economy to acquire his own home and to be able to devote some of his time to the pleasure and enjoyment of his family.

I have faithfully kept said pledge. But because I said I would be their friend and protector only when their unions were lawfully conducted, and that "legitimate business enterprises should be encouraged and fully protected by law," union leaders then denominated me as an enemy, and on the night before the election R. E. Rankin went to Telegrapher J. B. Latham and had sent from Abilene numerous telegrams to labor unions all over the district stating that I was an enemy to union labor. The loyal Americans who are members of unions in my district believe in law and do not want me to be for them unless their organizations are lawfully conducted. I have been for all proper labor demands when lawfully made and have fought against only the unlawful, and have also protected legitimate business.

Among its numerous misrepresentations the Olden Advance has asserted that the Government has paid for the paper and printing of records and speeches I have distributed, and also paid clerks for addressing same, in refutation of which I insert the following:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 24, 1920.

I hereby certify that Representative THOMAS L. BLANTON, of Texas, has paid to me for the Public Printer the total sum of $4,025.37 covering cost to Government of paper and reprinting from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD various speeches made by him, which reprinted speeches under the law are entitled to distribution under the frank of any Congressman or Senator.

Representative BLANTON from time to time has also purchased from me extra copies of the DAILY CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which varies from 3 to 18 cents each according to size, he having paid me as much as $8 for extra copies of one issue, such RECORD being entitled to distribution under any Congressman's frank.

W. A. SMITH,
Congressional Record Clerk, Capitol.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 12, 1920.

The ADVANCE,
Olden, Tex.:

Among your many other past misrepresentations, in your issue of April 3 you assert that the stenographer addressing Congressman BLANTON'S speeches was paid by the Government.

I have had charge of the addressing of these speeches, and out of his own pocket Congressman BLANTON has paid me $200 per month for same, and he has likewise paid my assistant.

Mrs. C. BENTON.

Mr. Speaker, until lately I have not been in favor of the law permitting the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD or any part thereof to be franked. But through no other possible way could the people of this Nation learn the facts about their own business. While I am here now, working day and night for my people and country, these enemies in my district are viciously and maliciously misrepresenting my record in a thousand ways. Have not the people the right to know the facts? During the past year I have sent more RECORDS to other States than to my own, and have thus expended most of my salary in trying to acquaint the people of the United States with their own business, so that some of its defects may possibly be remedied.

My enemies far away in Texas even question my record on prohibition and woman suffrage. Name me a colleague who has worked harder for these two measures than I have? The gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL] is our only colleague elected strictly on a national prohibition platform. Kindly permit me to show my constituents what he says:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 15, 1918.

MY DEAR MR. BLANTON: Just a word to express to you my admiration of the great and effective work that you have done for prohibition in the House of Representatives ever since you have been here. You are one to be counted on at any and all junctures for action in this cause, and I have found that you have not let parliamentary camouflage obscure the main issue.

Very cordially, C. H. RANDALL.

NATIONAL AMERICAN WOMAN SUFFRAGE ASSOCIATION, CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE HEADQUARTERS,
Washington, D. C., May 24, 1919.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: We have great pleasure in thanking you once more, in behalf of our association, for your help in bringing about the overwhelming victory for woman suffrage in the House of Representatives on May 21, as well as for your cordial and sympathetic aid at many other times and in many other ways.

We know that you share our hope that the suffrage amendment will soon be on its way to the States for ratification, and that you rejoice with us because the end of our long struggle is in sight.

With grateful appreciation for all that you have done, we are,

Sincerely, yours,

CARRIE CHAPMAN CATT,
President.
ANNA HOWARD SHAW,
Honorary President.
HELEN H. GARDENER,
Fifth Vice President.
MAUD WOOD PARK,
Chairman Congressional Committee.

It is well known that during the three years I have been in Congress no post-office building bill has been passed. Yet Mayor C. A. Engle, of Sweetwater, condemns me and favors Mr. Gompers's Grisham because I have not built a post-office building in Sweetwater.

Shortly before I went off the bench I incurred the animosity of D. J. Neill, of Gorman, by deciding a case not to his liking. Now he fights me and favors Mr. Gompers's Grisham, but in 1912 he wrote me:

GORMAN, TEX., July 8, 1912.

Judge THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Eastland, Tex.

DEAR SIR AND FRIEND: I am glad to see the people standing by you. I love true men, and you have proven to me that you are a true man and ready at any time to brave the powers that be in defense of the rights of the people. The people are with you and will be with you to the end. You have proven to the people that you want good government, and sometime I hope to see the people make you governor. God bless you.

Yours, truly, D. J. NEILL.

D. J. Neill does not represent our farmers now. From one of the men who knows the farmer's friend from his foe here is the following:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 26, 1920.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BLANTON: As director, representing agriculture, in the Mississippi Valley Association, embracing about 26 States, I wish to say that if the farmers of our Nation had a few more men in Congress who understand their needs as you do and who would serve their interests as you have done, normal prosperity would return more rapidly, for when our farmers are prosperous all other interests in our Nation prosper accordingly.

Not only are the farmers of Texas indebted to you for your defense of agriculture, but the farmers of the Nation as well owe you a debt of gratitude, and I believe not only the farmers, but those engaged in banking, industrial, and mercantile pursuits in your district, will thoroughly appreciate the services you have rendered.

With kindest regards, I am,

Yours, very truly, R. D. BOWEN (Paris, Tex.).

The firm of Gompers & Grisham must cease camouflaging. The Grisham fake "landslide" telegrams he had sent from El Paso on the day before the 1916 primary fooled very few people. Present misrepresentations are fooling few now. My people are wise and decerning. Following redistricting in the last election I became the Representative of the new seventeenth district, embracing 19 counties. I will have represented it one term. Its people advise me that in July they are going to elect me to represent this new seventeenth district for a second term, this foreign Hebrew, Mr. Samuel Gompers, to the contrary notwithstanding. For their joint pondering I submit to Gompers & Grisham the official vote in the last primary:

The correct official vote by counties is given below:

Vote for Congressman in the seventeenth congressional district of Texas in Democratic primary July 27, 1918.

THOMAS L. BLANTON'S majority over all three opponents, 15,212.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion let me state that I have over 5,000 strong letters from substantial business men of this Nation, some from every congressional district in the United States, indorsing my work in Congress. Likewise the farmers generally have indorsed my efforts to keep their departments of agriculture from being dominated by radical labor leaders and, both in Texas and other States, have approved the following letter:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 18, 1920.

Hon. FRED W. DAVIS,
Commissioner of Agriculture, Austin, Tex.

MY DEAR SIR: Your three-page letter of 14th received, wherein you oppose the farmers' memorial asking Congress to prevent strikes, and you defend strikes by organized labor, and you specially defend the position taken by railroad employees, who have threatened a nation-wide tie-up unless their wage demands are granted, and you conclude by stating that if Congress should act favorably on the memorial sent by the farmers' four organizations regret would follow.

You sent this propaganda letter not only to my Texas colleagues, but Congressman MCARTHUR, of Oregon, and others tell me they likewise received one; hence I take it that you mailed one to each Congressman and Senator.

Not a single posted farmer in Texas will approve of your action. Does the State of Texas pay you a salary to thus waste your time and its stationery and postage in sending such Gompers propaganda to Senators and Congressmen? Have you let the farmers of Texas know the contents of your letter? Don't you know that the farmers bear more heavily than anyone else the burden of all labor strikes? Don't you know that the farmers of Texas favor proper arbitration of all industrial disputes to prevent strikes? Are you trying to hedge on Mr. Gompers's recent pronunciamento by thus assuring him that you are a dependable friend and want to be reelected?

I had hoped that the department of agriculture in my State was administered in the interests of Texas farmers and had other use for its time and money than wasting it in vicious propaganda. I know the farmers of Texas. Every posted, intelligent one of them will condemn your action.

Very sincerely, yours, THOMAS L. BLANTON.

REMARKS

OF

HON. ERNEST R. ACKERMAN,

OF NEW JERSEY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, May 11, 1920.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, having visited the western battle fronts and traveled along them for a thousand miles from the North Sea to Metz, and having seen the dugouts within whispering distance of each other on the "Yser," the devastation in Flanders, the plugging of the submarine bases at Ostend and Zeebrugge, the destruction that exists at Ypres, the waste and desolation of the fields of northern France, the acres of annihilation around Ramscappelle and the effects of the poison gases on the surrounding forests, the inextricably locked barbed-wire fences guarding "No Man's Land," the slimy trenches and damp and gloomy habitations in the hillsides, the shell-swept fortresses near Verdun, the German prisoners working to repair in part the damage they had created, the white crosses by the thousands in the cemeteries of Ploisy-Aine, Romagne, and Belleau Woods, I can not fail to fully appreciate the great sacrifices that our gallant soldiers, sailors, and others underwent while in the American Army overseas.

These steel-nerved men were the "spearhead" of the javelin that drove the enemy to cover while those at home working in shop, shipyard, and factories constituted the shaft, and the citizenry as a whole the morale, whereby the victory was assured.

These millions of survivors who worked overseas and in the training camps at home are a class to be envied. To the thousands denied the privilege of participating in the honors to our heroes must be a great and increasing regret that they were not on the field of triumph. To attempt to measure appreciation in monetary terms for valorous service and sacrifice would almost be descending "from the sublime to the ridiculous."

No dollar token could possibly equalize the acme of appreciation we owe! For the loved ones of those who sleep in France the most considerate care will be taken, for theirs is a grief that it is almost impossible to assuage, and our debt of gratitude to those who poured out their life blood on the field of battle is immeasurable.

For those crippled, maimed, broken in health by the noxious gases, or the incapacitated from whatever cause, the most generous and continued care must evermore be extended. There are from official reports many veterans of the World War, according to Dr. Rucker of the War Risk Insurance Bureau, who were disabled when they were discharged from the United States forces. No question exists but what it is the country's obligation and duty to take care of this number, and Congress has appropriated at this session $325,000,000 for their relief, and I for one am willing to vote larger amounts if necessary. However, to extend additional bounty at the present time to those who are enjoying the blessings of health, who an All-Wise Providence permitted to escape unscathed, and who are now obtaining remunerative employment, would be violating the fundamentals of economics which would work havoc in the South as well as in the North.

With the vast expenditures bearing heavily on the backs of all classes of people at present, with unsettled conditions prevailing because of the reaction from the great conflict, consideration is proper and must be given to the 20,000,000 holders of Liberty bonds, the taxpayers, and the common people generally who supplied the sinews whereby the victory was achieved.

Our heroes fought that stable conditions might prevail, and they readily perceived that to attempt to go back in an endeavor to resolve into "income" that which has become "capital" is an unscrambling which is impossible if any further stability is to be attributed to the financial structure of the country. Whatever income was reinvested during the war has been already absorbed into the "warp and woof" of the country's industries, and is now in the form of bricks and mortar, lumber and rubber, iron and steel, engines and cars, and is serving all mankind, not sufficiently or adequately, perhaps, but giving good service to the extent of its employment. Do we not need more of this kind of productive investment?

If we choke it off or fail to produce in excess of what we are now doing, how can prices recede? They will go higher beyond peradventure! The ex-service men are as anxious as any that prices should fall and that can only be accomplished by producing more. It is as certain as the sun rises and sets that the authorization of a cash bonus at the present time would not cause prices to fall but would have exactly the contrary effect.

If, as has been suggested, we take funds made in the past as a basis for distribution, we can not do so without appropriating capital, for the income of the past has become fixed; it is no longer fluid, and to appropriate capital would be to make of industrial enterprises a thing of "shreds and patches."

It is true that the Ways and Means Committee has again constructed a revenue producer which, while exhibiting ingenious features, pleases but few. Some crippled ex-service men lying on beds of pain protest most earnestly against adjusted compensation being paid at present, realizing the staggering burden that the finances of the Government are bearing. Other ex-service men, holding their participation in our country's defense above price, have resigned from organizations which have been pressing for immediate plans to provide cash compensation to all. I know also of those eligible for maximum amounts, and who performed exceedingly hazardous aviation and sea service, who do not wish to be recipients of national consideration at the present time, although what they might be entitled to they could effectually utilize.

If there are those who have suffered financial hardships and if homes have been taken away from selective-service men, undoubtedly legislation can be framed to take care of these exceptions which will relieve whatever distress exists without further disturbing the economic situation.

The approach of a presidential election does not tend to promote the calm consideration of a situation which should be undertaken when the atmosphere of "politics are adjourned" exists rather than when "politics are inflamed," as at present, and my feelings on this point are shared by many ex-service men as well as by others in various walks of life.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not cumber the RECORD with the original evidences of approval of my stand in this matter, but I am sure that upon further reflection it will be apparent that the present is not the time, much as we might like so to do, to press for further adjusted cash compensation for our honored ex-service men who are sound in health, in limb, and are occupied in productive, remunerative employment.

Gardens, Flower Yards, and Home Production.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM D. UPSHAW,

OF GEORGIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, February 10, 1920.

On the bill (H. R. 12272) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the Department of Agriculture, of course, was organized to encourage every phase of agricultural effort. And it is as clear as a cloudless sunrise that its organization and development have meant, indeed, not merely the sunrise but the sunburst of a new day in the rural life of America.

Having traveled rather widely in platform-lecture work before coming to Congress, I have had opportunity to see much of the farm-demonstration work going on, and I never meet these enterprising evangels of agricultural education and inspiration but that I feel something of the same thrill that stirs me when I go among the departments here in Washington and see this great Government with all of its symmetrical ramifications of wonder-working activity—it makes me a truer American and a better patriot.

The Department of Agriculture is doing a wonderful work under its financial limitations—mark my words, financial limitations—for it is a startling cause for contemplation that, with an annual governmental expense account of over $3,000,000,000, this Agricultural bill carries only about $30,000,000, and one-third of this amount, bless you, goes to other objects than agriculture—forestry, roads, and so forth—causes highly necessary in themselves and tremendously worthy, but not an actual part of agricultural activities. In other words, only $20,000,000 a year to encourage, to lead, and develop the most important industry—the foundation industry of all America.

And yet in face of this fact we find it necessary to vote for the Langley amendment to get the same amount for the distribution of seeds that we had last year, for the committee appropriation under the lash of the cry of retrenchment has been cut to only $39,416 for the gardens and flower yards all over the Nation.

I recognize the fact that we must buckle on our armor, put our hands in our pockets like a brave, grateful people, and pay our war debt, and that therefore retrenchment is necessary in certain directions, but let us not begin at the gardens and even the very tables of the people. [Applause.]

I confess with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] that before I came to Congress I used to laugh at the sending of garden and flower seeds as a part of a Congressman's duty. "Send me some garden seeds," said some of my supporting friends as I started away to Washington. And it was said as a laughing joke. But since I came here and began to feel the pulse of the people—call it a desire to please the "dear people" and come back, if you will—my mail reveals the fact that there is a widespread interest among the masses in this garden and flower seed business.

I am still laughing away down inside of me about that remark of my witty and brilliant friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT], when he declared that "our constituents are more anxious for these seeds than they are for our speeches." I have a confession to make. It punctures my pride, but here goes: Since I crawled off of bed where I stayed about seven years as the result of an accident while I was hauling wood as a farmer boy, I have been selling "hot air" for a living [laughter], and to tell the truth about it, I enjoy my speeches even if nobody else does. [Laughter and applause.] But I make here the distressing confession that I have received a hundred times more requests for garden and flower seeds than I have for my speeches. [Laughter and applause.]

Only a few days ago I sent 50 packages of seeds to one man, a superintendent of a factory, who said he wanted to encourage his employees to plant gardens in the burnt district of Atlanta and to make their homes more attractive by beautifying their yards with flowers.

This, gentlemen, is not politics, as has been suggested; it is patriotism; it is common sense; it is production; it is a part cure for the high cost of housekeeping; it is personal and national economy; it is encouragement to the people at the very foundation of things.

BEECHER AND GRADY ON FLOWERS AND HOMES.

Henry Ward Beecher used to say that if he were traveling through a strange country and were looking for a place to stay all night he would keep on going until he found a house with flowers in the yard, for he knew that refinement and love must reign in the home where beautiful flowers smiled outside.

God smiled and the flowers bloomed,
Some poet grandly said,
And woman was the fairest flower
That raised her sun-crowned head.

Henry Grady declared in his great speech at the University of Virginia: "Teach a man that his sovereignty lies beneath his hat; link him to a spot of earth, and his loyalty will save the Republic when the drum tap is futile and the barracks are forever deserted."

And I love to think of the happy home of the plain, everyday citizen, the home that is his haven of rest and love and hope, surrounded by flowers of beauty and fragrance, all the more beautiful to him because of the deft and delicate touch of the noble little woman who is the wife of his bosom and the mother of his children—I love to think of him, I say, loyal defender of the flag that lifts its protecting folds above that happy home, coming home at nightfall and finding his wife standing with their laughing children amid the flowers that bloom about their home like the very smile of God, ready to give him the kiss of welcome that drives away "the cares that infest the day," and making him feel that for such a home he is ready to work and to live, and if need be to die. [Applause.]

Gentlemen of the House, I want this Government to do everything possible to link itself to the faith and the affections of that home. And if the flowers in that yard and the vegetables in that garden came largely from governmental help and encouragement, it serves to make better patriots out of the boys and girls who planted them and feast upon them, and likewise of the father and mother who enjoy their beauty and their bounty. Every time a school boy or girl writes me for seed for the yard or the garden I send a letter seeking to encourage them in their worthy efforts. I thank God that I was reared by a father who taught me the wholesome doctrine that "every boy ought to know how a tired man feels"; and I know of nothing except the holy inspiration of a family altar that is more needed for the building of a steady stamina among the boys and girls of to-day than to encourage them to work—to work some every day—to beautify their home, to fructify their gardens, and to look with eager pride upon everything that brings happiness and prosperity to their parents, their home, their community, and their country.

HOME INDEPENDENCE A FOUNDATION NECESSITY.

And this thought is close akin to that other thought which is a foundation necessity in every home, and more especially in every farmer's home. I can never get over the feeling produced in my boyish heart by the incongruous picture of seeing some of our neighbors hauling hay and corn and meat by my father's home, which they had bought from some merchant in Marietta, Powder Springs, or Atlanta, who had agreed to "run" them with supplies to make their crop. And while farm demonstration and the farm-loan bank have done a great deal to help change this condition of dependence among the farmers, I still feel constrained, for the sake of those who have not yet become emancipated, to call all the farmers in the land before me, especially those in my own district, and issue to them this one ringing injunction: "Live at home! Live at home! Live at home! Tax your genius and your industry to raise everything that the family needs at home, and your surplus will spell your financial independence!" Such a course will go a long way toward helping to solve many of the problems that confront and confound this Nation to-day. And as an encouragement to this good end I believe that the Department of Agriculture ought to be voted by this Congress a hundred millions instead of twenty millions a year. This Government can no longer afford to be "small" in its handclasp of encouragement to the man who feeds and clothes the world. [Applause.]

HON. SIMEON D. FESS,

Morgan & Co.; chairman executive committee, John A. Stewart; secretary, Andrew B. Humphrey.]

To the American People:

War's reaction, universal absorption in business, and work of reconstruction seem to have made Americans less regardful of primary things—things of principle, tradition, and heritage—which relate to the foundation upon which the United States of America rests.

It so happens that the year 1920 is doubly significant historically, in that 300 years ago beginning the 30th of last July there was being held in Jamestown, Virginia Colony, the first American legislative assembly, called by free men, of lawful age, and of full understanding.

And while these first Americans were instituting self-government on the American Continent a little group of English humble folk who during a 12-year sojourn in Holland, to which they had fled from Britain to be free to worship God in the manner of which their conscience approved, was already making ready to go to America and establish in the New World a home of religious freedom.

So one year after the Virginians had met in assembly—July 30, 1620—these men and women and children of the Pilgrim band left Leyden for Delfshaven, from which they were to sail for America by way of Southampton and Plymouth in the mother country.

By one of those strange coincidences which sometimes seems to set aside certain days and endow them with traditional significance, July 30 and November 11 take on such an endowment, for July 30 joins Cavalier and Pilgrim together as twin sources of that high inspiration which met in the convention of the great Constitution, and November 11 is not only the anniversary day of the Mayflower compact, the second assumption by English colonists in America of an inalienable right of self-government, but is also the memorable day of the beginning of that armistice which closed the Great War, in which the descendants of Pilgrim and Cavalier and their kin across seas fought and won together.

Therefore the year 1920 being an historic anniversary year—as well as the fifth year of overmuch dangerous propaganda, false counsel, and loose statement by public characters—it would seem to be vitally essential that there should be brought to the consciousness of the American people in a great national celebration the meaning and the priceless worth of our free institutions, and that Americans everywhere should challenge with these free institutions of the English-speaking world the false principles and vicious practices of the extreme radical and all those who would conspire against orderly self-government and American national well-being.

Therefore, we, the undersigned (representing organizations having a membership of many millions of men and women) urge and invite the people of the United States of America to join, as free born, free bred, and self-governed citizens may do, and always have done, in celebrating, each locality in the way it deems best, beginning June 4, 1920, their own free institutions; and to give grateful recognition to the great fact that these institutions were esablished in America by the fathers; that from generation to generation they have been transmitted, strengthened and unimpaired, down to this the sixth generation since 1776, which must, in its own turn, hand over to a succeeding generation these same institutions so laboriously and painfully conceived and with so much sacrifice maintained.

We offer as suggestion for a program public meetings, special instruction in the public schools, universal church service, local pageants relating to life North, South, East, and West from earliest times, etc.

Holland, Great Britain, and Canada will also celebrate through people's committees and will send representative delegations to take part in carrying out a popular American program.

Let inquiry as to further particulars be made to Andrew B. Humphrey, secretary of the Sulgrave Institution, 233 Broadway, New York City (named for the ancestral home of George Washington in England and owned and maintained by a Sulgrave board of trustees as a place of pilgrimage for all who live together in law-abiding good will in the Republic which Washington set up on the Western Continent).

Excess of Governmental Printed Matter—President's Veto of Attempt to Check Waste.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALBERT JOHNSON,

OF WASHINGTON,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 14, 1920.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Joint Committee on Printing, I desire to make a brief statement. In enacting those provisions of the legislative appropriation bill limiting the publication of magazines and periodicals and the issuance of mimeographed press-agency matter Congress proceeded in what is evident is the only practical manner to check an evil and to safeguard the Public Treasury. That the President has seen fit to veto the bill because it contains those provisions is unfortunate.

For years, as all students of the situation realize, the tendency in all branches of this Government, not excepting Congress itself, has been toward excessive printing. That tendency burst all bounds during the war, during the period of which also the governmental press-agent system was increased beyond reason. It is a poor bureau, commission, or department that does not now maintain its own press agency, and it is a poor Government press agent that does not work night and day in producing matter to glorify the works of his immediate chief and of the administration.

Every newspaper editor in the country knows, if the public does not, of the tremendous waste of paper and effort that results, for every day a great bundle of the outpourings of Government press agents comes through the mails to the editorial desk, adding their weight to the already overburdened postal system.

Congress for several years has been endeavoring to check this evil. Time and again it has written into the law limitations that have sought to prevent personal press agenting of the character I have outlined and to confine Government printing to legitimate and necessary purposes.

Every one of these have failed. The ingenious department heads and bureau chiefs have found methods to get around the law. To-day the total volume of printing and press agenting is greater than ever before. It is observed that Cabinet members and others in the Government are, more and more frequently, emitting in great editions mimeographed copies of their speeches, frequently of a partisan character, and sending them through the mails. Newspaper correspondents inform me that during the five days Secretary Daniels has been on the stand before the Senate committee this week, his own Government press agent has been furnishing to the newspapers at Government expense daily from 64 to 70 mimeographed pages of matter defending the administration and assailing Admiral Sims. Secretary Daniels is not the only offender in this regard.

But, quite aside from the partisan aspect of the press agent and Government publishing evil, the great outstanding fact is that extravagance and waste exist in Government printing, and that the executive department has shown that it will not practice economy. The cost, and the waste of paper, of which there is a national shortage, are factors in the situation that must be considered. Congress itself is cutting down its own printing; it insists that the executive departments do likewise. Since Congress alone holds the power of the purse in our form of government, the duty is upon Congress to compel the needed economy.

There is a quaint humor in the argument of the President's veto message to the effect that Congress, in establishing restraints, has invaded the jurisdiction of the executive department and is imposing a censorship on Government publications. Even a superficial study of the character of matter produced by Government press agents shows clearly that if there has been any invasion of jurisdiction it has been by the executive arms of the Government themselves, while all newspaper men are familiar with the rigidity of the censorship that the Wilson administration maintains over all executive activities. The Government press agent system in itself is a censorship, for it limits the source of information in the particular department or bureau to the press agent's office, and that office gives out nothing that is not favorable to the official chief. It ill becomes the President to charge Congress with attempting to establish a censorship.

With no partisan motives, with a knowledge of the facts and with a sincere and earnest desire to achieve economy in expenditures where there has been gross waste and where the Chief Executive himself has not concerned himself to hold his subordinates in check, Congress has enacted this wholesome law. It is to be regretted that the President distorts the facts and opposes the efforts of Congress in order that he may preserve a wasteful and vicious system.

SPEECH

OF

HON. JOHN M. BAER,

OF NORTH DAKOTA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, March 11, 1920.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12775) to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, while we have under consideration the Construction Division which is related to the Engineering Corps of the Army, I want to call the attention of the Members of the House to the various engineering bureaus of the Government. I desire to speak with special reference to the experiences the people of my district have had in obtaining engineering services from the Government on flood-control and drainage projects in the Red River Valley of the North.

There is a duplication and lack of coordination among the various departments which have engineering branches. There is a commission for farm engineering and drainage in the Agricultural Department which has done some work in the Red River Valley. The engineers of the War Department also have done considerable work in conjunction with the States. The Interior Department also has an engineering corps which has dabbled in the Red River flood-control projects.

What we need is one department of engineering and public works consolidated under one head in order to eliminate this waste and extravagance caused by the overlapping duties and duplicating surveys made by these various branches of our Government. Millions of dollars have been wasted on surveys and plans for various projects in the United States.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAER. I will.

Mr. HICKS. Is not the proposed establishment of a separate corps of construction in the Army similar to the Bureau of Yards and Docks in the Navy?

Mr. BAER. I am very glad the gentleman from New York, a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, has called that to my attention. My proposition is the same service that we have in the Navy now. No one can say that the Navy is not efficient in this special branch. We must coordinate the different branches of the engineering department of this Government and get our bureaus, commissions, and other departments systematized. To-day we have no comprehensive plan to drain the Red River Valley of the North, and the older Members of Congress can remember the appropriations of thousands of dollars for this purpose.

In order to obtain definite and immediate action for one comprehensive plan to cover the Red River Valley projects in the three States of North Dakota, South Dakota, and Minnesota I introduced the following bill:

A bill H. R. 11559) providing for appropriation for the purpose of making examinations and surveys and preparing plans and estimates of cost, and for construction projects, for regulating the stream flow and controling the flood waters of the Red River of the North and its tributaries.

Whereas the urgent necessity and the interstate character of the projects demand that the Government of the United States join with the several States and communities to apply a reemdy for the amelioration of flood conditions in the Red River Valley of the North; and

Whereas numerous surveys have been made by several Federal departments and by the States of Minnesota and North Dakota of the Red River of the North and its tributaries, and the State of North Dakota has appropriated the sum of $33,000 and the State of Minnesota the sum of $35,000 for the purpose of cooperating with the Government of the United States in making surveys and preparing plans and estimates of cost for flood prevention and protection on rivers of the States of North Dakota and Minnesota, respectively; and

Whereas 11,000,000 of acres will be affected and thousands of acres made available for soldier and civilian settlement: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $25,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, authorized to be appropriated to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers for the purpose of making examinations, investigations, and surveys, and preparing plans and estimates of cost, and for constructing projects for regulating the stream flow and controlling the flood waters of the Red River of the North and its tributaries.

SEC. 2. That such work to be done in cooperation with the State drainage commissions and engineers of the States of Minnesota, North Dakota, and South Dakota.

After notifying the members of the various flood-control commissions, I obtained a hearing before the House Committee on Flood Control. The following statement contains important extracts from this hearing:

STATEMENT OF HON. JOHN M. BAER, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to say in the beginning that I introduced this measure to call the matter to the attention of the committee. I am willing to leave it to the judgment and wisdom of the committee to work out a bill that will cover the three States of North Dakota, South Dakota, and Minnesota, in order to prevent floods in the Red River Valley.

There are about 11,000,000 acres that would be indirectly affected by this project; there are about 4,000,000 acres that are directly affected, and 1,000,000 acres would be reclaimed by draining the lowlands. Now, this 1,000,000 acres, if they were reclaimed, would furnish 10,000 farms of 100 acres each to the returned soldiers or other citizens if they desired to settle on them. The value of the land would run from $50 to $100 an acre to-day. This bill would make an appropriation of $25,000,000 to reclaim an area of nearly $100,000,000 worth of land. * * *

I think that for a moment it would pay to consider the serious condition that this country faces so far as the wheat crop is concerned. There is going to be a shortage of wheat, probably, in two or three years. It is agreed by all agricultural economists that the acreage of wheat this year will be reduced 20 to 30 per cent. The uncertain prices and the demoralized conditions of credit in Europe make the market so treacherously uncertain that the farmer does not feel the confidence that he did when the price was fixed, and, of course, that will be automatically repealed on June 1.

Now, this comprehensive plan can not be left to any one of the States alone. The three governors, the flood control and the drainage commissions of the three States are in accord now for the first time. They have gotten together on a plan for the project. The commissioners were to have been here at this hearing. Then it was postponed until the 8th of February. The North Dakota drainage engineer, Mr. Herbert A. Hard, came here on the 27th of January and waited until the 8th of February. He now wants to get to work out there on some surveys, so I wanted to have him appear before the committee while here. I believe it is safe to say we shall have the fullest cooperation in a general plan from all who are interested.

Any engineer will tell you, of course, that this project should be handled from the standpoint of the welfare of the people on both sides of the river, because if there is any discrimination it will aggravate the trouble on the other side of the river, especially by promoting local projects.

* * * Mr. Hard is a technical engineer and expert who can lay this plan more vividly before you than I can. I will take notes while he is talking and may ask for a few minutes later for the purpose of collecting up any points he has left out. So, if it pleases the committee, I will introduce Mr. Herbert A. Hard, who is State drainage engineer of North Dakota and also a member of the State flood-control commission.

I thank the committee for its attention.

STATEMENT BY MR. HERBERT A. HARD, STATE DRAINAGE AND FLOOD-CONTROL ENGINEER, NORTH DAKOTA.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you give your name and your position to the reporter?

Mr. HARD. Herbert A. Hard, State drainage engineer of North Dakota. My residence is Fargo.

Gentlemen, if you please, I would like to submit a few facts in regard to the matters involved in both bills that have been under discussion, because they have my most hearty approval, especially the Baer bill. I think they are worthy of consideration. I have resided in the Red River Valley for the past 10 years, and I know whereof I speak, as those other men who have spoken here. My work for the past four years has been in the capacity of flood and drainage engineer for the State of North Dakota. The six years prior to that I served the State and Federal Governments as a geological engineer. My duties have taken me on both sides of the river, in Minnesota and the Dakotas; my work naturally takes me into this territory. I represented the State of North Dakota as a citizen as well as the State officially, and I am one of a number of men selected as delegates by several very large flood-control organizations in the Red River Valley to seek Federal aid for control of floods and relief for the vast spring wheat lands of the valley. I happen to be one of the delegates who was to meet you at an early date. There were delegates from each State. The Minnesota Legislature appointed five members, headed by O. C. Neuman; Gov. Norbeck of South Dakota appointed S. E. Oscarson, while the North Dakota Flood Commission and O. E. Blanding represent that State with me. Hon. A. B. Kaercher and W. P. Chestnut were to represent the Tri-State Flood Control Association and the North Dakota Flood Control Association.

We have resolutions which were passed by these several flood-control and drainage bodies and by the Red River Valley Development Association respectfully beseeching your aid, and we have had a number of letters in regard to it, which I will be glad to submit. Those resolutions were drafted with regard to the grave flood situation. We have several very aggressive bodies, very effective bodies, with which Mr. VOLSTEAD and Mr. STEENERSON are familiar. These men are responsible for my being here, and also the other men that came down. The State legislatures and the governors and the State commissioners of South Dakota and North Dakota have also asked us men to accompany them.

Mr. Baer has told you of the lack of laws whereby the States were unable to act in their individual capacity to control the flooding of lands that embodied a loss of over a million acres. These men set about trying to secure, and did secure, effective legislation which would enable the States to get together and act immediately. North Dakota and Minnesota have passed laws and created a flood-control commission with generous appropriations. The counties alone during the past years have spent millions of dollars in drainage work. During the past four years the North Dakota Flood Control Commission, of which I am engineer, has been working out a comprehensive plan to prevent floods in the entire valley. In Minnesota a commission has been created and some work is being done on the east side of the Red River Valley.

The project which we have to present is not one of small dimensions. It is not a local affair. The vast mother project includes the entire Red River Valley in the States and Canada. It is made up of several large unit projects. The various units of this project are very important themselves. One of the big units is the Lake Traverse, that of which Mr. VOLSTEAD so ably told, another the Red Lake, which Mr. STEENERSON presented.

The report which I have just placed on the table (the First Annual Report of the Engineer of the North Dakota Flood Control Commission) was prepared by myself. It is brief, and I wish to submit it with my evidence, supplying each member of your committee with a copy. It covers a reconnoissance survey of the Red River Valley and presents a series of definite projects which are believed will put an end to disastrous floods. It has a little map showing the boundary between Minnesota and North Dakota and South Dakota and the Red River Valley in the States. Then we have these maps [indicating maps on wall] and we have the engineers' blue prints. This indicates the area that has been damaged by floods [indicating on map]. If I do not make myself clear, and there are any questions that you desire to ask, I will be glad to answer them, or I will be glad to locate any of these points.

The area in the States of Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, in the Red River Valley is a tremendously big area. To give you some idea of the size of the project, in these States we have over 35,000 square miles in the area of the Red River Valley. Including Canada, we will have about 110,000 square miles. So it is a very large area, and I am not calling your attention to some minor local project. The river extends from Lake Traverse on up past Fargo [indicating on map], and is the boundary line for 230 miles between North Dakota and Minnesota. * * * It contains about 22,000,000 acres, an area about as great as that of the New England States. * * *

Mr. HUMPHREYS. May I ask you what you mean by 35,000 square miles; is there that much subject to overflow?

Mr. HARD. I mean to say that is the total watershed south of Canada. I will immediately get to that point, the subject of overflow. There are about 11,000,000 acres of that land that are vitally affected by the project which is to be considered in the several States, and there will be about 4,000,000 acres very greatly benefited in these sections [indicating on map], and there will be better than a million acres which will be virtually reclaimed by any such a project as will undoubtedly be carried out.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Does this 1,000,000 acres, and 4,000,000 acres, and 11,000,000 acres include all privately owned lands?

Mr. HARD. No; that includes some small amounts of Government area, but it is mostly privately owned. * * *

Mr. BAER. Right there, might I interrupt you? This area which you are discussing, during glacial conditions was supposed to be a large lake about 100 miles wide. You can trace it by the sands. In eastern North Dakota and western Minnesota you come upon the shore-sand beach of this lake, and the geologists indicate that one time this was a great lake.

Mr. HARD. So this is a very level country of which we are speaking; an old lake floor with the characteristically level surface of such a geological structure. The river flows from Lake Traverse to Winnipeg. It is very sluggish and has a drop of less than 1 foot to the mile. The air-line distance from Wahpeton to Pembina is about 190 miles, and the altitudes show a difference of 192 feet. While the gentle slope of the valley is less than 1 foot to the mile on the average, the river meanders so widely as to travel over two times the air-line distance, and the average grade is but 0.46 of a foot per mile for much of its extent. Wahpeton is about 290 miles from Lake Winnipeg; the difference in altitude is about 236 feet. The general slope of the lake floor is toward the Red River in its middle, and is steeper, yet it is usually but 2 to 5 feet per mile.

Not only must we drain away the water falling on the flat valley, which must be by channel improvement and ditches, but we must arrest the rainfall in the higher counties to prevent its rushing down to gorge the channels of rivers in the lowlands. This, I take it, must be done by great impounding dams and reservoirs, constructed in the lakes and in gorges of rivers. These will hold the waters for from a few days to a few weeks—until the lowland streams have had time to drain adjacent farms, then the reservoirs may be voided at will. This early voiding of reservoirs will greatly reduce the damage claims, as much of the lands covered will in effect be irrigated for the season. Some towns will get water supply from them.

We recommend that reservoirs be placed at Red Lake and at the Ottertail Lakes in Minnesota, at Lake Traverse, at Lake Tewankon, and in the gorges of certain North Dakota rivers, as on the Sheyenne, 10 miles north of Valley City. Anything that is done for flood control will have to be done on both sides of the river.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It is proposed to so improve the river that it can carry off and drain this water off. That is the idea.

Mr. HARD. Exactly. That is one of the propositions. This is a tremendously big project. It is proposed to handle this in much the same way as is being done in the Miami Valley in Ohio. * * * I might cite you to an instance north of Grand Forks where by cutting through but three of the many meanders it will shorten the river 33½ miles.

Gentlemen, you will remember that this is a very recently formed river. I mean from a geological standpoint, during past times. The channel has not yet been cut deep enough, and it is absolutely unable to handle the floods which we get from two to three times in a 10-year period in this region, with an increasing frequency and intensity. The channel of this river for the most part is entirely too small to relieve this great agricultural country. The most important work that we have got to do in the way of improving and relieving this drainage situation is on the Minnesota lakes, on Lake Traverse, and in the North Dakota region on the Sheyenne, Wild Rice, Rembina, and other rivers [indicating on map].

Much of this money that has been spent in the past has been a waste. Much has been spent on local, ill-conceived ditches which have helped a few people, but have often aggravated the general conditions. Many ditches were too small, some even do not go in the right direction. The suit that has been brought for a million and a half dollars would emphasize that fact. * * *

This region was flooded after it had been farmed for a number of years. The water stayed so long that in one locality farmers got rafts and took their household goods and live stock out and got away the best way they could. Some of them have gone back since. The general condition in this whole district happened after it had been cropped for 25 or 30 years. As the result of this, the farmers lost millions of dollars during these three years.

There were prosperous farms in this locality [indicating on map]; the farmers had tree claims of well-grown trees, 25 to 50 feet high, over the valley. In going through the country on a train you could look out and see these tree claims and you would wonder who ever built substantial houses and barns and planted trees in a marsh land like that. Cat-tails had grown up all over this section, including parts of the three adjacent States. The land from just east of Hankinson, eastward, to Tintah, Minn., about 28 miles, was one continuous sheet of water. Much of this farm land remained almost continually under water for three crop seasons after having been farmed continuously for 25 to 35 years. These lands have since been plowed up and are going back into cultivation again. We have had a heavy snowfall this winter. With heavy spring rains or with rapid melting of the snow we are likely to have another disastrous flood. And here is another locality up here [indicating on map], in northwestern Minnesota, where last summer we had 9 inches of rainfall in 24 hours. This region was completely inundated and thousands of acres of crops became total loss.

Mr. BAER. Will you yield again? I want to emphasize that in our bill, the measure before the committee, that we want to eliminate these local projects and look for intelligent cooperation between all of the three States. A general plan by the Federal Government will take care of the proposition. This is not a proposition simply for North Dakota or South Dakota. This is a project for the beginning of cooperation, for a definite plan for the benefit of the whole valley. I wanted to get that before the committee.

* * * * * * *

Mr. HARD. Some of the early War Department surveys have been so made but our State surveys were made with the idea of controlling floods. Our survey was made with the idea of cooperating with the War Department, not on navigation but on drainage. There are two phases which I have not brought to your attention which I would like to present in this matter. Can we afford to wait years and years of time before something active is done in this region? We had in 1915 losses, as I had estimated it, in agriculture alone of $15,000,000; in 1916, when we had two floods, one in April and another in July, we had losses of over $20,000,000, and in 1917 the losses were at least $15,000,000.

Further, our greatest losses sustained are not those from the so-called "floods." Rather they come from the regular annual water-logging of soils that can not be drained in time in spring to permit the seed to be put in the ground on time. This late seeded grain is always stricken with rust, and yields reduced if not a total failure. Our State agricultural experts have computed this loss with me, and their late estimate places the rust loss in North Dakota at $275,000,000 in the last four years, a staggering figure; a value subtracted directly from the Nation's hard wheat production. While this figure relates to North Dakota, I would, considering the area involved and the superior productivity of the Red River Valley, bodily transfer this estimate of loss of $275,000,000 to it.

This land should be reclaimed in order to increase the farm acreage and thereby increase food production. I recently made a speech bringing out the facts that farm acreage is decreasing. In order to obtain facts directly from my constituency I sent out the following letter:

DEAR FRIEND: The unnecessary high cost of living, with its constant and unjustifiable increases, creates a problem in which you are intensely interested. The speech inclosed not only presents various phases of this question but offers what many able authorities believe to be a remedy.

After you have read it I shall appreciate hearing from you and receiving any suggestions which you may have to offer.

There are a number of valuable bulletins published by the Government on problems of agriculture. I shall be glad to send you bulletins on any subject in which you may be interested.

If at any time I can be of service to you, do not hesitate to write me.

Sincerely, yours,

J. M. BAER,
Member of Congress.

The Red River Valley of the North is the richest and deepest in soil deposit of any valley in the world, being comparable only to the fertility of the Nile. Like the Nile, the flood problem is of prime importance. Its available land forms a great natural garden 600 miles long and from 25 to 60 miles wide, producing an enormous quantity of grain each year. It has well been called the "breadbasket of the world." The wheat from the Northwest makes the highest grades of flour. The world needs this wheat, as it is absolutely essential to make standard flour. The famous Red River Valley potatoes are known throughout the land, and many other food products are raised in this fertile glacial lake bed. The most progressive, thrifty, and intelligent farmers of the Northwest live here, and the problem of properly protecting them and their homes from ever recurrent floods and saving millions of dollars in crop losses is one that can not be evaded or neglected.

SPEECH

OF

HON. STUART F. REED,

OF WEST VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 9, 1920.

The House had under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 327) terminating the state of war between the Imperial German Government and the United States.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the President came before Congress over a year ago and informed us that the war was ended.

As this old earth revolves daily on its axis we are told that the sun shines in benediction upon a world at peace, but, Mr. Speaker, amazing as it may appear, it never sets upon American soldiers still at war.

Think of it, my colleagues, we now have about 18,000 soldiers on the German frontier—several thousand more than England is keeping there—guarding territory and safeguarding indemnities in which we have declared we have no interest. It has been costing the people from $5,000,000 to $8,000,000 per month to keep our boys over there. Let us end the war and bring them home and use this money for the benefit of all our people, and particularly our soldiers who left good jobs to serve the Government at about $1 per day. End the war, my friends, by this resolution and bring our baggage and troops out of Europe. End the war, stop spending the people's money in foreign lands, and let us give our attention to the needs of the citizens of the United States, who are groaning under burdens caused by waste, extravagance, profiteering, and lack of sane business methods in the administrative branches of the Government.

You gentlemen on the other side of the aisle, speaking of your leader, used to say, "He kept us out of war," and some one has well said, "Is Congress going to let him keep us forever out of peace?" The gentlemen on the other side say we are embarrassing the President by this action. Let me remind them that failure officially to end the war is becoming decidedly embarrassing to the American people.

It may be that we are interfering with a beautiful dream of a man who aspires to be the head of a supergovernment of the world. The President, in his speech at Kansas City on the 6th day of last September, eulogizing the League of Nations, said, "That cause is greater than the Senate. It is greater than the Government." Mr. Speaker, I deny that any cause, aside from the decrees of the Infinite, is greater than the American people, their Government, and their welfare.

This great Nation wants peace. Millions of our people are crying for relief from chaotic and unwarranted economic conditions. Business hesitates, commerce is hampered, everybody seems to be shackled and manacled by war conditions.

But our Democratic colleagues say we can not have peace by this method because it is unconstitutional. It is pitiful, my friends, to see these able-bodied, big-brained colleagues of ours choking to death to-day on the Constitution.

During the war you Democrats took the Constitution of the fathers and twisted it and bent it and diluted it and stretched it and emasculated and practically nullified it. Under the stern necessities of war you starved the American people in summer, froze them in winter, and muzzled them in all seasons. When one protested he was told "the war powers were in operation" and the Constitution was in cold storage. [Applause.]

I recall one day when the great Speaker, Mr. CLARK, left the chair to admonish you. The ex-Speaker and I do not agree politically, but I frequently find myself contemplating him with admiration on account of the splendid Americanism and common sense that invests his big soul. Speaker CLARK on that day took the floor and said:

> I am not certain but that I ought to apologize; nevertheless I am going to read to you from the Constitution. My fellow Representatives, has the Constitution of the United States also become "a mere scrap of paper"? (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 55, p. 1120.)

No one questioned the power of Congress to declare war. We all know Congress did declare war, and in carrying out the program to save civilization we have spent over $30,000,000,000. The Nation has been burdened by war debts that will not be wiped out in two generations. The purchasing power of our dollar has been cut in half; more than a quarter of a million young men have been blinded and maimed and crippled for life; over 100,000 Americans "sleep the sleep that knows no waking."

America did her work well. It was our boys that turned the tide of war, shattered the Hindenburg line, and saved the nations of Europe from ruin and serfdom. Now, in God's name, why can not we get out of Europe and look after our affairs at home?

To-day, Mr. Speaker, they tell us that Congress, having under the Constitution "power to declare war," to "provide for the general welfare," even to remove the President from office, can not end this war. I am not a lawyer, but I can and do sometimes read the Constitution of the United States, and nowhere have I found where it prohibits Congress from ending a war.

The American Congress gets its commission from the greatest people of all time. As a legislative body it is looked upon as the highest lawmaking force in Christendom. If it can make a declaration of war making us participants in a conflict, deluging continents with blood, and overturning thrones and monarchies, who will seriously say that when all our people want peace this great Congress shall find itself helpless, hopeless, and Constitutionless? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Soldiers' Relief and Sales Tax.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN M. EVANS,

OF MONTANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 15, 1920.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, on September 30, 1919, I introduced a bill (H. R. 9628) providing for additional compensation to members of the military and naval forces who served in the war against Germany, and I hoped then that long before this some such relief measure for the ex-service men would have become a law.

I have listened attentively to the discussion from both sides of the House, and I am glad to note that most of us, at heart at least, favor a measure that will give the soldiers this much needed relief. At the outset I wish to state emphatically that I am for the enactment of such a measure without delay. I am for the fourfold proposition just as it was submitted by the American Legion.

Let us provide for those brave men and women who when the call came and our country was in danger did not stop to argue or reason why, but responded with a do or die, not delaying, not inquiring, but hope inspiring they left confident we would provide promptly for any exigencies that might arise at home. Let us then respond to our duty and provide recompense for their losses.

I can not help thinking of those critical and trying days following the vote of this House on April 6, 1917, which plunged us into the greatest war of all history and meant so much to the mothers, fathers, brothers, and sisters of those whom we knew would be called upon to bear the brunt of the burden, endure the trying hardships, face the fire and shell, suffer the agonies of wounds, hunger, thirst, and possibly death. I wondered then, as I have wondered many times since, how we could ever repay them or show by act or deed the appreciation this country then had for the acts of its brave heroes. I thought then, as I think now, that when we pledged our resources and the wealth of the Nation to bring the war to a speedy and successful conclusion, that it was in truth a pledge and debt that could never be fully paid. Fortunately for us we have had one of the most serious problems solved for us in the assistance and recommendation of the American Legion, that great organization of American soldiers which, while it does not include as yet all the ex-service men in its membership, is organized for the benefit of all and had worked inspiringly and without prejudice for the welfare of all ex-service men. They have made their investigations, discussed the question with a full knowledge of their own needs, and I am satisfied that their final recommendations to Congress are fair to the American people and will result in a great service to those concerned. For my part, I do not like the term "bonus." In the bill I proposed I provided that the act should be known as the "soldiers' victory payment act." I do not consider this a gratuity. It is victory pay to those who well earned it. At best it is only a part payment, for we can never fully repay them, and the rest must be by verbal commendation for their heroic acts. No money can repay those who carry the afflictions of war.

Let us admit that the condition of our Treasury does not at present warrant an unusual expenditure, but let us not forget that we still have the power of taxation, and that we are the richest Nation in the world. I know and we all know it is our duty not to abuse the authority vested in us as representatives of the people in appropriating lavishly or unnecessarily at any time, or particularly when our present financial burdens are all that our income will bear. We must not be forgetful of the fact that our people are now burdened with heavy taxation as never before, and that complaints of excessive taxes come to us from all classes, particularly among the poor. Had the men not gone willingly to war we would have had to offer them a bounty, as was done in the trying days of the Civil War; but now that the war is fought and won shall we desert them?

It is on the proposed method of raising the needed money that I urge a change in the proposed bill. As I said before, I would prefer that the means of raising the revenue be considered separately, and it was with that idea that I originally introduced a bill providing for soldiers' relief, House bill 13786, for increasing the surtax upon individual incomes.

SCOPE OF BILL.

Under that bill I propose an amendment to the revenue act of February 24, 1919, increasing surtaxes on individual incomes on a graduated scale of from 55 per cent on incomes in excess of $100,000 to 90 per cent of the excess where the net income amounts to $225,000 and not more than $250,000, and 100 per cent in excess of $250,000. I apply the same tax to corporations after an exemption of $3,000 is allowed to domestic corporations and an amount equal to 8 per cent of their capital invested. No income over $250,000 should be permitted while men, women, and children are suffering from insufficient food, shelter, and clothing due to existing high taxes and high cost of living brought about by profiteering overlords.

The Ways and Means Committee has proposed an iniquitous sales tax and has tied it up with the service men's relief measure in such a way that it can be neither amended nor a substitute provision inserted, and we must accept this unjust tax provision or vote against the whole bill. Unless this provision is changed—and I think with concerted action we can change it—irreparable hardship will be worked on our people. I believe no one has the interests of the ex-service men more at heart than I have, and I am anxious and willing to vote for any bill which I feel will grant even partial relief at this time. Yet I feel that this bill, because of its iniquitous tax provisions, does not afford the relief sought; in fact, it adds to the burdens of the very men it is intended to serve by reason of this vicious sales tax.

INIQUITOUS SALES TAX.

This means a tax on the commodities of barter and sale, including food, clothing, medicine, and other actual necessities to the ex-service man and his dependents, and is like putting a little money in his pocket with one hand and taking it out with the other. I contend, and it needs no argument to convince any of us except those who refuse to look around, that for every dollar collected in taxes this way it will cost the public two, three, five, or possibly ten dollars. In referring to the public, I mean the great masses, those who are not fortunate enough to have to pay excess-profits taxes. It means that an article that is taxed 1 cent will be increased in sale price at lest 5 cents, as you and I have seen in the past. Who gets this difference and who pays it? We all know that the Government gets but a fraction of the increase paid by the public. Who does get it, I ask? The lurking profiteer, for what else may we call him? It is he who takes advantage of the slightest excuse to raise prices and then maintain and collect them so long as the innocent and needy public has money to pay. This procedure has been going on for a long time now, and we thought there would be some check to stem the tide of advancing prices; but it still goes unthrottled. They corner the sugar, store the potatoes until they get their price, and gamble with our flour while many suffer with hunger. How shall we stop it, and when?

THE REMEDY.

My remedy is to limit incomes and thus take away the incentive to profiteer for the purpose of amassing colossal fortunes. Ah, some one says such a thing was never done—it is revolutionary, it is unconstitutional, it is un-American. I deny it. We regulate the income of railroads by fixing their rates, we regulate the income of gas companies, light and power companies.

We say to the banker, money lender, and pawnbroker, you may charge a certain rate for your money and no more. Certainly we can do directly what we may do indirectly. Except in extreme cases I do not believe in price fixing, but unless we remedy the present conditions, unless we curb the soaring prices of necessities in life, a system of price fixing must inevitably come. I believe the same end can be reached by fixing a point beyond which incomes can not go. We will thus lower prices and at the same time raise large revenues for the Government.

Look at the list of new millionaires published from time to time, who have become rich during the war and since. While the soldier boys were fighting to make the world safe for people to live in it was found on their return that certain large interests during their absence had established their power and influence to such an extent that it seems almost impossible to curb them. They profiteered on the families at home, increasing the prices from day to day while the Government was busy with urgent war matters. Patriotically, in name at least, they affiliated with 100 per cent American societies, contributed to the Red Cross, bought bonds, and so forth, and then went about gouging from the public what they needed for this and enough more to amass fortunes unbelievable except for the indisputable records of our Government here in Washington. These are the persons I contend should return some of their unconscionable gains in the form of taxes, for it is apparent some one must pay the Government's bills.

I am not blaming all those who made big profits during the war or those who got rich on large production solely. We owe much to them for their untiring efforts and ability. Nor do I believe in penalizing those who were industrious during our great period of war activities. But I do contend that you can not take money from those who do not have it, and who are already struggling to keep up with conditions. We must not levy taxes on a large part of the people of the United States beyond the degree they can bear, and it is no less to our discredit to attempt to justify the present plan by saying it is for a worthy cause.

WHAT MONTANA EXPERIENCED.

Well do I know that when the call to arms came the boys in my State dropped their plows, left their fields of grain, quit their jobs, turned their cattle and stock out on the range, sacrificed their belongings, left their parents or families oftentimes in destitute conditions without funds or help to manage their farms, left with the whole future an uncertainty—some of them now beneath the sod in France. And as to those who did return, those whom this bill is intended to relieve, what did they find? Not only had they in many cases sacrificed their worldly possessions on their departure, but they also lost pay and income they would have received had they remained and worked at home. They nurtured, however, visions of good old United States of America as she was when they left her behind; they thought of the reunions with their loved ones; of completing their college courses; or restocking their farms and of carrying out ambitions. Sad to say, they were keenly disappointed on their return.

They found their families deeply in debt, everything sky-high in price, no suit of civilian clothes to fit them, and face to face with poverty. Compelled to start anew.

These are the 4,000,000 men, the backbone of our Nation today, this bill is intended to relieve; and these and their families are the ones upon whom this tax should not fall.

I say again you can not and shall not with my vote saddle the burden upon those who have already paid more than their share. The solution is obvious. Put the burden of such further taxation upon those who can bear it. Put it upon luxuries if you will, put it on imports, put it on stock manipulations, put it on the idle and overrich or, as proposed by me and others on this floor, put it where it belongs—on excess profits and particularly war profits. Unless you want to invite bolshevism, radicalism, and even anarchy in this country, and bring disaster to ourselves, do not put it, as in the proposed bill, on necessaries of life. If we do those who are responsible for such base misuse of power will rue the day. I care not whether you be Democrat or Republican, your duty is the same. This is not a partisan issue. The time is coming and it will not be long when these people who are affected by this legislation will demand an accounting; it will be a counting out, for the time has passed when those sitting in the legislative halls may ignore or misconstrue public sentiment, and cater to the whims and fancies of big business, while the laboring masses are "bound hand and foot," struggling to make even a bare living.

The Supreme Court has recently decided that under the law as it now stands we can not tax stock dividends. Let us amend the law. It is incomprehensible that this Congress shall acquiesce in the doctrine that a corporation can evade its just taxes by paying its stockholders in stock instead of cash. There is no wrong for which the law can not find a remedy. Let us find that remedy.

Those stock dividends represent profits or investments made out of profits after normal dividends had already been paid to the stockholders. Statistics have been given by other speakers that makes a recital of them unnecessary but all one needs to do is to glance over the financial page of a city newspaper to discover what enormous and unconscionable profits have been made during the war, and these could only have been made by charging more than was warranted. The people paid because they had to pay. If they needed an article they had to pay the price, even if it were double what it should have been. Limit these profits and you will soon take away the incentive to make them and the public will be able to buy at a lower cost. Take away these excessive profits and the incentive to accumulate them will be gone. When there are no longer excessive profits the cost of living will drop, the cost of Government operations will fall, and we will not need these additional taxes.

Chief Justice Marshall, great jurist of the Supreme Court of the United States, in 1819, said:

The power to tax involves the power to destroy.

It is a power nevertheless which in some form or other every Government must possess, and it is also one which must be exercised with care. It was the imposition of an unjust and excessive tax that cost England her American colonies and created for you and me a free country. In that case the American colonists had reached the limit of their endurance, just as it is believed many of the people of this country have reached the limit of their patience and endurance. The power to tax is also a great economic weapon that is often used to restrain undesirable forms of business or may even be used to wipe out any form of property. It may and should be used to wipe out profiteering and no better nor opportune moment has been reached in this country to deal a body blow to profiteering than is afforded in this case if the proper action shall be taken. If, as I have already indicated, taxes are increased upon excess profits above a fair and reasonable return on the invested capital, it will afford millions in revenue to meet demands upon our Treasury and serve a useful purpose by destroying profiteering, with the consequent reduction in the cost of living. The sales tax will not only work a hardship upon the great mass of the public and may result in further strikes, dissatisfaction, and other possible disturbances by the people themselves but will result inevitably in increasing the excess profits of the rich. To meet this issue there is an effective remedy—increase taxes on excess profits, and at the same time reduce the temptation to profiteer, with the result attained of raising the needed money and lowering the high cost of living. Capital can not complain, as a fair return on its investment is not denied, and individually they are on a par with every other individual. By the sales-tax provision, however, a man with a large family is penalized because he must of necessity buy in proportion more of the necessities of life, although less able to do so. This proposed sales tax is an iniquitous and dangerous proposal and should be rejected.

As heretofore stated, I am for the bonus legislation. I am for the fourfold proposition just as it was submitted by the American Legion.

Mr. Speaker, the day for action is here. The doctrine of "the public be damned" has passed. Statesmen must explore new fields and cut roads into new forests. The war has changed the viewpoint of our people, and this Congress must meet those changing views or the seats you and I temporarily occupy will be filled by others sufficiently discerning to realize that old conditions and old theories are passing away.

Soldiers' Bonus.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROSCOE C. McCULLOCH,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 22, 1920.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Mr. Speaker, I favor a bonus for American soldiers who served in the World War, and I shall vote for the pending bill. When the war-risk insurance bill was under consideration last fall I contended, while speaking in favor of certain amendments I offered to that bill, that the soldiers should receive an adjustment of their compensation.

The American soldier not only made the supreme sacrifice, left his business, and the opportunities for personal advancement he had in prospect and that the emergency offered, but he paid his own way largely. The soldier knows what few people realize, and that is that after he had taken care of the demands that were made upon him he had very little left out of the $30 a month pay. The allotments for his dependents were taken out of his pay, his war-risk insurance premiums were taken out of his pay, so that at the end of the month the average soldier did not have much left.

The absolute necessity for reducing appropriations and strict national economy is apparent to everybody, but we should not begin on the American soldier, because we have been very lavish and very liberal in making appropriations for the purpose of taking care of all other interests. We appropriated millions of dollars to validate incomplete contracts. We appropriated millions of dollars for the relief of peoples in foreign countries. There seemed to be no limit to the demands and no hesitancy in responding to the demands for lavish appropriations. Everybody seemed to be protected in a material way who had anything to do with the war except the American soldier, and I am in favor of adjusting his compensation by providing a bonus, and I think it should be done without quibbling and without delay. We spent billions of dollars uselessly for which the Government received no adequate return. The floodgates were thrown down and a golden stream was allowed to flow away. Members of Congress were called upon to support bills making these lavish appropriations under the lash of the Executive whip and in the name of patriotism. Now, we have a chance to do something for the real patriots who served and suffered and bore the brunt of the war.

The provisions of this bill may help to give thousands of soldiers a start. Some may not need it or want it, but all are entitled to it, and I trust that the bill will pass and become a law without delay.

"The Laborer Is Worthy of His Hire."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRANK CROWTHER,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 12, 1920.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, we have been discussing the necessity of lightships for the safety of our merchant marine, our passenger steamers, and our Navy. They are the beacon lights that flash warning to the commanders of our sea craft to steer their course aright, and what a message of comfort they send across the waters to commander and crew, and passengers, as the watch cries "All's well." But, Mr. Speaker, while the great trans-Atlantic liners are plowing the high seas, carrying the millions of letters that go to foreign lands, I want you to think for a moment of the army of 280,000 men in the Postal Service of the United States who work as no other Government employees work—day in and day out, rain or shine, in winter's zero clime and in the intolerable heat of summer, and for wages scarcely equal to those paid to day laborers.

The Government should exemplify the highest ideals of an employer and thereby set a standard for private employers of labor to live up to. Thousands of our large manufacturing plants are to-day, through their welfare departments, providing for recreation and education, medical services, and dental services. All the recreation a postal employee gets is in the performance of his duty, and if he is a letter carrier he does not have to attend a gymnasium to keep in shape. Carrying a 60-pound pack 5 miles four times a day leaves his conscience untroubled as to having earned his meager salary. Uncle Sam expects his postal employees to be high-grade men, physically strong, keen of intellect, affable, and courteous.

The clerks must understand many of the methods used in banking, insurance, and commercial business. Postal savings, war stamps, payment of insurance and registry, money orders, postal notes, and parcel-post detail, and the incidental book and record keeping have increased so tremendously that the post office in a moderate-sized city has become a combined bank and express company. And to those who are responsible for the performance of these exacting duties we grant a scant living wage.

The rural carriers have no easy task, for good roads are the exception and not the rule on thousands of rural routes; some are so bad that it is impossible to use a motor car for delivery, and the horse-drawn vehicle is, of course, resultant in a great loss of time.

The complaint regarding the changes in rural-delivery routes has been universal all over the country, and scant attention or courtesy has been shown by the present post-office administration to those living in rural communities as regards their postal facilities.

Railway mail clerks, after months of intensive training, possessing the skill of a handwriting expert, a memory that is 100 per cent perfect, and a knowledge of the geography of the country that would put a college professor to shame, work for wages that were paid to water boys at some of the shipyards during the war.

The entire business life of the Nation depends upon these postal employees and their efficient performance of duty. How eagerly Mr. Business Man looks for his mail and dispatches his acceptance of orders contained therein; the old soldier for the letter that contains his pension; and the mother waiting for the carrier who brings tidings of her boy or girl gone far away from the homestead; and friends, long separated by the width of the continent, talk to one another of the old days because of the untiring, faithful service of Uncle Sam's postal employees.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I trust we may soon have the report of the commission that has the matter of salaries for postal employees under consideration, that we may without delay provide generously for these men who give real service, and who have never quit, even when patience ceased to be a virtue.

When Beau Brummel's valet informed him of his insistent creditors, his master directed him to "promise them something." That is what Uncle Sam has been doing with the postal employees. Let this Congress as speedily as possible reward loyal service with decent compensation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ALLEN T. TREADWAY.
OF MASSACHUSETTS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, May 20, 1920,

On the bill (H. R. 13558) for the purpose of improving the facilities and service of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and of further amending and modifying the war-risk insurance act, as amended.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to go on record as most heartily in favor of this bill, H. R. 13558, the so-called Wason bill, which seeks to further improve the service of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and to offer further aid and assistance to veterans of the World War.

I am particularly interested in section 3, which provides that a new section shall be added to article 2 of the war-risk insurance act as amended to be known as section 212 and makes the payment of Government allowance possible in cases where dependent families did not receive this money through no fault of their own but because checkage was not made against a soldier's pay.

This amendment was previously in the original Sweet bill as it passed the House last fall, but was stricken out for some unknown reason in the Senate. The subject was very thoroughly discussed during the hearings on the Sweet bill and in the House when that measure was under discussion. Its merit seemed to be unquestioned during the debate in the House. It had the approval of Secretary Glass and was again favorably acted upon by the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce as is shown by its incorporation in the Wason bill as reported here.

I have had several cases from my own district wherein the enactment of this section would be of great benefit and I have had similar cases brought to my attention by other Members in other sections of the country. The War Risk Bureau has informed me that there were a number of cases depending on the action of Congress on this question.

The most striking case that I have in mind is that of a lady in my district who is the mother of four children. Her husband entered the Army early in the war and left her without support. He failed to make out a compulsory allotment and allowance application in his wife's behalf, serving throughout the war, about 17 months, without any deduction being made from his pay, or any payments going to his wife and family. Several sets of applications from the wife were presented through the Red Cross and through my office and each time the Bureau of War Risk Insurance insisted that steps had been taken to obtain the checkage of the man's pay. Through negligence somewhere, this checkage was never secured and the wife and children would have been without any support had it not been for the Red Cross Home Service Section and local organizations.

My original bill would have made it possible to pay both the allotment of the man's pay and the Government allowance, but the committee, believing a duplication of pay would thus be incurred, simply recommended the allowance settlement.

In the case which I have mentioned above, had the War Risk Bureau secured the checkage of the soldier's pay in order to make the award, the wife would have received for the time he was in the service $269 allotment and $804.67 allowance, or a total of $1,073.67. Under the terms of section 212 of H. R. 13558, this woman should receive approximately $804.67, which she should have previously been paid.

This section and the entire bill is another evidence of the intention of Congress to deal liberally with dependents of veterans.

The Mexican Problem.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLIFTON N. McARTHUR,
OF OREGON,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, April 28, 1920.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, the following is a copy of an address, entitled "The Mexican Problem," delivered by me at the weekly luncheon of the Advertising Club of Baltimore on April 21, 1920:

"Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it has become quite apparent to the thoughtful student of current history that the Mexican problem is no longer one that concerns our border welfare, the investments of Americans in the country beyond the Rio Grande, or the kidnaping or murder of diplomatic agents or business visitors from the United States. It has outgrown all these and has become a national problem, a menace to the future welfare of our country and to the civilization of the Western Hemisphere.

"I shall not undertake to enumerate the outrages which have been perpetrated on American citizens in Mexico during the past nine years, for they are too numerous and, in many instances, too revolting to be mentioned here. These intolerable conditions have continually grown worse until they have reached the apex of shameful disregard of every American conception of justice, decency, and international obligations. The Mexican authorities, during this long train of outrages and depredations, have looked on complacently; in fact, have in many instances expressed their approval of the riot of robbery, rapine, and murder. Furthermore, the Mexican Government has done no end of discourteous, contemptuous, and offensive things toward our Government and our people.

"The result of all this has been an increased estrangement and an increased hatred against the people and Government of the United States. To-day we are confronted with no end of reports showing that Americans are being murdered or captured and held for ransom, and that American-owned properties are being confiscated or destroyed. Mexican bandits continue their mad orgie of crime against American citizens and their property even on our side of the international boundary line. The doctrine of hate of America and her people is not confined to any group or faction in Mexico; it prevails on all sides; it is inculcated in the youth of the country, even the little children are taught to despise us and curse our flag.

"Carranza's régime was recognized by the United States on October 9, 1915, as the de facto, and nearly three years later as the de jure government of Mexico. Recognition as the de jure government was nothing less than official notification to the world that Carranza's administration was legally constituted and that it possessed all the powers of a sovereign and independent nation. Having been the recognized authority for more than four years, the Carranza administration may be deemed to have had sufficient time to demonstrate its fitness to govern, notwithstanding the fact that the entire country has not acknowledged Carranza's authority. A résumé of the conditions of the past four years and a careful survey of the present situation leads us to the inevitable conclusion that Mexico to-day, under the rule of Carranza, is in her normal condition of turmoil. Graft, bribery, debauchery, drunkenness, gambling, and prostitution flourish unrestrained. Justice has been dragged on the ground or sold in the open forum. There is no public credit and a monetary menace is imminent. Business is unstable, crops devastated, property destroyed, and elections manipulated by those in authority. The whole land groans under a reign of terror and brigandage rivaling in cruelty and wantonness the German invasion of Belgium. When word came out four years ago that 18 nuns had died of abuse received at the hands of bandits and 200 had barely recovered, the world shuddered and hushed the facts; but how many people know that in whole villages in Mexico not a girl or woman had escaped these ruffian butcheries as late as last June? Hundreds of thousands of children have been orphaned by nine years of revolution and the poverty in what should be a land of plenty is appalling. The country is deep in the power of a greater evil than the peonage which the ever-present revolution has sought to destroy; she appears to suffer from a peculiar combination of militarism and banditry that is eating out the very vitals of a nation second to none in the magnitude of her undeveloped resources.

"Another fact which we should keep in mind is that Carranza was and is rabidly pro-German, the willing friend and tool of the Hohenzollerns. From the beginning of his régime and down to August 21, 1919, no less than 383 Americans were murdered on Mexican soil, but no record of any form of punishment meted out to the murderers. On the other hand, there is no record of any German having been killed in Mexico in Carranza's time. It was German trickery that led Mexico astray and increased the hatred of the Mexicans for America. It was German money that put in circulation clever propaganda to the effect that the United States wishes to seize Mexico, exploit her resources, and enslave her people.

"It is quite obvious that Germany wished to stir up a war between the United States and Mexico to the end that the United States would not be able to enter the War in Europe or play a conspicuous part therein. The Germans succeeded in fanning the flame of hatred toward Americans in the hearts of the Mexican people, but they were unsuccessful in provoking a war—another of the tragic blunders of German diplomacy. In addition to this, Mexico is a hotbed of Bolshevism. It has been well said that 'the Utopia alike of Trotski and Carranza is a despotism of force under the guise of a great popular reform.' Carranza for the past four years has confiscated the earnings of foreign-owned railroads with immunity and impunity. These and many other acts brand him as a creature utterly devoid of a decent conception of public morality—in truth, a Bolshevist. Only a few months ago a United States Senator presented to the President the surprising but unmistakable evidence that Carranza's official representatives in the United States were working in collusion with radicals here, seeking to encourage strikes and industrial disorders and spreading insidious Bolsheviki propaganda.

"Prior to our declaration of war on Germany, the forces of that Government had taken the lives of about 130 Americans who were exercising their rights as neutrals on the high seas. The repeated violation of these rights led to our declaration of war, into which our Government put thousands of lives and billions of treasure; yet the murder of 383 Americans in Mexico has not aroused us to action. These murdered Americans were within their rights under the rules of international law and had every right to expect protection from their Government. Let our complacent pacifists and our peace-at-any-price element consider these facts and figures and advise us whether or not we should suffer further violations of American rights by the Mexicans.

"The people of the United States can not escape their responsibility for Carranza and his régime, for it was recognition by our Government that placed him in power. He has repaid us by killing our people, ravishing our women, and destroying our property. It is now necessary for our Government to maintain an army of 35,000 men along the Mexican border—four times as many men as were in the army of Gen. Scott when he captured Mexico City; three times as many as accompanied Gen. Pershing when he marched 400 miles into Mexican territory; and thirty-five thousand times as many as are needed to patrol our Canadian border.

"The real menace of Mexico, however, lies in the future. With one revolution succeeding another, and with an increasing hatred for America and her people, Mexico presents a most inviting field for exploitation by some foreign power unfriendly to the United States. Aye, more than this, Mexico stands forth as an inviting ally to any foreign power with which we may engage in war. With her excellent harbors, her secure mountain defenses, and our exposed border line of 2,500 miles, Mexico holds out great possibilities to any army that would seek to invade the United States, and at the same time offers secure naval bases for the battleships of foreign nations that would cut us off from the Panama Canal. Mexico herself is not to be feared, but Mexico as an ally is a problem of serious concern. Furthermore, Mexico is rich in oil, in minerals, and other resources which are so essential to the successful conduct of a war. Will anyone dispute the assertion that Mexico, with the mind of her people fanned to a white heat against our country and our people, and with her resources for the carrying on of a war, stands forth to-day as a possible—yes, a probable—ally to any nation that would make war on us? I pause for reply.

"Another consideration that we can not afford to overlook is Mexico's geographical position with relation to South and Central America and to the Panama Canal. Mexico is the keystone of the arch of the great chain of Republics extending from Cape Horn to the Rio Grande—broken only by the Canal Zone. Any foreign power with which we may be at war in the future and which may adopt Mexico as an ally would not only be able to land a great army in Mexico and attempt an invasion of the United States, but would be almost certain to attempt a land attack on the Panama Canal in the hope of seizing or destroying it, thereby cutting off our naval communication between the Atlantic and Pacific and working irreparable injury to our trade with the Republics on the Pacific slope of South America. The only line of railroads that all but connects the two great continents of North and South America runs through Mexico for many hundreds of miles, and would prove of immense military value to the enemy in such a war. With Mexico as an ally and friend, such an undertaking is not without the realm of possibilities for some foreign foe at war with the United States.

"The possibilities which I have just discussed should be seriously considered by the people of the United States. We have long prided ourself in the strength which naturally attaches itself to geographical isolation—great distances and broad oceans separating us from the other great powers of the earth. But are we isolated when we are unprotected by any kind of a geographical barrier from a country which would undoubtedly ally itself with any foreign power which may see fit to declare war upon us? A chain is no stronger than its weakest link, and the weak link in our isolation lies along the Rio Grande and from El Paso to the Pacific, even though the country beyond is in the throes of revolution and in the grip of bandits. The possibilities of foreign invasion of the United States by way of Mexico also brings the Monroe doctrine into the foreground. If any foreign power should see fit to ally herself with Mexico for the purpose of invading the United States, would not that power challenge our cherished policy of a century of statesmanship? Where would the Monroe doctrine be with a foreign power landing her troops on Mexican soil and anchoring her battleships in Mexican harbors? What would prevent such a power from setting up a government of its own in Mexico?

"What, then, are we to do about the Mexican problem? Are we to sit idly and see the present carnival of crime against our people continue? Are we to wink at murder, rapine, and insult to our flag? I am not here to condemn any man or set of men, or to complain about our sins of omission. I am not half so much concerned about yesterday as I am about to-morrow. I have not and am not advocating an armed intervention unless all peaceful means fail. I do contend that we as a nation do our full duty in mercy, in righteousness, in justice, and in honor. We owe it to ourselves and to civilization to compel Mexico to cease murdering our citizens, to stop destroying our property, to quit insulting our flag. We sent an army across the sea and joined our allies in a great war because our rights as a neutral Nation had been violated, and yet we permit the Mexicans to violate the rights of our people and to breed in their own breasts a hatred for all things American.

"The first thing for us to do is to think straight about the Mexican question. It is our duty to consider all the facts and to render sane judgment. I regret to note an insidious propaganda which imputes sinister motives to all Americans who would undertake a solution of the Mexican problem. The authors of this propaganda are apparently eager to seize most any kind of an excuse for not accepting an uncomfortable truth.

"Americans who are shot down by Mexican bandits are classified as 'gamblers' and 'adventurers' by these propagandists, and we often hear the hackneyed excuse of 'Wall Street' and 'powerful financial interests'—time-worn billingsgate of the coward and demagogue. As a matter of fact, thousands of Americans of all classes and conditions and from every State in the Union own property in Mexico, or rather, did own it before the present state of revolution in that country, and those unfortunate Americans who have lost their lives there can hardly be classified as Wall Street operators. Let us put aside such puerile talk and consider facts, and let us remember that it is the function of government to unite its people for mutual defense, for the promotion of the general welfare, for the establishment of justice, for the safety and security of life, liberty, and property. These are the fundamentals of government, and when they are discarded or ignored government fails to function. Let us, therefore, demand of Mexico that our citizens hereafter be unmolested in their persons and property and in the pursuit of their lawful business beyond the Rio Grande. Let us see to it that all American rights are vindicated. Let us give Mexico to understand that we mean business, and that she must respect our rights under international law. Let us assure her that we want none of her territory, want nothing but the proper respect and recognition that is rightly due us.

"Pacifists and cowards will rise up and demand that we keep out of war with Mexico. No right-thinking person wishes to engage in war if it can be honorably avoided, but no one but a coward and a traitor wishes to remain supinely in a state of peace when our rights as a Nation are being ruthlessly violated. The pacifist asks how many of our boys we would sacrifice in order to protect American property in Mexico. That question is thoroughly dishonest. No American with a vestige of patriotism wishes to sacrifice any American lives, but when Americans in pursuit of lawful business are shot down like dogs, when American women are ravished in public places, when the American flag is spat upon and tied to the tails of asses, it is time for America to think and think seriously. No lives were sacrificed in order to maintain a due recognition of American rights in Mexico from 1880 to 1910, and none need be sacrificed now. We must, as we did then, adopt a firm policy toward Mexico, and make her understand that we are in earnest; that we are not looking for a fight, but that we are not running away from one, and that we have no fear of the outcome. Acceptance of such a pronunciamento would not only mean a new attitude toward America, but would do much toward ridding Mexico of the menace which is now destroying her. Some force, either moral or physical, must guarantee to our citizens in Mexico the same protection of life, liberty, and property as we extend to Mexicans and other peaceable foreigners here.

"We owe it to ourselves and to humanity to insist upon a new order of things in Mexico. We owe it to the present generation, but even more than this we owe it to the future, to see to it that our neighboring country becomes a peaceful ally and friend, not a hostile cobelligerent of some future world power that would destroy us. Let us, then, face the issue squarely and do our duty promptly and without evasion, for no people can maintain their own self-respect or the good opinion of mankind when they fail in the discharge of their plain and positive duty.

"Let us insist upon a prompt recognition of American rights by the Mexican Government, and let that Government assume and maintain responsibility for the acts of its people throughout the entire country. Let us have no more pleas of impotency to deal with bandits and outlaws, but let us insist that order be established and that American citizens be protected in the pursuit of their lawful business and in the enjoyment of their lawful rights. As a self-respecting Nation, we can do no less."
